Let us make it a practical question to-night. What is written on our property? Is there an inscription, "Holy unto the Lord"?—Then, fathers and mothers, will you allow the Lord to move your sons and daughters? Let us have a practical and literal separation. Parents, are you content to be separated from your children, or is it your highest idea to enjoy each other as long as possible? That may be very nice, but I know something far better and far higher. I lately heard of a family where three of the sons are going out to mission work. That is what we must have; and let the fathers and mothers rejoice if the Lord moves the hearts of their sons and daughters to go. It is the very highest privilege to have our children serving the Lord. May the Lord move the hearts of the fathers and mothers, and the sons and daughters to consecrate themselves and all they have to Himself, that He may see here a people ready to go, ready to be used, ready to serve the Master, and to serve Him cheerfully! Yes, and to remain in his service. Some time ago a man whom the Lord had greatly blessed in his service came to me and said: "I am rather troubled; I am invited to become a partner in a business." I was somewhat astonished; for, since I left business, I never was troubled to go back to it again, and it is a strange thing to me how a man who is in the Lord's service will go back to the service of the world—to those things which the rust can eat up. If we are serving the Lord, let us remain in his service.

We read in one of our texts this evening that separation may be defiled. Yes, it may. That is a very serious thing. We who have served the Lord for some time must have seen more than one whose separation was defiled. Is there nobody in this hall this evening to whom the Lord must say, "Thy separation has been defiled; thou art sitting before Me with an unclean heart, and I must have thee again separated. Come out from among them." What a disaster for the Church—defilement of separation! If there is anybody here who has defiled his separation, let him return to the Lord. He calls thee just as He called David. Others will soon find out that thy separation is defiled, that the union of the Lord with thy heart is broken. But the Lord calls you to return. He has pardon and full cleansing for even you, and He will renew you again. You may conceal it before your fellow-men for some time, but before the Lord you cannot conceal it, and even men will soon find it out. They must see it, because you cannot draw near any longer to the mercyseat. There is between you and the Lord something separating you from Him. It is your defilement, your sin.

And what is it—not to be able to draw near to the throne of grace? Oh, what a consequence of failure in separation or of defilement! What is the power of the Church, if the Church is no more a praying Church? Her power is gone—her power for the service of the Lord. And how clear is our Lord in regard to that. We are told in the Epistle to the Hebrews to come to the throne of grace "with true hearts, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." How can we draw near, if we have a bad conscience—if we are unclean? And our Lord tells his disciples, in John xv., "If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you;" that is, if you are and remain a separated people. Yes, our Lord gave that wonderful promise of answer to prayer in his name to a separated people; to a Pentecost people. Our Lord's disciples could not pray in the name of Jesus before Pentecost. "On that day ye will pray, and ye will receive what ye pray for." Why? Because ye are a united people unto Me by the Holy Ghost; and that applies to us in our time just as it did to the disciples in their time. We must be a praying Church, praying in the name of Jesus. Our position must be in Jesus and in Him alone, and his Spirit must fill our hearts. And if the Lord is in us, if Jesus dwells in us, we can pray in his name, we can pray according to his mind.

I thank God that wherever I go I see people hungering and longing after the baptism of the Holy Ghost. It is a wonderful thing that wherever we go, those of us who travel much, we find the Lord's footsteps preparing his people to return to his promises, and to lay again hold on Him. How long have people made a dogma of their poverty! Because they were unbelieving, because they were not separated, they have thought, "Well, the promises cannot be fulfilled in our time. They were for other times, for older times," and so they have made a dogma of their own miserable state, of their own poverty. Oh that the Lord might separate all from their dogma; that He might bring us back to his Holy Word; that He might make us willing to lie down at his feet, to bow before Him, and to be taught again by Him who can alone teach us and guide us into all truth by his Holy Spirit.

A people who are separated unto God will experience his keeping; those who are not separated have no claim to be kept by the Lord. Do we not see many such? The Lord cannot keep them; they go astray, because they have not been separated—I mean Scripturally separated. There is a variety of separation—separation according to man's notions. We soon find out what is God's separation and man's separation. God's separation unites all people; God's separation means union—the union of the Holy Ghost—and man's separation deepens that separation. Oh that God may separate us from separation, and make these meetings union meetings. What we want is union—union with the Lord, union with all those that are members of the body of Christ. Look at that long line marching quickly towards Rome. Look at the efforts that are being made in Germany to bring people back again out of the light of the Gospel into the old mist. We must be a Church united—a Church filled with love, that people may see it is good to dwell amongst us and to have union with us—that people may see that we are a Church representing the Lord here on earth. Can people who are not separated from sin represent Jesus here on earth? I do not know how. If we would be his representatives here below, Jesus Himself must dwell in us, and no other one. His light must shine forth for us; his love must fill our hearts.

I heard this morning a short address to children, and our Lord was put before them as their pattern. Yes, He is our pattern, too—our only pattern. If we would follow that pattern, we must live Christ before the world. In our homes, in our business, in everyday life, the world must see Christ in our words and actions. The world cannot see Christ, if Christ is not dwelling in us. Oh, this high calling! to live in the world as He was in the world. "They are not of the world, as I am not of the world"—like Paul, who was crucified to the world, and the world to him. There is no other way to be separated from the world, and to prepare to become a representative of Christ, than to go to Calvary, and be content to be crucified with Jesus. We have men who are separated from very much, but they have not separated on Calvary, and there is a mixture of flesh and spirit, sometimes very subtle. It takes time to find it out, but there is a mixture, and we stand before the question, Who will be master—the devil or the Lord? What will come out—disaster, or glory for the Lord? Separation on Calvary by the Spirit of God.

And then, representing Christ, the light will shine pure. Why must it shine so pure? What is our calling? Our calling is to be the Bride of the Lamb. Take a Church not separated—what will be the consequence? She cannot be prepared for the coming of our Lord, she cannot be the Bride of our Lord. Only a separated Church will be that—spotless and without blemish, like the Lord Himself. Oh, what a calling! What do we read in Hosea ii. 19? "I will betroth thee unto Me." How? "In righteousness and judgment." That is the first. And then "in lovingkindness, and in mercies." There is first separation, and then union—union with Christ. And if we are called to serve the Lord, let us never forget that we have first to look to ourselves. As the Apostle calls on Timothy first to look to himself, so have we to look to ourselves—to abide in the Lord, to remain in close and entire dependence on Him, with the constant prayer, "Lord, prepare me for thy coming." And if He will prepare thee, do not forget one thing. Many people forget it. They are longing after oil, after the ointment of the Holy Spirit, but they forget one passage of Scripture—"Know ye not that your bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost?" Some people wish to be consecrated to the Lord; they wish to be prepared for his coming; but they have not yet given their bodies to the Lord. Some people make questions in regard to their bodies; but I say, Here, brother, here, sister, if thou hast given thy body to the Lord, and that body is belonging to Jesus, thou knowest thy body is a temple of the Holy Ghost, and the Apostle tells us that we must be sanctified through and through, in spirit, soul, and body. Many questions will be answered soon. The Lord make us his people, and sanctify us, spirit, soul, and body! He may move you now, dear friends. We can come to the point this evening. We have heard very much of failure in separation. Well, I think, this evening, let it come to separation. Let the Lord move you, and if there are fetters, his hand—the hand of Jesus—is strong enough to break them, and to make you free. Come with all your fetters, with all your difficulties, with all your obstacles. The Lord is greater than they are, all put together, and let Him see a people separated unto Himself in this hall.

Consequences to the World.

Rev. E. W. MOORE.

Turn with me to 2 Cor. iii. 3: "Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." There are many emblems, many analogies, many figures, which set forth the relationship of the Church to the world in Scripture; but I do not know that there is anywhere presented to us a more suggestive or striking image than that which is given us in this verse, in which the Church of Christ is represented as a letter from God, written within and without by the finger of God, and sent forth into the world to carry his message, the transcript of his mind before men. If we had time it would be interesting to notice how this suggestion was made, or arose, in the Apostle's mind. Enough for us to come to the emblem which he employs.

Here you have the Church of Christ described as a living epistle. When we come to examine this letter we notice three things about it. First, the writer, then the materials, then the writing itself, then we will say a word or two about what is necessary to make it effectual in its errand or mission in the world. First of all there is the writer. The Apostle says that the Writer and the Author of the epistle is Christ. Whether it was upon the tables of stone, or whether it is upon the fleshy tables of the heart, the only author of this Divine epistle is Christ. We always must remember that in these Conferences, when we are seeking to receive and to communicate to one another. There is a verse that came to my mind, as I was meditating upon this, "Enter into the rock and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the Lord and for the glory of his majesty." If He is to write anything upon your heart and mine through this Conference He must have the glory; it will be his work from beginning to end.

Observe next the writing materials. When we sit down to write a letter, we need pen, ink, and paper, and with deep reverence we may say according to this verse—so does the Almighty Author. First, the pen. The Apostle here describes himself as the pen. He says, "ministered by us." The pen is a feeble instrument. Made oftentimes out of a goose-quill, weak and feeble. Are you weak enough to be God's pen? He does not need your strength, He needs your weakness. Methinks sometimes our strength, whether it be strength of brain or strength of experience, stands in God's way. He wants our nothingness: he wants our emptiness. He wants a channel empty and clean, down which the life of power can flow. The pen is intended to convey the thoughts of the writer—not its own thoughts. May God make us ministers and servants, that we may carry his mind to the people. Then the pen is a very pliable instrument. The writer wields it and turns it to the right or the left as he pleases. Are you and I as pliable as God wants us to be? I think, if a pen could exert a will of its own, the writer would soon be inclined to put it aside and take another that would move according only to his mind. Oh! is it not a solemn truth that men have been used at one time and laid aside at another? Why is it? Because they did not yield. They forgot that they were pens, and they began to think they were the writers, and so God had to teach them that it is He alone who planteth, He alone who watereth, and He alone who giveth the increase. May God keep us pliable as the pen.

Then there is the ink. The Apostle does not disdain to speak of the ink. A pen is of very little use unless filled with ink. It will only scratch the surface of the paper, and do harm instead of good. But, unless you and I, when we are instruments in the Divine hand are filled with the Holy Ghost, we shall do harm and not good, even although what we say is very true. If it is not under the blessed anointing, melting power of the Holy Ghost, it will not effect the purpose which God designs, for we read, "They have preached the Gospel to you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." Oh! Lord, fill thy pens with ink; fill thy people with the Holy Ghost, that they may be made instruments in thy hand. The point of the contrast here is the effect of the pen as contrasted with the work of the Holy Spirit. The pen, or the impress left by the ink, only affects the surface of the page, but in these days to which we are coming, and which the Apostle has in his mind, he is wanting to bring out that the Holy Ghost does not work upon the surface as the ink works upon the surface of the paper, but that He penetrates into the very secret recesses of men's hearts and beings, and that there He traces living characters—the mind which is in Christ Jesus; so that in our hidden part He makes us to know wisdom.

This comes out more clearly when you examine the third point—the paper. What is the kind of paper on which He desires to write his mind? Observe the contrast. The Apostle does not speak, as you might have expected him to speak, of writing upon paper. Papyrus was the usual writing material in Paul's day, and parchment was frequently used. He does not do so, because he has in his mind a contrast, a deep thought, which he desires to exhibit, and which cannot be exhibited by the use of such material. His mind runs back at once to the early dispensation which he is designing to bring out in contrast with the new dispensation—the dispensation of the Spirit in which we are now living. The material on which God wants to write, he says, is not tables of stone. He wants to write on the fleshy tables of the heart. Here is a twofold contrast. First, the contrast between the working of the law and the working of the Gospel. He seems to say, Moses gave you ten commandments—they were written upon tables of stone. They formed a standard, set up for man's conduct, but they gave man no power to obey them, and the consequence was, when it came to a question of obedience, the law failed; not because it was not holy, just and good, but because it made no provision for man's obedience. It found no response in man's heart. Man did not love it; man resisted it; and consequently it could not do the work intended. Although God foresaw its failure, He introduced it in order that it might be demonstrated to men that they could not keep his law.

Now, says the Apostle, we have a new state of things; we are under the new covenant. Does the provision of the new covenant contemplate that the law should not be kept? God forbid. "Do we make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law." It almost seems sometimes as if the Gospel were a convenient way for escaping the keeping of the law. That is not so. That would be what we rightly term Antinomianism. The law has been perfectly kept for us by our great Redeemer. We stand in Him complete; but that is not the thought here. Here it is, that God under the new covenant says: "I gave you a law, but it was outside you; but now I have another plan—I am going to put it inside you, and write the law upon your mind and your heart. Whereas you were before unable to do what was required, you will now have a pleasure and delight in it, because it will be upon your heart and soul." What the law, therefore, could not do by a constraining power from without, as someone has said, the Gospel now does by an inspiring power from within. Oh that we may understand this blessed contrast!

Then the Apostle's mind is directed to the condition of man's heart. "Oh," you say, "how cold, how hard, how dead my heart is; how unable I am to obey this law; how constantly I fail to obey it." Yes, but we have all that glorious promise, referred to by our brother who has spoken before, in Ezek. xxxvi., to which this passage undoubtedly refers. There is the table of stone. You know how cold and hard stone is. In some rooms you might see a pillar which you might think stone, but you go up to it, and directly you touch it you know it is wood, because wood is so much warmer than stone. You go to the sea-shore and see some granite rock that has defied the ocean, and is apparently just the same as twenty years before, but how lifeless. Dr. Guthrie describes a visit to a sculpture gallery. He sees upon a pedestal a form like life, beautifully shaped and modelled, but speak to it. Can it descend from its pedestal? Can it answer? It has an outward form, but it is dead. Do you say, "I find in my heart such a coldness, such a formality, such a deadness"? Blessed be God, He can alter that. As Dr. Bonar says in the hymn:—

I said, Oh! Lord, at length,
  This evil heart remove,
Deny all other strength,
  But give me strength to love.

Come nearer, nearer still,
  The hidden life impart,
Bend, break this stubborn will,
  Dissolve this stony heart.

That is what God proposes to do. He wants clean paper to write upon. No wonder—so do we. He says, "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh." What a contrast flesh is to stone—so warm, so soft, so impressible. How it responds to the slightest touch whether of correction or affection; and it is upon this paper that God wants to write his will. It is upon these hearts that He wants to write the transcript of his mind.

I should like to say one word as to the writer Himself. As to the contents of the letter. What do you expect in a letter? If an upright man is writing, you expect the transcript of his mind. You can always tell what a man is by his writing. There are two things which will tell what sort of a man he is, his prayers and his writing. It is said, and I believe it is true, that you can discover character by the forms of a person's handwriting. There are those who decipher character by handwriting; but it is certain you can tell the mind of a man by his writing. It will appear so that you can read between the lines. It will come out. He cannot disguise it. His mind will be there. How much more is it with our Lord Jesus Christ. He wants to write his mind upon us. There are only three things I will mention as to his mind, if He writes at all upon us. The first is lowliness; the second is loyalty; and the third is love. Lowliness.—You will be conscious of your absolute nothingness. God will be all in all. Loyalty.—You will have but one thought in your mind, how can I please Thee? Show me what I am to do to please Thee to-day. I have only one object by thy grace, I will have but one King and one end in life. It simplifies your life so much when you have only one thing to do. You will end by blessing others too; but if you begin by trying to please everybody, you will end by not pleasing yourself or your Saviour. Christ came to do the will of his Father, and had no other thought. It will take you where it took the Master, to Gethsemane, as surely as I speak, and to Calvary. We were told it just now, that the servant must be as his Master, and in following Him you will learn the way to Calvary and Gethsemane.

Lastly, He will write his love there. The love He feels to the souls of men. How these Christians love one another! Is that true of Mildmay and of the Christian Church to-day? How comes it that there are jealousies, envyings, and differences between Christians? God give us a baptism of his love that we may all be of one heart and soul and mind. Thank God, Mildmay is a testimony to the oneness of the body of Christ, and to the unity of Christians, however outwardly divided. But it is the love of Jesus in us that shall knit heart to heart and soul to soul, so that there is not room for anything but love, so that there will be no arrières pensées—simply transparent love. It shall be the proof that He has been writing his mind on ours.

And then love to the world. If we fail in this, we fail in all. What is necessary in order to make this letter very successful." There is one thing that is absolutely necessary, and that is that the letter should be legible. What an amount of time we have wasted over some of the letters of our friends, trying to discover their meaning. To look at their writing it seems as if a spider had crawled out of the ink-bottle over the paper. Is it not possible that in some of our Christian lives the letters that God Himself would write so fair and clear on us, there has been such a difficulty in understanding God's mind that we have misrepresented Jesus Christ to the world, and made of Him a caricature, instead of representing Him truly as He intended us to represent Him? Instead of being a letter in which could be discerned lowliness, loyalty and love, there can only be read self-sufficiency, double-mindedness, and anything but love. May God forgive us, and make us legible Christians! There are some who write in such a small hand that it wants a magnifying-glass. Others write in ciphers, so that it needs an interpreter. God does not want this. He wants a legible letter, that he may run who reads.

We are the world's Bible. We cannot get them to read the Bible; but you know, when you are living in the same house with an unbeliever, he will read you, and pretty closely, too. He will mark you up and down, and see if all the little particulars are right. Whether all your t's are crossed and your i's dotted. How is it with us? Are we legible Christians? It seems that we have many amended versions and many new editions of the Scripture. Thank God for them, but what we want most of all is an edition in flesh and blood. We want to have a translation of the Scriptures into living men and women—living, breathing MSS. that go through the world carrying the impress of God upon them, so that all men may see what we profess to be. The world is tired of seeing the profession without the practice. But if it sees men and women given up to God, cleansed by his blood, filled with his Spirit, and a living witness to the truths they profess, then we should convince the world; Christ will convince them through us.

Then if a letter is to be really effectual it must be properly addressed. How many letters are never delivered, because they are insufficiently addressed. At the Post-Office a number of men are set apart to endeavour to decipher badly-addressed letters. The world, however, is too much in a hurry to do this, and so we want to be clearly addressed. I mean this: There is such a vagueness, such a pointlessness in many a man's religion, that it does not seem to carry any express message. It has lost its distinctiveness. The character of the religion is colourless. It does not carry weight or point with it; it does not make the sinner tremble or the saint rejoice. It has no power, or point, or vital force in it, and therefore its practical value is almost lost. How many men and women are there living in this world without any sense of a mission! If we will but give ourselves up to God, He will lead and guide us in the path in which we can do the greatest service to our fellow-men.

THE BEST WAY TO SETTLE A QUARREL is for the innocent one to take the initiative and forgive the guilty one. A quarrel is seldom settled in any other way. Try it.—New York Independent.

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 25.

The Remedy for Failure.

Chairman's Address.

The Chairman read a portion of Genesis xxxiii., and said: Our brethren will speak upon the appointed subjects. But this passage brings before us, in almost a condensed form, the whole subject of this day's consideration—of failure, thank God of restoration too, and the consequences of failure to the Church and the world. Jacob would have pursued his journey uninterruptedly, had he obeyed the command of God and got back to Bethel. If we look at this chapter, we find (ver. 17) Jacob did not journey far enough. He went only to Succoth, where he built a house and made booths for his cattle. Notice two or three things in Jacob's conduct: In the first place, he built a house. He was no longer a dweller in tents. There seems an abandonment, a forgetfulness, for the time, of the pilgrim character. In the next place, he pitches his tent near the city, reminding us necessarily of him who pitched his tent towards Sodom. And then he sits down, and buys a parcel of a field for 100 pieces of silver. Abraham, his grandfather, had also bought some land in that country, and he paid more for it; and perhaps Jacob thought he had done a good stroke of business in buying a large plot of land for 100 pieces of silver, whereas Abraham had only bought six feet of earth for 400. But Abraham only bought that land to bury his dead. Jacob seems to buy it to make a settlement there. It seems as if, in pitching his tent towards the city, he had not been looking for the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God; as if in building the house he was establishing himself in a settled position, and in a dangerous one. But still he was a child of God, and though he had halted for a moment he did not forget his profession of religion. "He erected there an altar, and called it El-elohe-Israel." There was worship, profession, family prayer.

"And Dinah, the daughter of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob, went out to see the daughters of the land." (Chap. xxxiv. 1). Oh! that fatal step. How did it happen? What brought it about? Was it Dinah's fault? Was it Leah's fault? Was it Jacob's fault? Who can tell? Was the home dull? Possibly. Was it difficult to get on with the brothers? Possibly. She wanted to see the world. She "came out." She went into society. She fell, and she dragged her father's house down. Was Jacob in fault? Was it a wrong step when he stopped there? Was he wrong in building a house? Was he wrong in getting so near the city? Did he forget Abraham's conduct? "I know Abraham, that he will command his children after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord." Did he forget to exercise restraint? Was Dinah self-willed? Was she independent? Who can tell? Anyhow, there it was. Poor Dinah! Oh! what she would have given in after days if her father had prevented her going out to see the daughters of the land. Young people, you perhaps think sometimes that they who are older and more experienced in the ways of God deal rigidly and illiberally and hardly with you, when they warn you against evils which, alas! they know too well. Trust them. They may make mistakes. God knows they do. We parents make mistakes, but, children, trust your parents; and if, from their deeper knowledge of Christian life and of the world, they do find it needful in faithfulness to exercise restraint, they wish your highest happiness. Trust them. Poor Dinah, and poor Jacob. I know no more wretched story in the Bible than that of Genesis xxxiv. Down goes the whole family. What a record! Defilement, virtue lost, character gone, treachery, murder, robbery on the part of the only people in that land who knew the truth of God. They had their altar. What did the heathen think about their altar? Jacob had to tell the truth, "Ye have made me to stink."

Beloved friends, here is a lesson for us. I do not need to dwell upon it. May God dwell upon it for us all! We had a passage yesterday in our subject which was not alluded to: "The days that were before shall be lost, because his separation was defiled." Surely these were lost days to Jacob—lost days for everyone of them. Would that they could have been forgotten days! But, oh, you know what lost days are when the separation has been broken, when the consecration has been defiled, and when the world has dragged you down to its level, and your testimony has been powerless. There are the consequences to himself—misery, wretchedness in the family and in the Church; and, instead of testimony before men that they had done some good to the Canaanites, the people of God had to be almost chased out of the land and were as lost to the world. The days were lost.

God does not leave his poor child. Thank God for that; there is comfort. He did not forsake him because he had forgotten his Father; and so He comes to him again, and, when he is down so low that he is in abject terror of the people of the land, and in misery and wretchedness, He says, "Arise, go up to Bethel and dwell there." That seems to have touched the conscience of Jacob in a way that he had not been touched before, for what does he immediately say? "Jacob said unto his household and all that were with him, Put away the strange gods that are among you." Strange gods among them! Hadn't he got that family altar? How could there be strange gods there? Where were they? They were in his very bosom; that is to say, in his wife's. It was Rachel who had the idols there. Jacob did not know it. "He knew not that Rachel had stolen her father's gods." Poor Jacob must be acquitted of that. But it seems now that there must be something wrong, which requires to be searched and put away, and so he calls on the household, including his wives, to put away the strange gods. Then it has to come out; and Rachel has to bring out the idols that she had stolen, and the idols that she had hid under her as she sat in the tent. Was that the secret of failure? God knows. Was it the secret thing treasured in the bosom, in the heart, in the innermost tent of Jacob, that had led to the outward declension? What happened? "Let us arise, and go up to Bethel; and I will make there an altar unto God, who answered me in the day of my distress, and was with me in the way which I went. And they gave unto Jacob all the strange gods which were in their hand, and all their earrings which were in their ears; and Jacob hid them under the oak which was by Shechem." There are four burials in this chapter: the burial of the faithful nurse Deborah; the burial of the beloved wife (thank God, she put away the idols before she died); there is the burial of his beloved and aged father Isaac. These were very sad times. But this burial of the idols was a very glad one. When they were obtained, they were put out of sight, and left behind.

And that is a return to separation. We see how, when the evil is rooted out, put away, buried under the oak, and left behind, the results of the separate life followed. The terror of God was upon the nation. The power of God accompanies and protects his people. They go up to Bethel; there God appears to Jacob and talks with him, and gives him back the name of Israel, as if he had lost it. He had lost power with God, and certainly with men. He gave him sweet communion; promises are given and enjoyed, and on they go. May God help you and me, parents and children, to learn the solemn lesson that lies in these verses, and may He write them upon our hearts.

Confession of Failure.

Pasteur THEODORE MONOD.

A servant of God, who has often spoken from this platform, and who has been greatly used in the conversion of sinners and the upbuilding of saints, Dr. Pentecost, wrote a few weeks ago what follows: "There can be no greater mistake than to suppose that the Church can secure a blessing by turning away from worldliness for a few days. The great need of the Church is to be found in an out-and-out separation of herself from the world, in a real repentance, and a clearing of herself from the thousand and one entanglements and compromises which she has made. For a few days a small portion of the Church will come together and pray, and when this spasm is over, with results more or less unsatisfactory, they relapse into coldness, indifference, and worldliness again."

These words are true. Shall they be true of our Conference, or not? Surely it is the will of God that they should not prove true; that we should not, after a few days, relapse into worldliness again. Therefore we ought to have for our object now, as the very title of the subject for the day invites us, to be healed of our past failure, and guarded against failures of the same kind in the future.

We have come to the remedy for failure, and the first part of the remedy is confession of failure. We must go straight to the point, as we have very little time. The Word of God says that "he who covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." My purpose now is not to present to you some views about confession, but to help you to confess. One friend mentioned to me that in this programme confession was not in the right place; that it came too late, that we should have something else to do this morning than to confess our sins. I am not so sure of that. I think confession is never in the wrong place. It is always in season, and though it does seem logical to begin with confession, and then go on to forgiveness and deliverance, yet I say that, even after forgiveness and deliverance there is room for confession. Ay, more, I think that the most of confession and the most of sorrow for sin come then. I imagine that if the prodigal son wept on the way to his father's house, when he was ready to claim the place of a servant, he wept far more when he was received into the father's arms and rested upon his bosom. Yea, I imagine that when he was clothed with the best robe, and seated at the father's right hand at the table, his sobs would keep him from eating. The Apostle Peter, we are told, wept bitterly after he had denied his Master, but when his Master had sent a special message to him after his resurrection ("Tell my disciples, and Peter," says the Gospel of St. Mark), and when the Master had met with him, and said, "Feed my sheep," "Feed my lambs," I think he must have wept, sweeter tears it may be, but more than he did before.

Now, there are those amongst you, I have no doubt, who have not yet truly confessed their sins or backslidings; who have not returned to God with all their hearts, and buried their idols. Surely they need confession this morning. And if there are those who have returned to God, and who have been welcomed home again, and who have the sunshine of their Father's smile in their hearts, they will be the first to confess their sins this morning. Let me read to you a few passages out of the Word of God; for after all there are no words that can reach the conscience as the words of this Book. Listen to them as for your life; listen to them as though they were, and they are, written for you to-day. Oh, that was a true saying—I do not remember who said it first—that it is not enough to say that the Bible was inspired; it is inspired; it is a living word now to you. [The speaker read Isaiah i. 12—20; Jeremiah iii., from 20 to the end of the chapter; Ezekiel xvi. 59—63; Ezekiel xxxvi. 20—31, and continued:—]

He forgives us; He receives us as we are. If ye are willing and obedient, ready to give up your idols, ready to break off from your sins, He is ready to receive you; and then, before his holiness, and his mercy and faithfulness, we can only love and praise Him, and loathe ourselves, and serve Him out of the fulness of his grace. Observe, the great lesson of this last passage is that God does not speak so much of them—though He loves them, and has mercy upon them—as of Himself: "I will sanctify my great name." "I shall be sanctified in you." Oh, we do not often enough take the question on that side. We speak of sanctifying ourselves, setting ourselves apart, and that is right. But God wants his name to be sanctified. That is the very first petition that our Lord puts upon our lips, "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name."

Again, in the first Epistle of Peter there is that very remarkable passage, "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts." Give Him his place. O my friends, if we just do that one thing—give the Lord God his place—He will make us find our own place fast enough. Surely He will make us what we should be, and He will use us as He would have us to be used. He will give us the clean heart; He will give us the right place and the right work. But begin with Him, and let Him be sanctified; let Him be glorified.

Finally, just a few words from the New Testament; but they are so directly applicable to us to-day that I must read them (read James iv. 3—10). There has been much said of late years about the danger of looking to feeling, but we have fallen into an opposite danger, and we make too little of the right kind of feeling. A sinner, who sees himself to be a sinner, and especially who begins to see what a God he has sinned against, and what a tender-hearted Father, may well weep. How many times the Apostle says practically the same words, "Be afflicted, and mourn and weep, let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness." God will give you his own joy by and by; do not be afraid of feeling. Supposing, in this hall and at this time, the Spirit of God should act as we were told yesterday that He once acted in one of the great meetings of the Free Church of Scotland, when there was sobbing heard all over the hall, do you think that would be something to be sorry for? Indeed, not. It might not be in the programme; it might disturb our notions of dignity, but it would show that the Lord is at work among us. Do not be afraid of being sorrowful; do not be afraid of weeping for your sins in the sight of the Lord; for He, after having turned our laughter into mourning, shall turn our mourning to joy.

Brethren, we are here as Christians; we are here as representative Christians. We represent a large number of Christians who have this same precious faith in common with us. What shall we do in this world? What are we doing for the Lord? What do we think of this life? Do we ever stop and consider that we are whirled round on this little speck of a planet, and that our whole system is being whirled round, and that on this little planet there has been a rebellion against Almighty God, and that God, instead of just crushing us, and having nothing more to do with us, so loved the world that He gave eternal life to us in his Son. Do we believe that? Are we dreaming? Are we playing? What are we doing? Have we received those tidings for ourselves? Are we carrying them round to every creature, beginning in our own home, and in our own vicinity, and then to Samaria, and the ends of the earth? Are we doing it? Are not these subjects often to us just as a piece of music, I might almost say; we listen to it and we are more or less moved, and pleased even, I might say; then we go back and do neither more nor less—perhaps less—than we did before. Oh, brethren! we are here to-day in order to make a new start. We must get down, down in our own estimation, down before God, down before men; if need be, we must confess our transgressions. If we will not confess them, why the very birds of the air will fly against us; the flagstones in the streets will tell out our sins; the very furniture of the drawing-rooms, the plates in our dining-rooms, the walls of our bedrooms, will cry out against us. They are our sins, and God knows them; and our neighbours, and our family, and everybody knows them, it seems, except ourselves. We ought to know them, and speak out and tell out what we have done; and we ought to ask forgiveness of God.

I am not going to tell you about the sin of doing this thing or that thing, of going to that place, or playing this game or the other. Settle that between yourselves and your God. I am specially instructed by the Word of God not to judge my brother on matters on which I have no law set down in the Book. But I will tell you what is the sin. The sin is in the heart. What sin? Don't always speak about temper; it seems temper must be a very dreadful sin. I suppose it is the quiet people who are always down upon temper. There are a great many worse sins than temper—pride for instance, covetousness, selfishness, censoriousness, slothfulness, grinding down the faces of the poor, and trying to make the most out of their labour, and telling them, "Well, if you won't give your labour at such a price, you may do without me and my custom." What is that but to say just what the burglar says, "Your money or your life." Yes, you take the money of the poor, because you refuse to give it. You can see that in a great many persons calling themselves Christians. Then there are levity, dissembling, sensuousness, gormandising, and ever so many other things. Let us find them out for ourselves. And there are not only sins of the flesh, but the Apostle reminds us of sins of the mind: "Fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind." Again, in Corinthians, in a well-known passage, he says, "Cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." Let us look into this "all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit"—our imaginations, the pictures we make for ourselves, or that arise within us; if they are not in accordance with the law of God, we must have done with them all, and we must confess them as sin. We have by our sinning offended God. We have been disloyal to Christ, as we were told by our Chairman the first day. It is base desertion; we have grieved the Spirit; we have weakened the Church; we have scandalised the world. And we have excused all this to ourselves because we say we are Christians. My main point is this, that we should understand at last that our being Christians, instead of being an excuse, is, on the contrary, a most aggravating circumstance to every sin that we may commit, because we sin against knowledge. We sin against abundance of light, and, especially in this land of Bible reading and churches and chapels, we sin against our Christian experience. We sin not only against the law of God, but the love of God; against God's dealings with us in providence, by the joys He has sent to us, by the sorrows with which He has chastened us and endeavoured to prune us, that we should bring forth more fruit. Has He succeeded? Have we brought forth more fruit?

I do not deal in any sweeping assertions, but I speak to each one as though he were alone; let him answer for himself. Have we derived from God's dealings with us in providence all that we should have derived? We have sinned against our own promises every time we have come to the Lord's table, for instance. We have professed to be his, and promised to serve Him, and many a time we have made some solemn promise, perhaps in such a meeting as this. Have we been faithful to it? Ah! we have sinned against the promise of God. If we had kept hold of the promise of God, we would not have offended Him. We have been consecrated to God, as we have been told, by his will, by the death of Christ, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and by personal decision. How is it that we have gone back, many of us? How is it that God has to say to us: "Ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?" How is it? By lack of will for one thing, when tribulation came, when persecution came. There may be Christians who are more persecuted than we for the name of Christ; we had better try to find out why. Have we anything to suffer for his name? And when we have to suffer, do we accept it, or do we think we should draw back a little—that we are going just a trifle too far. Then it may be by lack of faith. That is to say, God always leads us on to more difficult duties that involve greater trials—that is the way to strengthen our faith, and the only way. When there comes a new trial of faith, do we go on and gain a new victory, or draw back? If we draw back, it will not take many months or days for us to have lost all our strength, or to have defiled all our consecration. Remember that the sin of Christians is what is represented by the sin of Judah and Jerusalem, which was worse than the sin of Samaria; just because they were the consecrated people and had the Temple.

So we fail by looking back, or lacking sympathy. That is the great lack in our Christianity or our Christendom—the lack of sympathy with men. And why? Because we have not been separated enough unto God—that is the reason why we have been too widely separated from men. In what sense? Too widely separated from their lives, from their hearts, from their sins and sorrows, to enable us to understand them, to come to them, to love them, to make them feel that we love them, and to help them up. That is what is needed nowadays. The time has gone by when a Christian might be characterised by everything that he did not do. He didn't go here, and he didn't go there; he didn't do this, and he didn't do that. The world wants to know what he does do, and what he is. The world, as has been said, wants walking Bibles; and if we are not walking Bibles we are walking libels—walking libels upon Christ and upon the Gospel. We say we are the body of Christ, members of Christ; and if the world sees that a Christian never finds time to give himself any trouble to move about a bit for the sake of others, or if it finds that the conversion of such a Christian is by no means to edification, but rather the other way, and tends to lower one's mind and one's heart, what will it say? Shall we give them reason to believe that Christ's body is a paralysed body? Is that what we want to show the world? Then the world will say, if you are not separated to your Lord, What is the difference between you and us? and if you are separated to your God, What is your God, and what kind of a God is He?

Now, brethren, I will not go further into these sins. There is, besides the sins you know of, the great mass of unrecognised sin. Therefore the Psalmist says, "Cleanse Thou me from secret faults." But the greatest of all sins is that we have made our Christian doctrine and profession an excuse for sin. We have limited the Holy Ghost. We have made the will of God an excuse for offending God. Yea (shall I say so?) we have used the blood of Christ as a purple cloak for our iniquity. Is it not true that "the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin"? It is true. Is it not true that "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all iniquity"? Yes. But what is not true is, that we can go on sinning under cover of the blood of Christ, and that God won't see through our lies and our impositions. That is not true. You say, Is there no difference? Are there no privileges for us as Christians? If we have the name of Christ on our lips, does our life matter so much? Is there no difference? Yes, there is a difference, and I will tell you what it is. It is very plainly taught us in the Word of God. It is in Hebrews x. There is a difference. They used to be under the law—now we are under grace. "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?"

Return to Separation.

Rev. J. H. Wilson, D.D.

The subject that has been assigned to me, and which winds up this great department, is return to separation. Return speaks of backsliding. Separation is renunciation of sin and of the world, self-surrender to God, consecration to his service. This return implies a going back from all this, and, although the word has not been often used in the course of these meetings, the Bible way of putting it is, backsliding. There was once separation, and there has ceased to be. There may not be what is open, and flagrant, and scandalous in the sight of others, but there has been back-going—backsliding. So that the subject that now falls to be looked at is the backslider's return. It was well said by a brother the other day that separation is not an act—it is a series of acts. It is an attitude. It is a habit. It is a state. It is a life. A series of acts must have a first act, and a habit must have a beginning, and that is the point to which we have come to-day. My appeal, to-day, is to backsliders to take the first step now, to have the first act of new separation now, to have the beginning of the new habit now. This is the practical application of the whole subject. This is what all else has been leading up to. We have had the attraction of separation set before us, the nature of it, the benefit of it, the blessings of it; and we have had failure in separation set before us, the causes of it, the consequences of it to the Christian and to the world; and we have had, this morning, the confession of it, which, indeed, is part of the return. But now we have come to the act of return.

The first thing I have to ask your attention to is the warrant of it, for that is fundamental—the warrant for return. Where is it? What is it? It is not our sense of sin, our guilt, our need, our sorrow, our repentance. It is God's Word; it is God's bidding; it is God's invitation; it is God's command. That is the warrant that the sinner has for coming to Christ at first. It is all the warrant He needs; and it is all the warrant that the backslider needs for returning to Him whom he has turned away from. He needs the command. He needs the invitation. He needs the word. Thank God, where there is the feeling, as Pasteur Monod has said, and where there is not the feeling, you have the warrant still, the same as ever.

One of the great difficulties that we have in dealing with sinners who should come to Christ, and with believers who have wandered from Christ, is just this want of feeling. That is the obstacle: that is the excuse they make for keeping away. It has been put by an old fellow-worker of my own, a simple city missionary, now in glory, in some very rough and homely lines. He entitles them, "I cannot feel," and they run so:—

O yes! I'm sinful, that I know,
For God and conscience tell me so;
But yet for all my sin and woe,
I cannot feel!

I know the truth, I'm deeply read,
And Bible doctrines fill my head,
But, oh! my heart is cold and dead—
I cannot feel!

I've tried to break it oft, but no—
It just gets harder every blow,
And what to do, I do not know—
I cannot feel!

If I could feel enough oppress'd,
Then Jesus Christ might give me rest,
But with a stone within my breast
I cannot feel!

If I could weep and mourn for sin,
Then my salvation would begin,
But what a hardened state I'm in—
I cannot feel!

Poor sinner, whosoe'er thou art,
Bewailing thus a stony heart,
Apply to Jesus, He'll impart
The power to feel.

Might I not apply it to-day to the backslider, and say,

Backslider, whosoe'er thou art,
Bewailing thus a stony heart,
Return to Jesus; He'll impart
The power to feel.

The warrant for return is not our feeling; without the feeling we have it all—the summons, the Divine invitation, the command to return. The first word was "turn," to the sinner; the next word is "return," to the believer. We have it in that well-known hymn, which is good for the sinner and good for the backslider,

And that Thou bid'st me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come.

I attach the very first importance to this. I believe that this is one of the difficulties that lie at the very beginning of the return—losing sight of, or being ignorant of, the warrant in the simple Word of God. I might have spoken of the promised welcome; but I shall not dwell on this. I find the Lord saying unto me, "Return unto Me, ye backsliding children, and I will return unto you." I find Him saying, "Return unto Me, and I will heal your backsliding." I find Him representing Ephraim as saying, "Turn Thou me, and I shall be turned; for Thou art the Lord my God." In the last chapter of Hosea, so often referred to, you have these words: "Ephraim shall say, What have I any more to do with idols?" God had been waiting—shall I venture to say that He had been wearying; He had been listening; and, when Ephraim returns, He says: "I have heard him, and observed him."

Let me refer to another difficulty in connection with the return. May I say, dear backsliding brother, that the sorrow of it should not keep you back. It has its sorrowful side. You remember when Naomi came back (to take an illustration of a returning prodigal), she said, "I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty: call me not Naomi (the pleasant one), but call me Marah (bitter)." Oh, the sorrow of it. Because of what we feel we have lost; what we have lost in the way of progress; what we have lost in the way of position; what we have lost in the way of enjoyment. You heard this morning what Jacob lost. He returned; but, oh! the sorrow that accompanied it, sorrow that never left him, sorrow that he carried in his heart to his dying day, sorrow that haunted his dying bed, sorrow that hung as a dark cloud over his dying pillow. I turned up these words while the Chairman was reading that most remarkable passage, and I find that Jacob, when he lay a-dying, said, "Simeon and Levi are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations. O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honour, be not thou united." The sorrow was there, and it was past mending.

You remember how it was with Samson. I read in the programme under this head of the subject, "And his hair began to grow again." That is put down as connected with the return. I turned up this passage to look at it and I found it preceded by this verse, "But the Philistines took him, and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of brass; and he did grind in the prison house." His return did not bring back his eyes, did not undo the loss that he had suffered—it was for all time. Yet, backsliding brother, do not let that keep you back, although it be as the sorrow of Naomi, the sorrow of Jacob, the sorrow of Samson; "Return unto Me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." Perhaps there may be the sorrow of the loss which others have sustained through you—your children, your servants, your friends, your neighbours. Do not let that sorrow, irremediable though it be in some cases, keep you back, or the dishonour you have done the Lord keep you back. He says, "Return," notwithstanding; and that is your warrant.

Might I say a word of a different kind? Might I speak about the joy of restored life—love, influence, power, and usefulness? It is ot all dark, thank God; it has its bright side. We have in some of our distant Scotch islands some hardy seafaring people, and people on the coast look with great contempt on the inland people. I was told the other day that the girls won't look at the young men in the interior of the island. They look down upon them. My friend spoke to these girls, and asked them why they would persist in having sailor husbands; "Don't they go away, and are they not away for months, and sometimes years, and sometimes never came back?" Some of the girls said, "But every time they do come back again it is just like a new marriage." That is to be said in measure in connection with this subject. But are there not here to-day those who can re-echo the word, and say that the return was just like a new marriage. There was the marriage joy repeated, and repeated sometimes again and again. Oh! the joy of it. Not least the joy to the Christian brotherhood in the return of a brother. "This thy brother was lost and is found." The joy to the heart of God Himself. "Rejoice with Me for I have found my son which was lost." The joy before God among the angels of heaven over the repenting one more than over the ninety and nine who had no need of repentance. The joy of usefulness. Why, you have the old backslider Naomi coming back to her home again, and these words are spoken of her—"So Naomi returned, and Ruth, the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her." The old backslider coming back, had the young convert with her. She returned out of the country of Moab, and came to Bethlehem at harvest time. We had lately one whom you know well, Dr. Andrew Bonar, preaching with us on David's return as a backslider. He was speaking on these words: "Make me to hear joy and gladness, that the bones which Thou hast broken may rejoice." He referred to that passage in the book of Job, "So the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning: for he had fourteen thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses. He had also seven sons and three daughters. And he called the name of the first Jemima; and the name of the second Kezia; and the name of the third, Kerenhappuch. Jemima means the "daughter of light," and Kezia, "perfume," and Kerenhappuch, "the horn of beauty." The latter end of the returning backslider is often better than the beginning.

Let us come to the closing point. There are two great practical results that ought to come out of this Conference. The first has to do with the separated—the duty of those who have not so much to speak of in the way of conscious failure in separation; what is to be to them the outcome of these Conferences? I preached some years ago on the returning backslider in connection with Naomi, and at the close of the service a stranger came up the pulpit stairs and said, "What are you going to do after that sermon?" I looked inquiringly in his face, and he said, "You could surely not preach a sermon like that and do nothing after it; I have had a backslider on my conscience and heart while you have been preaching. He put his hand on the shoulder of a lady, and he said, "I lay a backslider on your conscience." The stranger was Mr. Henry Reed, of Tunbridge Wells, so well known here and in Australia, and now in glory.

What are you going to do after this Conference? Are you going to thank God that you are not as some other men are; not as this backslider? Are you going to congratulate yourself on your separation, and resolve to be separate more and more? Is it to be a selfish outcome merely? Are you to have no care for your backsliding brethren? We have heard again and again that this is the weak point in our line of defence. If we only had the backsliders, what a spiritual power we should have! It seems to me that the recovery of a backslider is almost of more importance than the converting of one outside; because the backslider is a drag-weight on the Church. He is keeping back the cause of Christ. By his recovery we should have this vis inertia removed, and we should have a great propelling power added to the Church. If there is anything to be desired, prayed for, lovingly, sympathisingly, hopefully sought for, it is the recovery of the backslider. If the backsliders of London could be won back to their first love, how it would tell upon the Church and the world. And, although there are elements that were not in the first separation, we have a power equal to it. Did not our brother, Mr. Hopkins, tell us that a little girl was the connecting-link between the outside world and the great power, inside that "Hell Gate" obstacle, as it was called, at New York? She touched a button; the dynamite exploded, and the obstacle was removed. Have you not that power as regards backsliders in your churches, families, cities and districts? Will you help in this great work, and show this Conference not to be one of impulse, but one that shall lead to the attainment of this great issue?

And, then, about the backsliders themselves. Beloved, will you return? If so, then your return must be immediate; it must be to-day; it must be now; it must be here. You remember the mother, whose daughter left her, and she said she never locked the door, from that day onward, night or day, lest her daughter should come back and find a locked door. Thank God, our Master has left the door upon the latch, and at any hour of day or night the backslider may return and enter that open door.

At any time, but especially at a time like this, you have the high tide; you have the gales of the Spirit blowing, ready to fill your sails. you have all the surroundings, all the associations of a helpful kind in order to your returning to the Lord. Then let it be a complete return, "Not a hoof shall be left behind." Let there be no reservation. Two gentlemen were walking through Regent-street, when one said to the other, "Look here!" It was an object that had been a snare to his friend in former days. The gentleman said, "Oh! don't." He turned away, and saved himself by the grace of God. Say, "Oh! don't" to the dangerous thing—the dangerous place. Do not even look. What is to be our response? Two hymns have suggested themselves to me as a fitting expression of what, I dare say, we feel. The first is a part of that beautiful hymn of Cowper's:—

Return, O Holy Dove, return,
Sweet messenger of rest;
I hate the sins that made Thee mourn,
And drove Thee from my breast.

The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from thy throne,
And worship only Thee.

So shall my walk be close with God,
Calm and serene my frame;
So purer light shall mark the road,
That leads me to the Lamb.

The other is suggested by the words of a child. You know that beautiful and touching hymn, "Knocking, knocking, who is there?" A little girl in India said to her mother one day, "Mother, it seems to me we should not always be singing about the knocking; we should have something to sing about the opening. I think

FRIDAY EVENING.

Consequences of True Separation.

Remarks by the Chairman.

We could not all be present at that season of Communion which many of you enjoyed this afternoon; but, if that were impossible for all of us, we can still abide in that chamber with the Lord, and hear some of the words which He spoke when the supper was ended; when, turning aside from the world and shut in with his disciples He opened the very depths of his heart of love to them, and through them to us. But there were even, if one may say so, higher and deeper words than those which He addressed to them. The last words of our Saviour were to his Father—previous to the words upon the Cross, I mean—and yet in that wonderful prayer, when He seems already to have entered within the veil, what is it that is upon his heart as He talks to his Father? It is still his beloved ones on earth. They are the burden, the subject of his petitions; and not they only who were then present with Him, but all who should believe on Him. How blessed to know that we had a place in his thoughts then; how blessed to know that we have a place in his heart now! We have felt, no doubt—those of us who have been privileged to attend these meetings—something of the solemn awe which must have been on Jacob's mind when he said, "How dreadful is this place; this is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven!" Yet that place where he saw the ladder reaching from earth to heaven, and heard the wonderful promises of Him that stood above it, was not so solemn as that upper chamber in Jerusalem; and it is there we are now privileged to stand and to listen to the voice of Jesus. As I read this 17th chapter of John, may each one of us say, "The voice of my Beloved." Mr. Blackwood concluded by reading the chapter.

The Power of a Separated Life.

Rev. CHARLES A. FOX.

The opening passage on our programme tonight runs somewhat in this way, "He was a Nazarite, and he began to deliver Israel." It is the power of a separated life. I would bring before you this evening one instance of it from 1 Kings xviii. Not only is this perhaps the most remarkable one-man revolution that ever took place, but it is a most remarkable example of the process by which any man who is indeed living a separated life must work for the glory of God. Let us look at it in detail this evening, by the grace of God.

In 1 Kings xviii. 24, observe, first of all, that we have these remarkable words, "The God that answereth by fire, let him be God." That is the God that I believe in—the God who answers by fire. "Let him be God;" may every soul respond to that blessed Word of God to night. We have here an account of how the great prophet Elijah, that wondrous, mysterious figure, who stands out against the dark background of a corrupted court, an unbelieving people, a proud and defiant king, and a hell-prompted queen—stands out alone in wondrous and bold relief, as the single public man who witnessed for the Lord. We find here that he, thus standing boldly forth for his Master, was enabled to bring back a whole people to the service of God. That is the power of a separated life. But are we ready, first of all, for that preparation which he went through, that he might do this great life-work? Are we ready to be, like him, sent into the wilderness to live on ravens' food; a meal at a time, not knowing where the next meal shall come from? Who in this hall is ready for that? We want men of faith; we must have men of faith to do the great life-work of the Master. Elijah knew nothing of what would happen again. He took his meal from the ravens daily, and he knew not where the next meal would come from. But he had a deeper experience than this. As soon as the brook dried up at Cherith, he was sent by command of the Lord on a strange journey, and he arrived there when a poor widow woman, with her son, was just about to have her last meal. It was her last extremity; and he, the prophet of the Lord, was to share the last meal with this poor, famishing widow. Are you ready for that, my friends? There is a great deal of testimony of faith, but there is very little practice of it, I fear, in these days—practical faith, living meal by meal upon the providence of God. And so he who had lived by the brook, and took his meals from the ravens, lived now upon the famishing widow.

Then, again, he was sent further. In depression of soul, he flung himself under the juniper-tree, and wished and prayed God that he might die. But he was to have a further experience. The angel of the Lord appeared, wakened him, and said, "Rise and eat. Here is food for you; the journey is great." There was angels' food for the prophet of the Lord. Have you ever eaten angels' food. Unless you believe in God, that He can supply you with angels' food, you are not yet fit for the fullest service of the Lord. After that He went forty days without food. That was faith. There was the man of faith, and that is the wondrous example that I would bring before you this night.

We shall now see what his great life-work was. You remember how the whole people were under the power of idolatry. You remember how King Ahab, and Jezebel the queen, hated the Lord and hated all that was holy. But the command went forth to Elijah, "Go, show thyself again to Ahab." There had been a great famine and drought for three years and a half. Look at the opening chapter where we have the first thought that I would bring before you. How may we, as separated to the Lord, bring down blessing on our fellow-men? That is the question before us to-night.

First of all, notice that there must be a going down. "And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we lose not all the beasts" (ver. 5). There must be a going down into the valley of humiliation, if there is to be any real blessing. There must be a putting aside of all kingly pride, all kingly ambition, all pride, all caste which is so strong to so many Christians. There must be a putting aside of all that the world thinks so precious—reputation must be let go, everything must be let go. The king Ahab must come down and go with Obadiah to seek for grass to keep the beasts alive, such was the famine and drought of the country at that time. And it is in the same way that we must go down. There must be a breaking up of all this caste, this pride; there must be a breaking up of all this social distinction which is destroying the vitality of the Church. There must be a going down to the valley of humiliation—humbled to the dust one with another, to seek for grass, to seek for that which shall satisfy the soul.

Notice, again, there must be a going apart, a going alone. A Conference is blessed; no one enjoys this Conference more than I do. But the true work is done alone. There is an awful solitude in soul thirst. You must go alone. "My soul thirsteth for God, yea, even for the living God." You must separate yourself and go into his holy presence. It is not to be done in company and in pleasantry; it is not to be done in enjoyment; it is to be done in the deep isolation and solitude which come upon the soul that is athirst for God.

And you will notice that they went apart. "Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself." You will notice also that Obadiah was a man who "feared the Lord greatly." He was a man of position—the governor of Ahab's house—and yet he feared the Lord greatly, and looked after the children of God as far as he possibly could. This man, Obadiah, had to be emboldened to confess his own convictions. It is so in the Church to-day. Every man who has convictions from God must be encouraged and emboldened by the Holy Ghost to confess his convictions, and live them out before men. There is too much hiding truth among those who believe in the truth. There is a burying of the blessed secret of the Lord in the bosom of so many Christians to-day. It must not be so any longer. If God has taught you the truth, He must also enable you, and He will do so, to go forth and witness for the truth. And, as Obadiah was "in the way"—it is a remarkable expression; and yet a child of God is always in the way—he meets with Elijah, and he says, "Art thou that my lord Elijah?" Elijah answered, "Yes, but you must go and tell Ahab that I am coming to see him." "But," said Obadiah, "it is impossible; I dare not do it; it will cost me my life, my all. I dare not do it." "You must do it;" and Elijah compels him to do it.

The saints of God must confess the truth of the Lord. That is the great lesson the Church wants to-day. Obadiah at last yields; he goes and tells Ahab that Elijah wants to see him. We read it in the 15th verse: "And Elijah said, As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely show myself unto him today. So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah." So that not only must there be a going down into the valley of humiliation, and a solitude in the deep thirst of soul, but there must be a going forth of truth. Elijah was that strange, mysterious man who bore the secret of God with him. He was a strange and a rugged man, but they knew him in heaven. They knew not Ahab and his court with all their wealth and luxury; but Elijah was known in heaven. So he goes forth with the command of the Lord after these three years of famine, and he meets Ahab. "And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel? And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim." There must be a going forth of truth, confronting the sinner with the truth of God, before there is any real blessing done even by the separated life.

Now, you see Ahab looked upon the prophet as the troubler of Israel, but the prophet immediately put it straight. He said, "I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house." There must be individual conviction; every soul must be broken down under the Word of the Lord; it must pierce and penetrate like a sharp, two-edged sword. And the soul must be convicted by the Holy Ghost. Not only does Elijah convict the king, but he immediately goes forward and appeals to the people. We read in verse 21: "And Elijah came unto all the people. and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow Him: but if Baal, then follow him." The people are brought to a decision; there must be immediate decision. The Church of Christ to-day is halting between two opinions; the Church of Christ to-day does not believe, as a whole, that God can keep her, that God is faithful to his children. The Church of Christ to-day is afraid to confess the truth that God is bound to be the keeper of every obedient and trusting soul. Oh, if there is going to be any opening of the windows of heaven, there must be a conviction of the truth, and a confession of the truth. You will find, if you see much of the Christian world, that there are very few people who dare to trust God in the integrity of trust—very few people, indeed, who dare to go forth on the bare word of God. We must go forward; we must dare to believe simply upon the Word of God, and prove it to be true.

Then he convicts not only the king, and not only the people, but he now addresses the priests of Baal. He said, "There are many priests of Baal; I am alone; I only am a prophet of the Lord; there are 450 priests of Baal, and 400 priests of the groves." He alone stands to witness for the truth of God. Yes, brethren, it is a solemn fact. Elijah turns to them and says, "You are rich; you are so many; will you not give two bullocks and let us prove which is the true God? I have no bullock to give." Elijah gave himself; he had no other offering. And so they agreed that they should offer two bullocks, and "the God that answereth by fire, let Him be God." The altar was prepared, and the bullock was cut in pieces and dressed, and the priests of Baal cried out from morning until noon; but there was no voice to answer. Oh, friend, have you known what it is to have no voice to answer? Have you pleaded and wept before God when you have been in a false position, but without confession of that sin which has been the secret of your shame and your failure, and there has been no voice to answer? You know, then, what it is to be left alone, and God even not responding to you.

But we read that at noon Elijah came forward and mocked them and said, "Surely yours is a god? Cry louder! He must be asleep, or he must be on a journey. You must do much more than this, and then, of course, he will awake, and he will answer." And they began to leap upon the altar and to cut themselves with lances until the blood gushed out upon the altar. But now, there must not only be a going down and a going forth of truth; there must be something more—there must be a going near. Let us read it in the 30th verse, "And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him." There must be a gathering of the people together. You are here come together. It is well. O that the brethren on the platform and in this room were one in heart always. We must have it; if there is going to be an open heaven, there must be a drawing near. "And he repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down. And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the Lord came, saying, Israel shall be thy name." These twelve stones represented the twelve tribes, a people who were at this time divided; but he disregards the division, and he there represents the union of the people before God on the altar. If the windows of heaven are to be opened, and the blessing poured out, there must be union. We must be able to overcome our jealousies and our rivalries. If we are to believe the Scripture of God, these alone will keep blessing from the Church of Christ—these divisions. If a brother minister or brother Christian cannot recognise, and recognise fully, his brother, though he may in some points disagree with him, that will hinder the blessed flow of the current of grace. Let us see that there is union in the Church. Let there be the twelve stones to build up this altar.

Then we read further: "And with the stones he built an altar in the name of the Lord: and he made a trench about the altar." There must be separation. The altar of the living stones must be separated from the world. There must be a deep trench made. We have been these three days digging the trench; I hope it is dug. There must be a trench made to separate the children of God from the world, and that trench should hold so many measures of seed. It is the most fruitful trench that we have in the world. Now, what is this separation? Not only separation from the world. There are many Christians quite ready to give up the ball and the theatre, who are not a bit better, and not more separated than they were before. It is true that there must be a separation from the world, but there must also be a separation from self. This is essential. You must be separated from that self that you hug and love so much; you must be separated from the old self, and separated from the new self. You have been converted, and you are a Christian, and you say, "I am a Christian self now." Never mind, you must be separated from the Christian self. You must be separated unto Christ alone. As in prayer we were saying that Moses was shut out from the tabernacle of the Lord by the glory that filled the tabernacle, so may God fill this house to-night, and shut out every soul here in that sense, that self is excluded and God alone is glorified!

"And Elijah put the wood in order." What is the wood for the altar—looking at it spiritually? I look upon it as the Word of God. We must have good planks of the Word of God. And not only so, but the bullock was to be cut in pieces. I know there are many Christian people who are willing to go up and put themselves down upon the altar as they are. God won't have you, my brother. You must be cut in pieces; you must be a broken spirit; you must be, indeed, severed into portions, so that there is no longer any life in you. The fiery lamp must pass between the pieces. Many Christians make great mistakes about consecration. There is only one consecration that God can accept, and that is the consecration of a man who gives himself up to die in the Lord Jesus on Calvary, and reckons himself to be dead. There are numbers of Christians everywhere who are quite willing to consecrate themselves to the Lord; but they are not dead, and do not mean to be dead. You must be crucified with Christ on the Cross of Calvary, if there is to be any real offering or consecration.

Then they poured out water on this altar. Why? Water was scarce, but just the little that they had left they surrendered to God. And Elijah said, "Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt sacrifice, and on the wood. And he said, do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, do it the third time. And they did it the third time. And the water ran round about the altar; and he filled the trench also with water"—the very thing that the country was dying for. You must give up all for the Lord Jesus, if you are going to have a real answer from God by fire.

"And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel." Yes, let us appeal to God as our fathers' God. And he said, "Let it be known this day that Thou art God." "Then the fire of the Lord came." There must be prayer — intense, earnest, believing prayer. If we are going to have a blessing to-night, there must be prayer from all the hearts in this house—deep, real prayer. Oh, God, open the windows of heaven now. Let it be known that thy children are thy servants. Let it be known this day in Israel, and let thy glory appear to thy people to-day! And we read that "the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench." Everything was consumed—even the very dust. Would to God that the gold-dust could be consumed by the fire of the Lord. I heard our brother, the Chairman, speak to-day of Mildmay wanting funds. How is that? The Church of Christ is rich enough, and yet Mildmay needs money to do the work of the Lord. My brethren, if there is to be any grace of God, or open windows, give out of your liberality to the great work of the Lord that is going on in this place. Let the fire of the Lord lick up the dust, the gold dust, and the stones, even the stony heart; all must be burned up in this wonderful sacrifice of the Lord.

And now let us hasten to the close. "And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces." I do not like much of that kind of jubilant exclamation that some people indulge in when they believe the fire of the Lord has fallen upon them. I believe the fire of God abases us to the dust, and we fall on our faces and lie prostrate before Him. And what did they cry out? "They said, The Lord, He is the God; the Lord, He is the God." Do you know that that is exactly the English of the Hebrew word "Elijah"? "Elijah" means "The Lord, He is the God." Elijah turned the hearts of the people back again to the Lord. If you are going to do work for the Lord, and will do it faithfully, the Lord will reward you as you go forward; He will honour you in your work; He will testify through you; you shall be able to overcome even evil spirits and to cast them out; you shall do miracles in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

And now when the fire had fallen—that was not what they wanted. There had been an unclouded heaven for three and a half years; the ground was dried up with the heat of the sun already—what should they want fire for? It must come first. If we are going to have an opened heaven there must be fire fall, and all must be offered and consumed by the fire of the Lord. "And Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain. So Ahab went up to eat and to rink. And Elijah went up to the top of armel; and he cast himself down upon the arth, and put his face between his knees, and aid to his servant, go up now, look toward the ea." The servant went up, but he shook his ead—nothing. But Elijah heard the sound of ain. A man who is sensitive to the word of od can hear.

He went up to the top of Carmel and cast imself down upon the ground—he put his head etween his knees. That is the way to look for lessing; you can see best when your head is own in the dust. Get you up, Mildmay Conerence, and cast yourselves down at the feet of he Lord, in the dust, and there will be an open eaven immediately. Let there be broken spirits, roken souls, broken hearts, given to the Lord—t all be broken, and God will open the windows f heaven and pour you down a blessing that here shall not be room enough to contain it. lijah had not only this wonderful faith himelf, but he told his servant to go and look seven imes. Children of God, have you looked the eventh time? How many times have you oked? Three times? That is about the arthest that many Christians care to look. But lijah told his servant to go up and look seven imes. Six times he came back and said, "Nohing;" but the seventh time he came back and aid, "There is only a cloud like a man's hand." od's ways are so human—his answers are strangely human, that we take them to be a man's hand." Out of the depths of the editerranean, however, came this little cloud, nd the servant saw it; and Elijah said: "Go p, say unto Ahab, Prepare thy chariot, and et thee down, that the rain stop thee not. And came to pass in the mean while, that the eaven was black with clouds and wind, and here was a great rain."

And then the prophet who had been so long n his knees, ran before Ahab to the entrance of ezreel. If you are only kneeling in prayer, ou will be able to outrun the chariot. Why annot Christians run? Because they pray so ittle, they kneel so little, there is so little rokenness of spirit, that they cannot run to do he messages and errands of the Lord. There ust be this arresting—being arrested by God's ost holy presence, and then we shall outrun all he human kings that are against us. We shall how them that God is with us, and the windows f heaven shall be opened. Personal conviction, irst, then the fire shall fall, and the sacrifice hall be consumed; and then the rain shall ome—showers of blessing—and you and I shall e baptized with the Holy Ghost. We shall ive a consecrated life, not a broken union, not a erpetual defeat, but with consistency, with arnestness, with unbroken communion, with oliness and peace, doing the work of the Lord, aining victories daily for the Master, and yet e lying in the dust at his feet.

An Indian's Appeal for his People.

r. Ihsanullah, from the Punjaub, was introuced by the Chairman as one who had to make n appeal to the audience. He said: I thank he Lord Jesus Christ that his blood was shed or every part of the world. When I sit down ere, and experience the atmosphere of the pirit, my soul is warmed; but at the same time here is deep sorrow in my heart, that while these lessed people are enjoying heaven here below, y people are living in idolatry and Mahomedanism, and falling into the deepest hole of sin. Ve want help. There are many here who are my fathers and mothers, my brothers and sisters in Christ, and I beseech their help. There are 270 millions of people all in heathen darkness, and in want of eternal life. The Saviour's blood has been offered for India as well as for England. The blood on the Cross was shed from the bleeding side of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have as much right to it as the people of England. Oh, brethren and sisters, fathers and mothers, in Christ, come over and help us. You see how the Lord Jesus Christ separated Himself from all his glory, from the angels in heaven, came down and became a servant, and went on to Calvary. He shed his blood for our Indian people and Punjaubees. There is the greatest need in the Punjaub, and in India, for those people who will come out with warm sympathies to drag them out of the mire of sin. There was a man standing by the bedside of Paul in a dream, but I am now face to face with you, pleading for India, and that you would help us. Make the sacrifice as the Lord Jesus Christ did; separate yourselves from relatives, from children, and go down and live and die in India for our poor perishing people.

I beseech of you, at least one quarter of this Conference—I want more—but one quarter at least of the people who have heard about separating themselves from the world, to come over and help us. Satan has no right to rule over our people, because the Lord Jesus Christ died that He might destroy the works of the devil in the Punjaub as much as in England. There is a great want in the Punjaub. We want people filled with the Holy Ghost, living epistles of the Lord Jesus Christ, renewed by the Holy Ghost, to come and show the people that his blood was shed for them. May the Lord make you restless until you see the same need for the Word in India as He sees, and make you act up to it. If you knew the need of India as God knows it you would not sleep to-night. There is great need. Please come over and help us

The Reward of a Separated Life.

Rev. GEORGE C. GRUBB.

"Behold, Lord, we have forsaken all and have followed Thee; what shall we have, therefore?" Was Peter wrong in asking that question? I think not; there is a Scripture side to the doctrine of reward. We read that Paul says to the Philippians, "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Let us be thus minded. We go further than Paul and Peter. We look to the Lord of Paul and Peter, and read in Hebrews xii, "Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." We need the element of joy in our Christian life. We must have it. We do not want seraphic raptures, for we have not seraphic wings, but we want practical joy, and joy that brings the whole mind into consecration to God. I am sure there must be something wrong in our souls, when the joy of God is not reverberating through our nature.

Just look at the joy set before us. Let us go down the stream of time. We go back to Moses, for he has a special reference to this subject. Look what is said of Moses in Heb. xi. 24, "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." So, brethren, I think we may infer with perfect truth from the passages quoted that the prospect of reward is a Scriptural one, and also that it proceeds in the power of the Holy Ghost, which can in no way be detrimental to the consecrated Christian. May God teach us what is his reward of consecrated service.

I shall take as a foundation passage Exodus xxxiii. Moses looked, and what a wistful, longing look must that have been. He first of all took up his position without the camp. Israel had sinned; they had made unto them a golden calf. They had brought with them idolatry from Egypt, and the whole nation had fallen down and made themselves naked unto their shame amongst their enemies. Aaron, the priest of the Lord, had been chief in the trespass. Oh, how is it they went so soon away from the God who had been so good to them, and whose praises they had sung on the other side of the Red Sea. "Salvation belongeth unto Jehovah." How is it they went away so soon? Moses had to act in the spirit of separation; he had to separate himself from apostasy, and so Moses takes the tabernacle of the Lord, and he goes without the camp.

Notice how Paul spiritualises that in Heb. xiii. He says these words, "For the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the high priest for sin, are burned without the camp. Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach. For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come."

What does "without the camp" mean? I take it that "without the camp" denotes worldly Christianity, separating ourselves from that which is apostate in our Christianity, separating ourselves from the idols of Egypt in our Christianity, from legalism and bondage, and standing fast in the liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free. Come without the camp. It is a real thing, if you want to be able to understand the blessing Moses got when he took that step. My words will seem nothing but sentimental nonsense to those who have not gone outside the camp.

What did Moses get? "And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the Lord talked with Moses. And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle door: and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent door. And the Lord spake unto Moses, face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."

I think I may say that when you separate yourself to the Lord you begin to understand more clearly than ever the wonderful friendship of the Lord Jesus. The angel who was in the tabernacle met with Moses as a man face to face. Oh, there are such heights in the friendship of Jesus Christ. How is it that we are so lonely? God makes us lonely at times, that we may find the blessed companionship of Jesus Christ. Look what He says in John xv., "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you.” Brethren, it is of the essence of friendship that we should have no secrets, and the Lord Jesus delights to reveal the secret of Jehovah to those who abide in his presence and know his friendship.

Look at the next thing, “Now therefore, I pray Thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, shew me now thy way, that I may know Thee, that I may find grace in thy sight” (ver. 13). So the next thing he learns is the will of God. Jesus is the exponent of the Father's will, and its embodiment. You want to be shown his way. The Apostle Paul prayed that his converts might be filled with the knowledge of the will of God that they might discern evil, and that they might go from grace to grace, being filled with the fruits of righteousness.

There are two or three requisites in order to know the will of God. I have often heard people say, “I wish I knew what to do. I would give a thousand pounds if I could only tell the right thing to do.” I will tell you an infallible way by which you may find out what the will of God is. You will find it in Romans xii. 1, 2, several times quoted in this Conference, “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.”

But let us go on to the next verse. Do not put asunder that which God has joined. “Be not conformed to this world.” Plenty of Christians bolster themselves up with the delusion that they know the will of God, when they have never presented their bodies to the Lord, and when they are still conformed to the world. It is impossible to know the will of God until they do those two things. Give your body, give that tongue of yours to the Lord, and He will take care that you won't utter idle words. “For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account in the day of judgment.” Then, be not conformed to this world, and God will show you very quickly what his will is—for God can do a quick work.

When you consecrate yourselves to the Lord by going outside the camp, the next thing you understand is the glorious light of God which shines and sparkles with Divine beauty. Look at ver. 14, “And He said, my presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest. And he said unto Him, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence.” So the next thing that you have in this separated life is the peace of his presence continually with you. Whenever God is truly present in the heart in power then peace reigns within the soul. I wonder of how many it can be said that we are distinguished from the rest of the world by having the presence of God with us? When we come into contact with some Christians, there is such a blessed influence about them. I do not know what it is. I have seen it in many people at this Conference. The instant I was in their company, there was a feeling of rest. There was a delightful something; and I am quite sure it was the presence of God there that made their presence so delightful.

“Wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight?” Lay that to heart. How are you to be distinguished on earth? Not by popularity, applause, money. Oh, brethren! wherein shall it be known? “Is it not in that Thou goest with us? so we shall be separated (or distinguished), I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth.”

There is something else. Look at verse 18: “And Moses said, I beseech Thee shew me thy glory. And He said, I will make all my goodness to pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of Jevovah before thee.” When we go outside the camp we begin to understand something of the glory of God. Let us see how Paul spiritualises this passage and the next chapter in 2 Cor. iii., which is deeply important (read verses 9—16). How many of us read our Bibles with a veiled heart? If you are still in bondage, if there is still Judaic Christianity about you, the veil is upon your heart. You may know a lot of doctrines, but do you get real joy out of your Bible? People say, “I read my Bible, but it does me no good.” No wonder, if they are living in the world. The veil is upon their hearts. Brother, get an unveiled heart. “For we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. Jehovah is that Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty.” Look at the next chapter. “God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.” Oh, the character of Jesus becomes the joy of your soul. How many dark hearts are there here to-night? Can we honestly say, “God hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ?” Dear brother and sister, is the sunlight of God in your soul? We are going to separate. Soon this great Conference will be over; and will you go away with a dark, black heart, when God has been shining with his glory on so many souls during those three blessed days?

Look at Deut. xi. 18—21: “Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.” You say, “Surely God does not mean us always to be talking about religion? I do not like religious people, who are always quoting verses and having Puritanic phrases upon their lips.” Well, you had better settle it with God. See what He says here; and, if your heart is right with God, there will be nothing so happy a subject of conversation as the Holy Word. It is a bad sign when you have no appetite for the Word of God. “And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thine house, and upon thy gates; that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon the earth.” How many of us know what it is to drag days down from heaven and live them upon the earth!

I think I will close almost with this word; it is nearly the best of them. You will bring great joy to the Father Himself when you separate yourself. How little joy God gets out of us. Give joy to the Father's heart to-night. Why should He still weep over us? Why should you still continue in the far-off land?

Then you will have power with the world. We have an illustration of that in the fifth chapter of the Song of Solomon. The bride is out of union with her Lord, but still her heart is awake, and she is longing for the joy she once experienced, and she says, “I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him that I am sick of love. What is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?” When they see what a grand person Jesus Chris is in your life; when they see that He is a rea power, then they will say, This is a Christ worth having. Oh, I delight to preach a Saviour worth having! And so, if you only recommend the Saviour by your life of separation and consistency, then the world will say it is worth while to seek that Saviour too. And when the poor Greeks, with their pride of culture, and the Jews, steeped in ritualistic observance, come and say, “Sir, we would see Jesus,” your reply will be, “The hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.” You will be a source of glory to Jesus Christ.

I have taken up all the time talking of the rewards in this life; but I know so little of eternity that I am not able to say much about it. I will just give you one verse that will sum it up, “If any man serve Me, let him follow Me and where I am, there shall also my servant be if any man serve Me, him will my Father honour.” There we have two wonderful things. I think we may sum up all the reward of eternity under those two things—identity of position with Jesus, and his servants receiving honour from the Father's hand.

And now brethren, we must part. But my heart is burdened lest there should be amongst you, and I feel certain there are, some dead ones to whom these words are nothing but empty noise, and they wonder what all these people are gathered together for. You remember that when Christ was approaching Jerusalem He beheld the city and wept over it. “If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.” In the enforcement of this closing appeal, Mr. Grubb told, with thrilling effect, of a craft that was on the Niagara River above the Falls, and was in danger of being caught in the rapids. It had come to a bend in the stream that is known, he said, as Past Redemption Point. The current was carrying it along, and there seemed no chance of escape. The man in command felt a breeze strike on his cheek, and, instantly, he gave orders to have all possible sail set. For a moment the craft hovered between the wind and the downward tide; but the sails caught the welcome breeze, and slowly the vessel forged its way upwards, till it again rounded Past Redemption Point, and reached a place of safety. The captain knew the time of his visitation, and acted accordingly. God grant, said the speaker, that you may know the day of your visitation. I beseech you not to leave this hall until you are separated to God. I have said enough; there is no need to say more. God bless us all, and fill us with the Holy Ghost, and make us know the power of Christ's resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, that we may be made conformable to his death; and to Him shall be all the glory.

After a closing hymn, prayer was offered by Mr. J. E. Mathieson and Mr. Blackwood, specific mention being made of those who had taken a public part in the proceedings of the Conference, and praise accorded to God for the bestowal of his grace. Mr. Hankin pronounced the Benediction, and these three days of happy converse and meditation were closed.

[Having furnished in the preceding pages a report of all the morning and evening addresses, we are compelled to postpone our notices of the afternoon gatherings.]

Letters to the Editor.

PRAYER AND HEALING.

Dear Sir,—With reference to "the healing of he sick by the prayer of faith," may I draw your ttention to the fact that the verse Hebrews xi. 34, which in the English version is rendered "Out of weakness were made strong," is in the French version, "Were cured of their sickness" (Ont été guéris de leurs maladies); and in the Italian version, "Were strengthened from their sicknesses" (Furon rinforzati da infermità), by faith (ver. 33).

With regard to this much-discussed subject, I am glad to be able to testify that for more than ten years I have habitually had recourse to prayer only when ill, and have always been cured. I consider t as a simple matter of obedience, and as the privilege of believers thus to live by faith in all the trials of this life, sickness included.

Yours faithfully, M. E. Prinsep.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

Sir,—We are on the eve of another General Election. It will bring with it the usual amount of excited thought and talk. Christians cannot wholly refrain from participation in its affairs; but must it necessarily estrange our hearts from God and his service? Do we not, too often, find that the effect of such a time is a serious relapse into spiritual indifference? To see a danger is to be put on our guard against it, and be moved to action not only to avoid it, but to profit by it. If there is in the exciting events of the next few weeks a special danger to our spiritual life, will it not be well, nay, are we not required, to give ourselves the more to prayer, that we may be proof against any possible baneful influence? In many directions the conscience of Christian men is awakening to the urgent need there is for a revived spiritual life in the Churches. The very peril that threatens us, in the growing, worldly excitement of the hour, may, if recognised and feared, lead to a prayerful watchfulness, and so promote the deepened spirituality of our Christian life.

There is, without a doubt, a serious lack of converting power in the Church. We find ourselves in the presence of a great soul-hunger we cannot satisfy. We are brought face to face with terrible possessions we cannot cast out; and the explanation is in words which the great Master addressed to his disciples when, perplexed by their powerlessness, they inquired of Him how it was; and Jesus answered, "Because of your unbelief; this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

In view of the coming election, might we not give ourselves the more to prayer, that a wise judgment may be pronounced by the great electorate, in the choice of suitable men for the House of Commons; that the too prevalent spirit of rancour and hate, enkindled by political disputes, may be kept out of the churches; that the legacy of these times may not be a strained relationship between members of one Church. In quickened prayerfulness on such subjects, Christian men will find a deepened spirituality, a growing heart power.

For the ordinary tasks of life a man must be in the vigour of health. For the purposes of Christian service the Church must be in the vigour of spiritual power. I view with dismay the forwardness of the Church to do great religious works, unsupported by that prayerfulness of spirit which has always been a warranty of power. Let our ministers and deacons lead the way in an earnest support given to our meetings for prayer, and the people will, doubtless, follow their example. The spirit of waiting on God will be greatly revived, and the much-needed power from on high be received. Isaac Watts.

King's Lynn.

Dear Sir,—The present crisis is a time of great danger to the Lord's people; many on both sides, believing their cause to be right, are tempted to forget that "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God," and that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." Others forget "the arm of flesh will fail you." The need of the Church is more power with God. We need earnestly to pray that the Church may be kept before God, and not swept away in the rush of excitement around us. The servant of the Lord must not strive.. Yours, &c., R.

AN INQUIRY.

My Dear Sir,—I have occasionally heard of generous shipowners who offer to invalid ministers, either a free passage to some foreign port, or a passage at a moderate rate. If you, or any of your readers, can give information on this point, you will greatly oblige.—Faithfully yours,

A Minister.

AT HOME! TO THE POOR.

Dear Sir,—How little the wealthy do for the poor! They hold their money very tight in these days, and keep their beautiful homes all to themselves. I fail to see, if they like to keep their purse strings fastened, why they should keep their houses closed also against the poor.

It does seem so terribly selfish for so many of the wealthy (and I know not a few of them read The Christian) to possess beautiful gardens around their suburban residences and country houses, and simply delight in looking at the choice plants and ground en famille. Some do have garden parties, but then they invite their own clique of friends, who have similar joys at their own homes.

May I urge some of these "comfortable people in Christ" to think of their poorer neighbours, pent up in little houses, crowded out with large families, who would be so delighted to visit them, if not patronised, but made welcome as they should be by his followers. "At homes" are fashionable now, but are they fashionable on the lines Jesus Christ laid down, "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shall be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee." To give an "at home" to the poor of a congregation would brace the heart of many a minister, Sunday-school and Bible-class teacher.

Do the poor ever have "at homes" among themselves? Yes, they do! I was talking with one of our postmen not long ago, and he said, "Last Sunday (for that is the only day my duties allow me to receive them) was the happiest day of the year." And upon inquiring what he meant, he replied, "Once a year I always have the boys of my Sunday-school class to tea, in our little room. It's such a squeeze, but we are all so happy together." I am quite sure that some of the carpets in our West-end mansions and large country houses would be all the better for being walked on. Cannot you call attention to this subject? Why should rich Christians live selfish lives for want of thought, when thousands are pining for kindness and sympathy?—Yours very truly,

John Shrimpton.

UNTEMPERED MORTAR.

Sir,—In a provincial newspaper I find the following announcement: "M—— Coffee-house.—A Tea and Entertainment will be held at the Large Hall at the Coffee House, this day (Thursday), June 17, in aid of the Church Expenses. Tea and Entertainment, 9d.; Entertainment, 6d. Dancing commences at Six o'clock."

This programme is of a piece with several others which have come under my notice. (I was not long ago at a gathering when "Aunt Sally," with her pipe in her mouth, might be seen working for the sanctuary by earning money from a laughing throng at a penny a throw.) Sports of all kinds, raffling, tableaux vivants, dramatic recitations, and comic songs by black-faced minstrels, with banjo accompaniment—all these now are employed for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. Alas! alas! for the worldliness that is over-running the churches of Christ! Can we really suppose that God needs help from such quarters? or can we expect that He will bless such incongruous appliances? We are reminded of the words of Virgil:—

> Non tall auxilio, non defensoribus illis
> Tempus eget.

Those who are cold and apathetic as to a real work of the Spirit of God are all heart and soul to take part in a revival, when it is a revival of frivolity; but where are all the dancers and masqueraders gone when the prayer-meeting is held? It is to be feared that the church that is maintained by funds derived from worldly entertainments will prove to be like a wall built with untempered mortar. The true Church of Christ is not really aided by any such unsanctified methods. The cause of salvation can only be aided by the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the congregation. Will anyone dare to affirm that a prayerless entertainment, a tea-party, and a dance, will lead to such a blessed result? On the contrary, the Spirit of God is grieved by such proceedings; when these dissipations flourish, then vital godliness is damped and extinguished. The hearts of the people of God are distressed, and we believe that the Lord Himself must disapprove.

"But," say those who promote these popular festivities, "the people must have some amusements provided for them, to keep them out of worse mischief, and, moreover, these things win them to take an interest in their church, whereas, if every innocent pastime is frowned upon you will only drive them, and especially the young among them, from religion altogether." True; we may win the people to ourselves, and to our church, but until we win them to salvation and to heaven, what have we gained? God's work can only be done in God's own way. Carnal weapons never yet broke down Satan's strongholds, and they never will. Of all such helps to the maintenance of religion let the faithful Christian say, as David said of Saul's armour, as he put it off from him, "I cannot go in these, for I have not proved them."

I am, Sir, yours, &c., Watchman.

THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD.

Dear Sir,—I cannot see that Mr. Palmer is more successful than those who have preceded him in proving the doctrine of God's universal Fatherhood, or in reconciling it with Scripture.

He maintains that the Scriptural account of man's origin is sufficient evidence that men are, by natural right, children of God. But is the Scriptural account such as he states it? To say that man's soul is not a created thing, but "a spark of God's own being," is more like the language of Pantheism than of Scripture. St Paul, on the other hand, says: "By Him were all things created, that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible." Observe, again, what St. John says; speaking not of the world, but of the followers of Christ: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God." If men were God's children by natural right, it would be no display of wonderful love on his part that He should call them so.

If we duly consider the fact that the name of Only-begotten Son is chosen by God to express the relationship which existed between Himself and the Lord Jesus before the world began; and that when the Lord Jesus spoke of God as "his own Father," the Jews rightly concluded that He claimed to be Himself God; we shall surely see that no inferior being, however innocent, should presume to call himself a son of God, unless authorised to do so by God Himself. Much less has man any natural right to assume this title when, owing to Adam's sin, he is "by nature a child of wrath."

Mr. Palmer, in common with Broad Churchmen generally, represents the Lord Jesus as coming to restore the filial relation between men and God simply by telling them that God was their Father, and inviting them to return. Scripture, on the other hand, tells us that He came chiefly to recover for men, by his atoning sacrifice, the right of sonship which Adam forfeited. If even the Jews who were told by the Lord Jesus that they were of their father the devil, "justly believed" that they were God's children, why did He answer their claim to be so by saying, "If God were your Father, ye would love Me"?

Your correspondent, J. P. C., has already shown that the parable of the Prodigal Son is an insufficient basis for proving the universal sonship of mankind. Besides this, it may be noticed that while the physical fact of the young man's sonship remained, the privileges attached to it were by his own confession forfeited. But in the case of man's position before God, sonship is not a physical fact, but a conferred honour; capable of being forfeited, equally with the rights attached to it. Physically mankind are still God's offspring, but (as I noticed in a previous letter) this term must not be confounded with the higher and more significant terms of "sons" or "children."

Mr. Palmer's explanation of John i. 12 is far from satisfactory. If a king's child were stolen by gipsies, and rediscovered after many years, it would not be a very natural or correct expression to say that he had received power to become the king's son. And observe that in the next verse St. John tells us that those who believed on Jesus were made God's children by regeneration, as distinguished from natural descent. According to the Broad Church theory, everyone who is born of human blood is, ipso facto, born of God. Mr. Palmer quotes one or two verses from Hebrews ii. as favouring his view, but he has omitted the passage which fixes the interpretation of the others: "Both he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren."

I will not take up space by referring to the many passages which a Broad Church theologian must explain away in order to make room for this doctrine of the universal sonship of the human race. I would only ask, How is it that while passage after passage is to be found in which the terms "children of God," or "sons of God," are used, whether of Israel or of the regenerate, as their distinctive honour, not a single passage can be quoted in which the same words are unmistakably applied to the human race in general? And would it be too much to say that, with the Broad Church school, the practice is the exact reverse of this? I would respectfully invite Mr. Palmer, and all Broad Churchmen who, like him, respect the authority of Scripture, to take the trouble of making a complete list of every passage in which human beings are spoken of as children of God, and of carefully ascertaining from the context who the persons in question are.—I remain, truly yours,

Woking, June 18. Horace Noel.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A Partial Sunday Closing Bill is in operation in Sweden.

The Swedish Parliament has voted about £200 in support of temperance organisations.

The Brighton Town Council has refused to allow intoxicants to be sold at the Pavilion concerts.

An Inebriate Home for women of limited means has been opened at Derbydale, near Huddersfield.

Representatives of all denominations have taken part in a recent Gospel Temperance Mission at Rotherhithe.

Open-air temperance meetings are now held regularly on Glasgow Green. Ministers of various churches take part.

Dr. Andrew Baxter urges Scottish temperance reformers to seek the introduction of temperance teaching into schools.

A superior temperance café is to be established at Christiania, to attract classes who will not use the ordinary coffee taverns.

The Secretary of the Middlesex Hospital has calculated that 66 per cent. of the expenditure on alcohol is for its consumption by officials.

At a recent meeting at Oxford, Lady Frederick Cavendish gave striking illustrations in proof of the fact that female intemperance is increasing.

The Roman Archbishop of Philadelphia has announced that all Roman Catholics under his jurisdiction must either abstain from selling intoxicants on Sunday or leave the Church.

Two thousand persons attended a temperance fête in the grounds of Hatton House, Hastings, on Whit Monday. On Whit Sunday, meetings were held on the beach, also one in the Central Hall.

In an appeal case in the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Denman refused to interfere with the discretion of the Hanley Justices as to granting licences for "special occasions."

The National Physical Recreation Society, just formed, is for the purpose of enabling all classes to provide the means of healthy, physical exercise and amusement. Mr. Herbert Gladstone is president.

The most persistent, most overpowering enemy of the working-classes is intoxicating liquor. While the ordinary strikes are ruinous, I proclaim a universal strike against strong drink, which if kept up, will be a relief to the working classes and the salvation of the American nation.—T. De Witt Talmage, D.D.

The National Temperance Federation, at a recent meeting in Exeter Hall, in view of the General Election, called upon all temperance reformers to resolutely refuse to allow the temperance question to be set aside for any other issue. Temperance electors are urged to secure from each candidate for Parliament, as a condition of support, a pledge to press forward "Local Option" Legislation.

WORKING LADS IN WHITECHAPEL.—Last week a meeting was held at the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, in connection with the Swimming Bath being erected for the use of the lads. Lord Brabazon, who presided, and other friends addressed the meeting, warmly advocating the claims of the Institute.

ST. MARY'S HALL, in connection with the Agricultural Hall, Islington, in which for so many years Dr. Thain Davidson has held evangelistic services, was re-opened on Sunday week, having been closed several weeks for renovation. The service was conducted by Revs. Dr. Thain Davidson and E. A. Stuart, Miss Mary Davies was present, and sang two sacred pieces.

BACCHUS IN LONDON.—I think of the car of Bacchus rolling on in front of the Cross, and I bend my head in shame. The ever-encroaching gin palace rears its imposing front with ever-open doors, and its gas and gilding throw your sanctuaries into the shade. No sooner is a plot of land available for building purposes than the most commanding corner becomes at once another cancer rooted in the body-politic.—Rev. J. Jackson Wray.

OUR INDIAN RAILWAYS.

A very earnest appeal was made by an Indian (in costume) at Mildmay, on Friday night last, for some of those present to go out and carry on mission work in the Punjaub. Permit me to inform your readers that the Railway Mission is just now arranging (1) to get tried and proved Christian men on British lines to go out and occupy positions on our Indian railways, and at the same time do missionary work; (2) we are forming a committee in India, composed of Christian railway officials and others, who will work in harmony with the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, with Rev. H. G. de St. Dalmas as secretary; and (3) we hope to send out railway evangelists as God shall enable us. We are also very anxious to send a man to South Africa, to go from station to station and to be associated with our good friend Mrs. Osborne.

If the railway systems in our Indian empire can be properly evangelised, we feel sure it will not only add to the comfort of those who travel, but also be a great means of spreading the Gospel among the natives. The Anglo-Indian Society has done good service thus far, and it is partly from their suggestion, as well as from the constant appeals from railway officials and men on Indian railways, that we feel the time has come to go forward. Men are ready to go, but the means are wanting. I therefore appeal to all your readers to pray for the money to be provided; and if any have it on their hearts to go out at their own expense, Mr. D. Spencer, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., will be glad to hear from them. No doubt there are many who have made fortunes in India who would find it a blessed service to support a missionary in that country. Recently, two railway-men in England, who are now converted, and who were very very wicked men when living in India, have offered to go back and labour for Christ, as well as earn their living. Samuel G. Sheppard.

OPENING OF UNION CHURCH, NORTHAMPTON.

Last Thursday, the new Union Church, St. Michael's-road, Northampton, was opened under remarkable conditions. Indeed, its erection, and the circumstances which led to it are all remarkable. The Rev. Henry Bradford, minister of Prince's-street Baptist Chapel, was practically dismissed for having dared to denounce from the pulpit the alliance of religion and infidelity—the support of the leading Atheist, by professing Christians, on political grounds.

No inconsiderable section of the congregation was, however, anxious to stand by Mr. Bradford, and he courageously set to work to form a new church. Letters of sympathy and support were received from all parts of the country; and in just twelve months £2000 were raised for erecting a new place of worship to be called the "Union Church."

Twelve months ago the foundation-stone was laid by Admiral Sir William King-Hall, and last Thursday the same gentleman presided at the opening. The building has cost £3000, to which the chairman had very liberally contributed. On the day of opening. £150 of the necessary amount was left; but more than that was enthusiastically contributed at the evening meeting.

A striking and very able sermon was preached in the afternoon by Mr. Bradford, whom we regard as one of the Nonconformists of the old school, who stood for God and his truth. We hope in an early number to give his portrait, and somewhat full particulars of his contest for the faith, in which God has unmistakably stood by him.

MR. FRED. C. SPURR has accepted the pastorate of the Longcross-street Baptist Church, Cardiff. He will still engage in evangelistic work as opportunity may be given.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on services in two tents in Aberdeenshire, by the agents of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission; also on a third tent in Banffshire.——For a missionary in great pecuniary anxieties, that the Lord may show him his will and give him strength to do it.——An aged Christian desires prayer for the members of his family, that they may be truly converted to God.——That God's protecting arm may be around two young men during a long voyage, and that He will bless them temporally as well as spiritually.

The Book World.

The Sabbath-School Teacher's Work. By Rev. Robert Duff. 3d. Nisbet & Co. An excellent tract on this important subject.

Her Two Sons: A Story for Young Men and Maidens. By Mr. Chas. Garnett. 2s. 6d. Partridge. An excellent story, giving pictures from the life. There is a healthy ring throughout that will win readers to the spirit of the beautiful life portrayed.

Tasty Dishes at Small Cost. By A. G. Payne. 1s. Cassell & Co. A very useful volume. Though we do not see many new recipes, those given are so sensible and cheap that they are worth repeating in any cookery book that aims at making the culinary art a thing to be understood.

Songs of Gladness: A Hymn-book for the Young. 8d. 56, Old Bailey. We have never yet come across the hymn-book par excellence for the young. As far as this collection goes—(in some respects it goes perhaps too far for indiscriminate use)—it is useful, and will, doubtless, be popular.

My Sermon-Notes. Part iii. Matthew to Acts. By C. H. Spurgeon. 2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. These notes are stimulating in a rare degree. They are a real boon to weary pastors, yet they do not place a premium on laziness. To use them aright requires thought and study. They will be very useful also to Sunday-school teachers and parents anxious to instruct their children in the deeper truths of Scripture.

Remarks on the New Doctrine of the Real Objective Presence, as Propounded by the Ritualists. By John Milner, M.A., F.R.G.S. Third edition. 1s. 6d. Elliot Stock. We welcome a third edition of Mr. Milner's vigorous onslaught on the Ritualistic doctrine of the Real Objective Presence. Its circulation is sure to do good. It shows clearly that the doctrine finds no foundation in Scripture, antiquity, or the writings of Anglican divines, when fairly quoted.

A Missionary Band. Morgan & Scott. This intensely interesting and valuable missionary compilation by Mr. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, which we recently noticed in some detail, has been published in an elegant cloth binding at 3s. 6d.; the edition in paper boards is 1s. 6d. We trust the book will find its way to many a drawing-room table; not to lie there as a receptacle for dust, but to be carefully perused and prayerfully studied. It ought to become a missionary classic.

Mary Stuart: A Sketch and a Defence. By Gerard Daniel. 5s. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. Mary, Queen of Scots, seems to be a subject of perennial freshness to some writers. Mr. Daniel has come under her charm, and buckles on his armour in defence of her character. He makes her out to be more sinned against than sinning, and believes that her many afflictions and long seclusion led her to find solace in the peace of God. He has a good deal to say in support of the position he takes up, and says it in a picturesque style.

The Resultant Greek Testament. By R. F. Weymouth, D Lit., Fellow of University College, London. Elliot Stock. This is an edition of the text of the Greek Testament, formed on the very sensible plan of "exhibiting the text in which the majority of modern editors are agreed," and at the same time exhibiting in the notes all the various headings of Stephens, Lachmann, Tregelles, Tischendorf, &c., &c. It is called "The Resultant Greek Testament," "as exhibiting in a compact and intelligible form the latest results of textual criticism." It possesses moreover this advantage over Scrivener's Greek Testament, which is somewhat on the same plan, that he takes one of the oldest printed texts (that of Robert Stephens' third edition, 1550) for his text, and puts the other readings into the foot-notes; whereas this gives the text which most critical editors believe to be the most ancient and best authenticated, and places the other readings in the foot-notes. It is an attractive and well-printed book, and presents the reader with what may be considered the best authenticated text which can be obtained as the result of modern critical study.

Rest in Trouble. By W. Cameron. 1d. Elliot Stock. The weary and the sad are here pointed to the one source of abiding rest.

The June number of Great Thoughts (6d. Woodford, Fawcett & Co.) may be best described as "a string of pearls at random strung." The extracts are always interesting, and sometimes helpful.

The Crocus Bulbs; A Cup of Water; by Mary Gorges (Partridge & Co.), are two little stories which cannot fail to benefit young people. They teach sound lessons and instil right principles.

My Father's God. By Rev. John F. Ewing, M.A. J. Mackinlay, Glasgow. This sermon preached in Mr. Ewing's own church, deserves a wide circulation. It teaches a great and comforting truth in an impressive manner.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, JULY 4.—I SAMUEL XXVI.

The teaching of this chapter falls naturally into three divisions, which, taken together, are singularly complete and comprehensive. First, we have David's magnanimous action; then its motive—the fear of God—is revealed; and, lastly, we see its outcome in Saul's repentance.

David's action—Had he killed Saul, he would have acted in simple self-defence; whereas in sparing him he risked his own life. Moreover, the slaying of Saul would have been quite in accordance with the best morality of the times. It seemed, as Abishai said (8), as though "God had delivered" his enemy into his hand. Then, too, it needed great resoluteness to withstand the urgency of the brave man at his side who had accompanied him thither at the risk of his life. Lastly, there was everything in Saul's previous conduct to discourage David. Once before he had spared his life (xxiv.), but all to no purpose.

Its motive.—The Lord forbid that I should stretch forth my hand against the Lord's anointed.—Here faith is the mainspring of morality. If reverence for God made David regard Saul, not as he was, but as the Lord's anointed, should not each Christian believer regard each fellow-believer as one "beloved of God," and chosen,—as one to be reverenced for the Father's sake?

Its outcome.—"Then said Saul, I have sinned: return, my son David; for I will no more do thee harm, because my soul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly" (ver. 21). This is a splendid example of the conquering might of goodness—of desperate evil being overcome of good. "Love is stronger than hatred, and love will never yield" Only an act of rare nobility could have humbled proud Saul.

MONDAY, JULY 5.—I SAMUEL XXVII.

1.—In his heart.—Contrary to his usual custom, he takes counsel with himself instead of with God. I shall now perish one day, &c.—Comparing this chapter with its predecessor, we notice one of those contrasts which are as characteristic of Scripture as they are common in actual life. Chap. xxvi. is a page of glory: this, a record of shame. There, faith begat nobility: here, lack of faith, sinful despondency, begat meanness and treachery, till the man of God becomes far less noble than Achish the Philistine. When God's people forget their God they sometimes fall below the level of the ordinary worldling.

2.—And David arose, &c.—This false step, the result of considering circumstances only and without reference to God, led to sad results. Had he remained, he might have saved his country from a terrible defeat. As it was, he only just escaped the disgrace of fighting against her. "His recognition as king of Israel was postponed seven years and a half, at the cost of a civil war, and the permanent alienation of Judah from the rest of Israel. Meanwhile he was involved in a course of pitiable deceit."

8.—Geshurites.—"A tribe, dwelling south of Philistia." Gezrites.—Probably a wandering Arab tribe.

9.—Came to Achish.—Doubtless to pay him his tribute of spoil, according to covenant.

10.—A road.—I.e., inroad or raid. Jerahmeelites.—Descendants of Jerahmeel, great-grandson of Judah.

11.—And so will be, &c.—Read, "And so was his manner all the time he dwelt, &c." Bishop Hall comments thus: "The infirmities of God's children never appear but in their extremities. It is hard for the best man to say how far he will be tempted. If a man put himself among Philistines he cannot promise to come forth innocent."

TUESDAY, JULY 6.—I SAMUEL XXVIII.

2.—Surely thou shalt know, &c.—Whatever intentional ambiguity there may have been in the reply, it was meant to assure Achish of bold and faithful service. It sounds very like a boast. Achish is so pleased with it that, at once, he makes David captain of his body-guard.

4.—The Philistines gathered, &c.—"Having collected their forces for a last grand effort, they marched up from the sea-coast and encamped in the valley of Jezreel."—Jamieson. This was the great battle-field of Palestine, a place where horses and chariots could be employed with effect. In Shunem.—"Now Solam, on the south-west slope of the range called Little Hermon, opposite Jezreel and Mount Gilboa, having the deep, broad valley of Jezreel between, and overlooking the whole western plain of Carmel."

7.—En-dor.—To reach it Saul must pass over the shoulder of the hill occupied by the Philistines. For understanding of the question raised by the account of the scene at En-dor see Dr. Kitto, or almost any able commentator. In Saul at En-dor we have a terrible picture of the godless man in extremity: see Prov. i. 24—30. He had managed to do without God for a good many years, but now he had come to the end of his power. In every man's case the limits of independence and self-sufficiency are soon reached, and then woe to him who has no hope in God. The strange folly of ungodliness is remarkably illustrated by Saul. Unable to trust God, he puts confidence in a witch! Believing himself to be God-forsaken, he seeks help of God's holy servant Samuel! The credulity and folly of unbelief are quite as remarkable in our own day.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7.—I SAMUEL XXIX.

1.—Now the Philistines gathered together all their armies to Aphek, &c.—"The narrative of xxviii. 1, 2 is resumed." Gilboa, Jezreel, Shunem, Endor, are all found still bearing the same names. They lie within sight of each other. Aphek is the only one of the cluster not yet identified."—Hackett's "Scriptures Illustrated."

A fountain which is in Jezreel.—"Probably the present Ain Jâlîd, less than two miles E.S.E. of Zerîn" (i e., ancient Jezreel). "It is a very large fountain."—Robinson.

8.—But what have I done . . . that I may not go fight against the enemies of my Lord the king?—We can find no explanation of this speech, unless it be an example of the depth of deceit into which even good men are liable to fall when, in choosing their own way, they deliberately enter into compromising and entangling relationships. David's duplicity is fully exhibited in contrast with Achish's generous confidence.

This chapter shows us how God sometimes guards his erring people. David had lately brought himself face to face with a terrible alternative. He must either be desperately unfaithful to Achish, his friend and lord, or he must make the almost incredible choice of warring against his own nation. How kind, then, the providence which by means of Philistine jealousies cut the knot of that fearful dilemma! In similar fashion our gracious Lord often sends unsought-for deliverances to save us from some of the more fatal consequences of our folly.

THURSDAY, JULY 8.—I SAMUEL XXX.

1.—On the third day.—"After David's dismission by Achish, not after David's departure for Ziklag."—Keil and Delitzsch. The south.—"The Negeb, or 'South Country,' is the technical name for the district between the hills of Judah and the actual desert. It is a series of rolling hills, clad with scanty herbage here and there. In places there is fine upland pasture, but not a tree nor a shrub to relieve its barrenness. In this district Ziklag was situated." (See Tristram's "Land of Israel.")

6.—Was grieved.—Better, "was exasperated." David encouraged himself.—The reader should compare this with the following and similar expressions in the Psalms:—xviii. 2, 6, xxv. 1, 2, xxxi. 24, xxxiv. 1—8, xl. 1, 2. Also with 1 Sam. xxiii. 16.

9.—Besor.—"Thought to be the stream of the Wady Sheriah, which enters the sea a little south of Gaza."—Sp. Com.

10.—Faint.—The original nearly equals our expression "dead beat."

13.—My master left me.—"A barbarous act, to leave him there to perish, when they had camels in good store, for the carriage of men as well as of their spoil: but this inhumanity cost them dear; for by this means they lost their own lives."—Patrick.

24.—But as his part, &c.—"A striking example of the justice and fairness of David's character, and of his firmness in enforcing such conduct among his fellows."—Sp. Com.

27—31.—Bethel.—Not the Bethel, but Bethuel or Bethul, near Beersheba. South Ramoth.—Site not discovered. Jattir.—Still recognised in the ruins of Attir. Aroer.—Ruins still seen twenty miles south of Hebron. Siphmoth.—Unknown. Eshtemoa, now Semua, with its ancient ruins. Rachal and the cities of the Jerahmeelites and Kenites are unknown; also Athach. Hormah = Zephath, now Zepáta. Chorashan.—Not yet discovered. Hebron, the present el-Khulil. Abraham and Sarah were buried there. Their tombs are preserved with great sanctity till the present day.

Note—(1), The fierceness of David's trial: (a) his awful sorrow for himself and for his men, and (b) his danger—even they were ready to stone him; (2) His splendid faith; and (3) Faith's reward, and the benefits of its trial. He bore it well, so it only made room for larger mercies.

FRIDAY, JULY 9.—I SAMUEL XXXI.

1.—Now, the Philistines fought, &c.—Probably the battle took place on the plain of Jezreel, at the foot of Gilboa, and the mountain was the last resort of the fugitives. The plain was a part of the great plain of Esdraelon, "the great battlefield of Palestine." We refer our readers to Stanley's "Sinai and Palestine," pp. 335—357, for a most interesting description of this plain.

6.—All his men.—His body-guard.—Jamieson.

7.—On the other side of the valley, &c.—"The whole of the northern part of the land of Israel; in other words, the whole land with the exception of Peræa and the tribe-land of Judah, came into their hands when Saul was slain."—Keil and Delitzsch.

9.—They cut off his head.—"The Anointed of Jehovah fares no better than the uncircumcised Goliath, now that God has forsaken him."—Cam. Bible.

10.—The house of Ashtaroth.—"This was doubtless the famous temple of Venus, in Ashkelon, mentioned by Herodotus as the most ancient of all her temples. The placing of Saul's armour as a trophy in the temple of Ashtaroth was a counterpart to the placing of Goliath's sword in the tabernacle (xxi. 9, xvii. 54). Bethshan.—Situated at the extreme S.E. of the plain, on the brow of the descent to Jordan. It had never been taken by the Israelites.

12—Burnt them there.—Burning was not usual among the Hebrews. But in this case the bodies were already mutilated. Perhaps, too, they feared some further insult.

General remarks.—(1) Saul died as he had lived, desperate, hopeless, and unrepentant. His suicide did not avail to shield his remains from indignity. (2) His three eldest sons perished with him. Sin's sorrows are seldom confined to the sinner; his friends, especially his family, usually suffer with him. (3) Note the bravery and rare gratitude of Jabesh-Gilead. They could not forget the awful fate from which Saul had saved them thirty-nine years before.

SATURDAY, JULY 10.—2 SAMUEL I.

1.—Now it came to pass.—"There is no break whatever between the two Books of Samuel, the division of which is purely artificial."—Sp. Com. Originally they were one book.

10.—So I stood upon him.—"It is quite clear that the Amalekite was one of those who came 'to strip the slain' on the morrow after the battle (1 Sam. xxxi. 8), and had the luck to find Saul and possess himself of his crown and bracelet. He probably started off immediately to seek David, and invented the above story, possibly having heard from some Israelite prisoner an account of what really did happen."—Sp. Com.

12.—For Saul, &c.—"David's thoroughly patriotic and unselfish character is strongly marked here. He looked upon the death of Saul, and the defeat of Israel by a heathen foe, with unmixed sorrow, though it opened the way to the throne to himself, and removed his mortal enemy out of his way. For Jonathan he mourned with all the tenderness of a loving friend."—Idem.

18.—The use of the bow.—Omit "use of" and translate, "To teach the children of Judah the Bow." This dirge, or elegy, was known by the title of "the Bow." It was to be learnt by heart and handed down to the coming generation, to the honour of Saul and Jonathan. See Deut. xxxi. 19.

The Book of Jasher.—"The elegy was included in the volume known as The Book of Jasher; or, The Upright. This book is mentioned only here, and in Josh. x. 13. All that can be inferred from the references to it is that it contained a collection of ancient poems, commemorating remarkable events, or great heroes of the national history: so that it formed a 'book of golden deeds' for the instruction of posterity."—Cam. Bible.

21.—Nor fields of offering.—"Not to contribute an offering to the God of Israel, was the greatest calamity that could befal the land."—Sp. Com.

"Not only is there in David's lament no revengeful feeling at the death of his persecutor . . . but he dwells with unmixed love on the brighter recollections of the departed. He speaks only of the Saul of earlier times, the mighty conqueror, the delight of the people, the father of his beloved and faithful friend; like him in life, united with him in death."—Stanley, Lec. ii. 30.

Mission and other Appeals.

Shacklewell Gospel Mission.—Mr. Chas Gull, 4, Stafford-place, Grove-road, Stamford-hill, N., superintendent of this mission, writes: "We are just now in sore need of about £35 to clear off an old balance."

Gospel Services for the very Poor of the Metropolis.—The Committee of the Ragged Church and Chapel Union are anxious to multiply mission services in dark neighbourhoods for the benefit of the illclad and outcast poor of London. Unpaid helpers are ready to testify, but funds are wanting. Will the Lord's people send contributions to Rev. Burman Cassin, M A, Rector of St George's, Southwark, S.E.; or to W. A. Blake, secretary, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross, W.C.

Zenana Medical College, 58, St George's-road, S.W.—The committee make a special appeal for £2000. (1) To enable them to affiliate themselves with a London general hospital. (2) To make some honoraria to their lecturers, who have heretofore given their services gratuitously. (3) To make more complete the various departments of instruction. (4) To assist, more widely than heretofore, candidates who are unable to pay in full the small charge made for board, residence, and instruction.

HE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. Earl of Aberdeen.

er Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

e operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and fant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and irls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers
eetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meet-gs, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or nvalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other encies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents.
dditional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully knowledged by JOHN KIRK, Secretary.
Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every Fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, Queen Victoria-st. (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

THEATRICAL CHILDREN at the Sea-side.—Mr. and Mrs. Courthope-Todd desire to take to Lowestoft this summer some of the sickly and over-taxed little ones who are members of Macready House. Children's Services will be held daily on the sands, so that sea air and spiritual instruction will be simultaneously afforded. Who will contribute—not for a "day in the country," but a week by "God's beautiful Sea." Please send to "Sick Fund, Theatrical Mission Institute, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden."

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—Capt. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of The Christian, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

he Man who Spoiled the Music.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ARRANGED AS A

MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE. By FREDERICK BRETT.

WITH BOTH OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA IN ONE BOOK.

There are many persons who are acquainted with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's quaint and striking tract
"The Man who Spoiled the Music." By the Author's kind permission the story has now been produced a which form it is expected to prove both acceptable and profitable. It is hoped that many who—like "Jack," of om this story speaks—have been too long accustomed to spoil the music in their own hearts and their own homes, d to spoil the music also in the lives of others, may experience the same change of thought, feeling, and purpose ough which "Jack" passed; and then, like him, having learned the New Song, set themselves to work to ng back both music and sunshine into the hearts and lives of all around.

The WORDS of the Hymns of this SERVICE OF SONG may be had SEPARATELY on a Sheet, PRICE ONE PENNY.

Fifty Copies of either Music or Words will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.

MORGAN & SCOTT.

And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

New Edition, complete in One Volume. 1,083 pages.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

By John Foxe. With Twelve full-page Illustrations and Steel-plate Frontispiece. Handsomely bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book."
Christian Leader.

"We most heartily recommend the new edition of Foxe's famous work. It is a wonderful compilation."
Protestant Standard.

"As a complete edition of 'Foxe's Martyrs' this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know."
Primitive Methodist.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"An excellent edition of this famous work."
Footsteps of Truth.

FIFTH EDITION.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE of Roman Catholicism,

WITH INCIDENTS OF CONVENT LIFE.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "The Veil Lifted."

With an Introduction by Rev. Charles B. Tayler, M.A.

"Comment is unnecessary; and we have only to express our satisfaction that this record of personal experience of Romanism should have reached a Third Edition; and also the hope that its perusal may be of use to those who by the practice of extreme Ritualism, are seeking an alliance with that proud Church, which scorns their advances, and will only accept their submission.—The Record.

"With genuine womanly delicacy the authoress unveils the shame, torture, and degradation of that diabolical institution, the Confessional."
Christian World.

Rome, The Murderess.

A Four-page Tractate suited for general distribution.

This Tractate affords new and powerful evidence of the unalterable character of the Church of Rome. The quotations prove that Romanists are as cruel, persecuting, and blood-thirsty as of olden time.

POPERY AND PROTESTANTISM

Brought to the test of God's Holy Word, in the form of

A CATECHISM

BY
Rev. THOMAS PHILLIPS.

EXTRACT.

Q.—What are the claims put forth by, and in behalf of, the Pope?

A.—Supremacy and infallibility; hence the lofty titles assumed by him, such as, "Universal Bishop," "Prince of the Apostles," "His Holiness and Christ's Vicegerent," and hence the awful power exercised by him, namely, absolving from the obligations of an oath, deposing kings, &c.—Pope Pius' Creed, Art. REV. THOMAS CHAMPNESS.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Bacon.)

"A WORD spoken in due season, how good is it!" Such a word, leading to incalculable results, and influencing aright thousands of lives, was that spoken fifty years ago by a saintly Methodist woman to her lodger, Charles Champness. A strike in Essex had brought the latter to Lancashire in search of employment, and while in lodgings at Stockport he was so lovingly and persistently invited by his landlady to go and hear a young minister named George Osborn (now the venerable Dr. Osborn that he consented. This was the beginning of a course of Christian conduct that had a wonderful influence upon the home of Charles Champness. He had three sons who became preachers of the Gospel, and among their converts are ministers and evangelists in this and other lands, whose spiritual children are numbered by thousands.

One of these sons is Rev. THOMAS CHAMPNESS, the Wesleyan Methodist evangelist, and Editor of Joyful News. He pays this touching tribute to his father and mother:—"If I must own any one man as my spiritual father, it is my natural father, whose blameless life and attractive piety was such a charm to his son. All that God has done for me and by me; every soul that I have been permitted to turn to Christ, as well as those I have helped to bear the sure cross which comes to all, I owe to Charles and Mary Champness, who made my early days a time for sowing the seed of which it will take all eternity to reap the harvest."

The boyhood and early manhood of Thomas were spent in Manchester. He began to climb the ladder of learning in the school of an old dame who had a remarkable but most effective way of dealing with refractory pupils. Close by the door of the school was a wooden pump, and in the well below the pump it was supposed lived one who was able to subdue the boy who dared to cross the will of his instructress. When the will of the old dame was opposed, the familiar spirit who lived in the well was invited to bring his bag, which invitation was quite sufficient to reduce to abject penitence and submission the rebellious boy, who, with cries and tears, readily promised "he would be a good boy." Mr. Champness wonders what the Lords in Council on Education would say if they had to send inspectors to such places as that where he and his brothers were taught the mysteries of the spelling-book. The educational advantages of Thomas Champness were limited; but, by the wonderful law of compensation, this very deficiency has only served to develop qualities which are not found in the curriculum of the schoolmaster, and which have made him one of the most powerful and successful evangelists the Methodist Church has ever possessed. He has graduated in the university of human nature; he has been a far more diligent student of men than books; the street, which has been called "the people's parlour," has been his study; and in it he has acquired a knowledge of human nature which is the wonder and envy of men of literary distinction.

A frequent visitor to the home of Thomas Champness in his boyhood was a Methodist class-leader, who with his wife were employed by God to influence the boy's mind in the direction of foreign missions. One evening he showed Thomas a rough picture in the Missionary Notices of Mr. Freeman preaching in Ashanti. The boy was fascinated with the story which he heard, and the man who told it little dreamed that the round-faced lad who listened to him so eagerly would one day talk to that Mr. Freeman on the same African coast, but so it was. This class-leader's wife was one of the first to tell Thomas that she thought the Lord had called him to be his messenger among the heathen.

It was in the year 1857 that he left England as a missionary for Western Africa. In this uncongenial climate he laboured for six years, during which time he buried all his colleagues, and was himself sick nigh unto death. When lying prostrate with fever, all his companions dead, and hearing the attendants say, "He is gone!" he thought, "No, not yet. I can't afford to die. What would the Missionary Society do if I died? Besides, God has sent me here to preach, not to die, and my mother over yonder is praying for me; no, I can't die, I must get better." And so he did. Addressing some young missionaries at a valedictory service, Mr. Champness said, "Make up your mind to live. Many people will tell you, you are sure to die; don't believe them. The Missionary Society wants you to live; the native churches want you to live; God wants you to live, and preach and labour for Him."

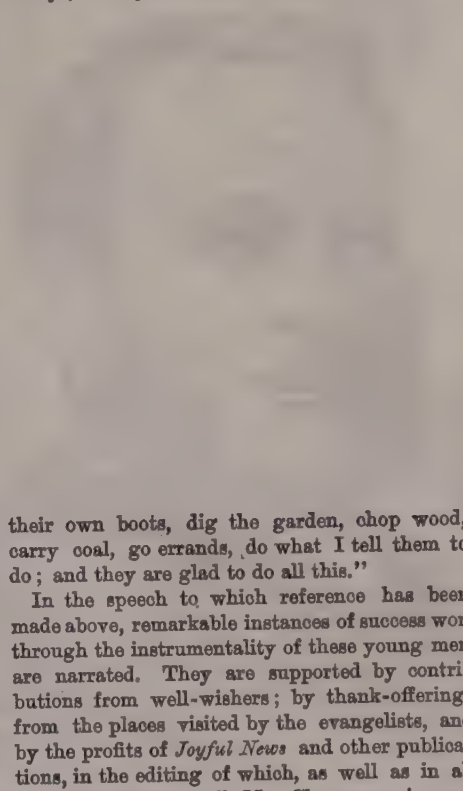
Thomas Champness returned to England wrecked in health, and was for years in a very feeble condition. When labouring in Leeds he completely broke down, and was obliged to take a year's entire rest. By God's blessing his strength was renewed, he regained his vigour and physical power, and became capable of enduring great fatigue. For the past seven years he has been engaged in a work for which he has special qualifications, that of a district missionary. He is as much at home in preaching in the open-air as in the chapel, and though sometimes he goes out alone to this work, he has no difficulty in securing a crowd of listeners. By the use of pictures he attracts the attention of the people, and, having once drawn them together, by a remarkable power of adaptation, and by a magnetic influence equally remarkable, he retains their attention to the end. An unconscious tribute to his power is the way in which a crowd will remain listening eagerly to his utterances, even though rain may be falling at the time. The pictures he uses in these outdoor services represent some incident in Scripture history. The picture is fastened to a cross-piece fixed to a pole, and in the dark evenings it is illuminated by a bull's-eye lantern. Mr. Champness finds this method more attractive than singing, and unfailing to attract a crowd.

In the rules which John Wesley gave to his helpers, he said, "You will have need of all the grace and all the sense you have, and to have all your wits about you." The following incident shows that Thomas Champness has all his wits about him. Going one evening to the market-place at Louth, where he had been accustomed to hold a Saturday evening service, he was rather perplexed to find a Punch and Judy show in possession. Retiring to his rooms, he prayed about the matter, and then sallied forth to explain to the "proprietors of the establishment" that he was accustomed to preach in that place; he admitted that they had as much right to the spot as he had, but requested them to let him have the use of it for a little time, during which they might perhaps give a performance elsewhere. This skilful address produced a great impression on the proprietors. They affirmed that not only would they let Mr. Champness preach, but they would stop and hear him themselves. So he got up, and spoke to the crowd which the Punch and Judy show had collected. At the close of the service, on the principle that one good turn deserves another, the preacher announced, "The performance will commence immediately!"

Having been himself a working-man artisan, Mr. Champness has intense sympathy with the working classes of town and country. This boundless sympathy is one of the great secrets of his success. He loves to talk to his "dear Lancashire people," as he often calls them, in their native Doric. His addresses are full of tenderness and strength; they sparkle with wit and humour; abound in illustrations that tell, and call forth smiles and tears in turn from his hearers. Words of solemn warning too are mingled with the pathetic and persuasive appeals by which many have been turned to righteousness. Thomas Champness is unique, and everything he says bears the stamp of his own individuality.

For years it has been his ardent wish to do something in the way of providing a class of men to evangelise the rural districts of England, over which a great revolution has recently passed. The villagers have become citizens, and the Church begins to recognise in these great changes a call of God to take a deeper interest in the rural populations. The awakening of a new spirit of inquiry and freedom among them is favourable for spiritual work, and it is increasingly felt that the only way to purify the great stream of humanity which is ever flowing towards the large centres of population is to purify the villages, which are the fontal sources to a very large extent. At the recent May Meetings, Mr. Champness delivered a speech on this subject, which has since been published, with the title, "Old Salt in a New Cruse." "You remember what Elisha did," says Mr. Champness. "He took a new cruse, and put salt in it, and he took it to the spring of the waters, and cast it in, and the waters were healed. That is what I want to do. I want to take my new cruse, and in it to carry the Gospel to the man who wears the smock frock." He believes the task God has given him is to increase soon, and very largely, the number of hard-working evangelists in the villages, convinced that only by so doing can the villages of England be evangelised.

Mr. Champness has already seventeen young men at work as Joyful News evangelists, and this number he hopes to increase to a hundred. His house is home and school. These young men receive no salary, but clothes, food, and all necessaries. "They know when they come," he says, "they will have to rough it—to clean their own boots, dig the garden, chop wood, carry coal, go errands, do what I tell them to do; and they are glad to do all this."



In the speech to which reference has been made above, remarkable instances of success won through the instrumentality of these young men are narrated. They are supported by contributions from well-wishers; by thank-offerings from the places visited by the evangelists, and by the profits of Joyful News and other publications, in the editing of which, as well as in all his self-sacrificing toil, Mr. Champness is most ably and nobly assisted by his wife. When in London he narrated an incident relating to his village work, which shows how mighty is his faith. "Of course, we have difficulties," he said, "and I have known what it was to be in straits. The other day, for instance, I was in trouble. Some money of my own which was due had not been paid in, and I was every day expecting a heavy bill for printing and pictures, and I had been paying out largely. I went off to preach with a heavy heart. On the Sunday morning I preached about the barrel of meal. The little children stood up in the gallery to see me scrape that barrel When the service was over, one of our people came to me and said, 'Oh, what a glorious time.' 'Ay,' said I, 'I've been preaching to the man in the pulpit, I am six pounds wrong at the bank.' Then I told my wife. I said, 'My dear, the Lord knows just what we want, it is his work, and every halfpenny I have is his, and if He means to bless this work He will stand by us. Now,' said I, 'I am going to pray, and after that I shall expect the money—every letter I open I shall expect to find the money.' I left home on the Tuesday night, and I said, 'You need not send to-morrow's letters unless there is something important, then you can wire.' 'What do you call important?' says she. 'Oh, if anybody sends me some money.' 'But,' said the wife, 'people are always sending shillings, half-crowns, or a few stamps.' 'Oh,' I said, 'if £100 or £200 comes, then wire!' Well, I kept praying and looking to God; bless you, I knew He would help, and, sure enough, on Thursday morning, about ten o'clock, the boy with that yellow envelope came. My wife had wired: 'Dr. Wood promises you £100.' Well, after that, the tide turned, the money kept coming in, and we have never 'looked behind us' since."

Mr. Champness has published a volume of addresses entitled, "New Coins from Old Gold," and a "Life of Joseph for the Young." He is now issuing a series of "True Tales," in addition to the striking cartoon tracts which he himself designs. Some of these have been enlarged and printed in colours, Mr. Champness believing that we may learn a lesson from those who for the purposes of business or pleasure use attractive placards. A "Placard Mission" has been organised to supply gratuitously those who will place in a conspicuous place these attractive representations of Gospel truths. Applications for these should be made to Rev. Thomas Champness, Bolton.

AT HOME TO THE POOR.

Dear Sir,—Reading in last week's Christian Mr. Shrimpton's letter, "At Home to the Poor," I remembered the old adage, "Example is better than precept;" and would like to stir up some of your readers to act on the capital advice given by telling them what a happy and successful day we had on Saturday week, through the kindness of a family living in this lovely neighbourhood.

They invited a Temperance Society from Homerton, consisting of about forty young men and women, chiefly employed in factory-work, and aged from seventeen to twenty-one, to come to a room adjoining their house. After a charming drive through country lanes we spent the afternoon in Hadley Woods, where some of our lads for the first time heard the song of the birds and saw all the summer beauty of the trees and hedges. Then we returned to our kind friends' house, and were allowed to walk about in their beautiful garden until tea was ready. Although the roses and othe flowers excited not a little admiration and wonder, not one of our rough lot stretched out a finger to pick or touch either flowers or fruit.

I will not attempt to describe the abundant tea prepared by skilful hands and kind, loving hearts. I one thing more than another delighted our town-bred lads and lasses, it was to find that, in additio to the beautiful flowers with which the room wa decorated, a special nosegay had been picked an tied up for each guest.

When tea was finished, our host and his family came in to see us, and the few kind works he spok will long be remembered by the young people, an the three or four teachers who were with them We then went out for a game in the hayfields returning at 8, when we found lemonade and cak ready for us, and, to crown all, a bag was given t each, with orange and biscuits for the retur journey.

We were assured that whatever pleasure we ha enjoyed could not have been greater than that o our friends in receiving us. I am quite sure tha no garden-party to people possessing garden themselves could have given one-half the deligh that this afforded to all concerned, and it wi indeed be a bright spot to look back upon durin the labours of another winter, should we be spare to continue our work. Surely there must be man more Christians living round London who will th summer "remember the words of the Lord Jesu how He said, It is more blessed to give than receive." A Ragged School Teacher.

COINCIDENCES IN LIFE.

BY REV. F. HASTINGS.*

GOD'S hand should be traced in the minutiæ of life. He overlooks nothing that concerns the spiritual interest of a man. Things to us apparently insignificant, are seen by Him to be most important, and those which we think of the greatest import are often only secondary. The Shunammite would see in her meeting with Gehazi, when she went to the king, and in the fact that he was just narrating the facts of the prophet's dealings, an indication of the interest her God still had in her welfare. She could only bow her head in reverence and gratitude. She might have delayed her coming a few minutes or hours, or have come too soon. But, guided by God, she came at the right moment, "as Gehazi was telling the king." The mighty God of Israel cared for her—a poor, lone, rejected, oppressed widow woman. Her houses and lands were speedily restored. The king acted with alacrity. The unjust were rebuked. The removers of the ancient landmarks were punished. The land-filchers were frustrated in their scheme. The defrauded were recompensed. Justice was done. The woman of Shunem could only exclaim, "Truly there is a God that judgeth." "He is a father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow." And all who are in any trouble, sorrow, perplexity, or who have to suffer through the wrong-doing of others, may always be sure of access to the King of kings, and of the fact that there is an Advocate with the Father.

The Bible is full of hints of the special working of God. The silver thread of Providence runs through the whole. Noah arises at the most suitable time to build the Ark, and preserve the race; Abraham to preserve the knowledge of the One God; and Joseph, by arrival of the Ishmaelites, to save a nation from famine, and keep the covenant people from extinction. Moses, by the coming of Pharaoh's daughter to the right spot, and at the right moment, was saved, that he might lead forth God's people, and give laws that should be the foundation of justice for the ages to follow. Saul came just as he was waited for by Samuel. A shepherd boy comes at the right moment to rebuke a Goliath. The arrow drawn at a venture by an obscure soldier strikes an Ahab, and fulfils the Divine word. Christ is born in the fulness of time. Simeon comes in at the right moment to see the salvation of Israel. So when Gehazi is speaking of the Shunammite, she, in her dire distress, appears and gains that which she seeks.

Christ taught us that the very hairs of our head are numbered, and that not a sparrow falls to the ground without the Divine notice. He spoke of his hour as not being come, and then of its being come, in all indicating this fact, that there is special Divine action in individual lives, and the choosing of suitable periods for that action.

Since Christ's death all history shows that God has been working for the welfare of men and the advancement of his kingdom of goodness in all hearts. Men specially fitted for great works are born at different periods. When the state of the Church has seemed darkest, men have arisen as beacon-lights for its guidance. Our God has not yet forsaken the helm of the world's affairs, nor does He now allow it to drift like a rudderless hulk. The great Father has not laid down the reins of Government over the world, and He will never lay them down. He sitteth above the heavens. He ruleth among the armies of heaven and the children of men. All things work his will. All things shall converge towards this great end. Everything, even that which seems most adverse—as with the Shunammite woman seeking her lands—shall coincide to the restoration to Christ of all the kingdoms of the world. His right it is to reign. The usurpers shall not only have to give up their usurpation, but shall have to do homage to Him who hath brought in victory. As the king gave command that all that belonged to the Shunammite should be given back, and all arrears paid, so the world owes a long arrear of gratitude to Him who has borne with it, and shall yet see how great and righteous a claim is that which Christ has to its service, and shall seek to repay, although it will never be able to do so adequately.

Now, although we believe in the converging of circumstances under the direction of God, and although we urge upon all the need of looking for Divine direction, and of following the indications of his providence, we would also utter a warning against always looking for coincidences to guide us in every circumstance. We might err, and be only leaning on an arm of flesh. It is always best to do that which the heart suggests when acting under the consciousness of earnest prayer to God. We may not look for signs. We are to act as though all depended on ourselves, but, at the same time, rest in God's power by simple prayer.

Sometimes there is a convergence of misfortunes, a coincidence of sorrows. We have a familiar saying that misfortunes never come singly.

There are periods that try faith severely. A man may lose his situation, fail in business, be called upon to pay some guarantee for one he trusted, and have at the same time wife ill, and children stricken down with fever. Or he meets with some accident and is prostrate. Wave of trouble succeeds wave, until it seems as though there were no more to come, and he exclaims, "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me." Well for him if at such times he, like the Shunammite, seeks help from the King, and lays hold of that mercy which is never withdrawn from the most erring, or fails the feeblest. Well for him if he has wisdom not to see in these trying circumstances tokens of displeasure and wrath. Well for him if he can see that as when the sparrow falls to the ground it is not because it has offended the great Father, but because it has run its course, and that thus he, although suffering, is still cared for. Well for a man, then, if he can see the clear shining over and above the dark cloud, and if he can take the chastening as tending only to purify and conform him to the image of God's Son.

Some might say that the coincidence we have considered is exceptional; but, as we have shown, the Bible is full of hints as to the special working of God. We see, then, that we have reason to trust God, and that we should look for the manifestation of the Divine working in our lives. We see, also, how far-reaching and beneficent is the effect of a good life. It was because Elisha had done good that it was spoken of. Long after a kind deed was performed it bears fruit. The mention of it bears on the interests of an oppressed suppliant and a defrauded youth. So our acts may be useful if we live aright. We see, too, that we should not hesitate to speak of any benefit we have received, but be ready to show our gratitude. We see also how we ought to be led to inquire as to whether these words, "as he was telling the king," may not apply to us in a spiritual sense. Some are praying specially for friends, and while they are supplicating the Heavenly King, He is already preparing to grant the request. He overtakes our desires and forestalls our prayers. We see, further, how souls are led at the right moment to the place where the Heavenly King sits, and where they will hear that which will benefit and lead to the acquirement of privileges greater far than those which came to the widow and son of the Shunammite in the restoration of their inheritance.

BIBLE STUDIES.—21.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

(1) The Shepherd leads the sheep to pasture. "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures" (Ps. xxiii. 2). "In the days of famine they shall be satisfied" (Ps. xxxvii. 19. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them" (Jer. xv. 16). "He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" (Luke xxiv. 27).

(2) Supplies with water. "He leadeth me beside the still waters" (Ps. xxiii. 2). "They thirsted not when He led them through the deserts" (Isa. xlviii. 21). "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst" (John iv. 14).

(3) Specially tends the weak. "He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young" (Isa. xl. 11). "He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust" (Ps. ciii. 14). "A bruised reed shall He not break, and the smoking flax shall He not quench" (Isa. xlii. 3). "God is able to make him (the weak in faith) stand" (Rom. xiv. 1, 4).

(4) Protects from evil (1 Sam. xvii. 34, 35). "Your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Pet. v. 8). "I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about" (Zech. ii. 5). "He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock" (Jer. xxxi. 10). "The Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil" (2 Thess, iii. 3). "My sheep . . . shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand" (John x. 28).

(5) Watches by night (Luke ii. 8). "He that keepeth thee will not slumber" (Ps. cxxi. 3). "I will keep it night and day" (Is. xxvii. 3). "He hideth Himself . . . that I cannot see Him: but he knoweth the way that I take" (Job. xxiii. 9, 10.

(6) Knows each individually. "He calleth his own sheep by name" (John x, 3). "I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine" (Is. xliii. 1). "He shall bear their names before the Lord upon his two shoulders . . . and upon his heart" (Ex. xxviii. 12. 29). "The very hairs of your head are all numbered" (Luke xii. 7).

(7) Seeks the lost. "What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost until he find it?" (Luke xv. 4). "I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick" (Ezek. xxxiv. 16). "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke xix. 10).

8. Lays down his life.—"The Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. I lay down my life for the sheep" (John x. 11, 15). "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down his life for us" (1 John iii. 16). "He loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20).

"Was there ever kindest shepherd
Half so gentle, half so sweet,
As the Saviour, who would have us
Come and gather round his feet?"

FLOWERS FOR THE SICK.

DEAR SIR,—The great distress which has hung over us like a pall for some six months (and which, through the aid of your kind readers, I have been able greatly to relieve) has brought about various epidemics and much sickness.

Whilst doing what one can to relieve them, I am deeply anxious to send a little sunshine into their sickrooms by placing flowers on their tables, &c. The very changeable weather on these hills, together with the sulphurous gases from the works, prevents any nice flowers being cultivated. I should, therefore, be very grateful if any Christian friends would kindly send me a hamper, so that I might be able to distribute them among the sufferers, accompanied with appropriate portions of the Word of God.

Gospel texts on cards will be also gratefully received.—Yours in our risen and coming Lord,

Broad-street, Blaenavon, PASTOR O. TIDMAN.

Questions on the Spiritual Life Answered.

On the first two afternoons of the Conference, meetings were held in the large hall, at which questions that had been sent in, bearing on the Christian life, were answered by various friends. Mr. H. F. Bowker presided on both occasions, and the large attendance indicated the deep interest felt. Lack of space compels us to condense the replies.

REV. E. H. HOPKINS.

.—Please explain the passage, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." With reference to service, does it mean that if the Lord gives a message you will find it easy to deliver; or if He opens a path of service it will be easy to take it?

A.—One thing seems clear: that we may have the Spirit of God and yet know very little of liberty. There are many Christians who are in bondage. Where the Spirit is dwelling in the heart, not so much as a Reprover as a Comforter, and is not grieved, there will be liberty. We need liberty for our minds, our consciences, and our wills. He gives liberty to the mind by bringing home the truth; to the conscience, by the application of the blood that speaketh peace; to the will, by implanting that love that makes all things easy. Where the Spirit thus dwells and works in the believer he is enabled to realise the truth of the words "Whose service is perfect freedom."

REV. J. B. FIGGIS.

Q.—"My sheep hear My voice." How?

A.—I suppose we shall take no word to be the word of Jesus to us which does not correspond with the words of Jesus given to us of old in the Scriptures. Go back and you will find an older revelation even than the Bible—conscience. We may be quite sure nothing is right that is not according to the dictates of conscience. We may even say that nothing is right that is contrary to common sense. God is the author of the Bible, of the conscience, and of common sense, and He cannot contradict Himself.

Q.—"I will guide thee with mine eye." What does this mean?

A.—The first thing we have to settle is: Do we want God's guidance? If we do we shall get it. How often our way has been hedged up and we have been prevented from doing this, that, or the other thing, and we have found afterwards that there has been real guidance given. Nehemiah said, "I prayed to the God of heaven, and I said to the king." Let us be careful to imitate him in this. One of the greatest mistakes we can make is to look this way and that when we ought to be looking only to God. We read in the New Testament of "walking circumspectly." I am glad that has been altered in the Revised Version. It really means "walking accurately"—looking unto Jesus. Do not take your eyes off Him, and then you will be guided.

REV. THEODORE MONOD.

Q.—Is it not easier to be separated from the world than to be separated to God; and is there not considerable danger of our mistaking the former for the latter?

A.—Well, I suppose it is easier to say that one is separated from the world—to build a wall, visible or invisible, between oneself and the world—than to be truly separated to God. But every kind of separation from the world is not Christian separation; of course not. It may be merely that kind of piety of which the Apostle speaks in the Epistle to the Colossians. You remember that in those days there were some who thought they had a very high spirituality; they had a voluntary humility—the worshipping of angels, and so on. And they went further than the law of God went. They told men to touch not, taste not, handle not; don't do this, don't do that; don't go here, don't go there, and so forth. The Apostle speaks of them as being "vainly puffed up by their fleshly mind;" that must have been an astonishment to them. After all, said he, you are carnal—you are your own masters;—that is being carnal, to be one's own master. They regulated their life as they thought best, not as God thought best. They did not go to God for guidance continually.

Therefore we cannot separate these two things; we must take them together—consecration to God, and separation from the world. As we were told this morning, the key-note to the whole subject is given in Leviticus xx. 26, "Ye shall be holy unto Me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine." There is no being holy, except unto the Lord. We have the same thing in the New Testament. Take, for instance, Acts xiii. 2, where we have consecration for special service. Who chose the servants? "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate Me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Again, in Titus ii. 14, we have another of those root passages: "Jesus Christ, who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people." The Revised Version has it even stronger than that; the last clause is there rendered, "a people for his own possession." That is separation; that is consecration. It is belonging to God, admitting that we belong to God, consenting to belong to God, and living for God.

If we are not thus separated to God, we are not separated from the world at all. We have a world within ourselves, and that is worldliness still; a kind of pious worldliness you may call it. Every man has a master, whether it is himself, or the world, or the devil, or God. If you have not God for your master, you have another master; you cannot avoid that. And if you are your own master, you have not God for your master: "no man can have two masters."

Then, if you are not separated to God, you are not free. That seems strange; but it is so. If we are separated to God, we are in freedom at once. The life of obedience is the life of liberty. "His service is perfect freedom." And so, when our friend asks whether it is easier, I say it is not easier; it is much harder—it is very difficult to pretend to separate yourself from the world, if you do not separate yourself to God. Because then you are in bondage to your own rule, or to somebody else's rule, whether it is a director of some kind, or somebody who is your superior, or public opinion in your own little Christian circle. You are afraid to do this or that, because Mrs. So-and-so or Mr. So-and-so disagrees. You are a slave. You are full of scruples, and you dare not call your soul your own. (It is not your own, surely; but neither is it Mrs. So-and-so's. It belongs to God.) When you have to answer only to God you are a free man; you can move about with ease. All things are yours as soon as and as far as you are Christ's. You must not be the slave of men, or of the notions and rules of men. In Romans xiv. the Apostle shows us the rule with regard to God's people. There are those who look in different ways at the same practical question. One thinks he may eat all things; another who is weak eateth herbs. One esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Whatever the question in point may have been, they acted in entirely opposite ways, and yet, strange to say, the Apostle asserts that both may have been acting "unto the Lord." "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself; for whether we live, we live unto the Lord, and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's." Whether we are at our work, or our leisure, or our rest, it is for the Lord. Ah! says one, it is for me to judge whether you are doing so or not. But what says the Apostle? "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth."

REV. C. A. FOX.

Q.—What is meant by being kept from sinning?

A.—Turn to 1 John iii. 6: "Whosoever abideth in Him sinneth not." There we have a plain, decisive statement, that everybody who abideth in Christ does not sin. Therefore we have this plain inference that it is through abiding in Christ that we are preserved from sinning. We also read in Rom. viii. 2; "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Again, in chapter vi.: "Our old man is crucified with Christ that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin;" and again, "Sin shall not have dominion over you." "He that is dead is freed from sin." All these are very clear, but the question is, Is it a reality, or is it only a hope, an expectation, which is to be disappointed? I believe that living without sin depends on two things especially,—on the faithfulness and justice of God, and the abiding in Christ. We read in the Epistles over and over again that God is faithful who hath called us to the fellowship of his Son. Is it the intention of God faith should be an imperfect fellowship? We read again that if we confess our sins God "is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Again, He is faithful, and will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to bear, but will in every temptation make a way of escape. Once again we read, "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it." So we see that our being kept from sinning depends on the faithfulness of God. On the other hand, there is this point, that we must keep in mind always, that being preserved from sinning depends upon our abiding in Christ. In order to this abiding there must first be a full committal of all to Him—not a part yielded up, and the rest retained for our own uses. Then there must be continual submittal to God in all things of the common life. There must also be a holding fast of that which is committed to us (2 Tim. i.) All this we do by the power of the Holy Ghost dwelling and abiding in us. Thus abiding in Christ, He keeps us, moves in us, and enables us to will and to do of his good pleasure. Day by day, hour by hour, and moment by moment we are preserved from sinning, to the glory of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

answered a somewhat similar question as to whether there is any statement in the Bible that sin is entirely taken out of the believer during his pilgrimage on the earth. The gist of the reply was that when we bring ourselves to the standard of moral perfection which Christ presents to us, no man dare say that sin is taken out of him. But Christ's miracles of bodily healing are typical of the healing which He is able and ready to do for the maladies of the soul. He can cure us of every evil habit if we will but come to Him in faith, and place ourselves in his hands. We read in 1 John iii. 9: "Whosoever is born of God . . . cannot sin." Cannot! That does not mean that it is impossible for him to fall into sin, but if he is born of God sin is a thing that is altogether foreign to his renewed nature.

REV. H. WEBB-PEPLOE.

The question committed to Mr. Webb-Peploe was one that related to the daily life of the believer—whether in the matter of dress, expenditure, deportment in the home, the use o time, &c., he ought to reckon all these things a wholly and entirely consecrated unto God. In the course of a somewhat lengthy reply, the speaker urged that as to dress and ornaments Christian women (who were chiefly concerned ought to be modestly attired, according to thei station in life, and in such a way as should no attract to themselves any special attention o that score. He was emphatically strong in deprecating all slavish following of "the fashions," especially Parisian fashions. In this, as in othe things, the real test to apply is, that we shoul do all to the glory of God, and not for self gratification. The same rule applies to expenditure, conduct in the home, and our use of tim

All are God's; not a tithe, or a twentieth, or any other proportionate part, and all should be spent or occupied for Him, as his word and the guidance of his Spirit may dictate.

Under the Mulberry Tree.

Who that has ever sat under this old tree in the West Garden on a sunny afternoon in summer, during the Conference time, can ever forget it? The sun, declining from the meridian, shines clearly through the delicate green leaves, all the more beautiful by contrast with the dark, rugged bark from which they spring. In the absence of a meeting, the quiet hum of voices is heard from those similarly seated, or promenading over path and lawn; and while a meeting is in progress the volume of sound in united song, or the force of earnest pleading in speech or prayer, fixes the spot more abidingly in the memory. It is undoubtedly the favourite place of the frequenters of the Conference when the weather is fine.

TEACHING BY PICTURES.

The first gathering on the afternoon of the opening day was drawn to see Mr. Kirkham's famous picture of "The Broad and the Narrow Way," which he expounded for the 684th time. Major Liebenrood, who presided, told how he had kept up the interest of an audience on the race-course at Northampton recently by describing the picture to the imagination (for he had not a copy); and how Mr. Kirkham had the undivided attention of a large audience in the old theatre in the same town, while describing the copy they then saw before them. This copy is nine feet wide by twelve feet long, and was painted in dulled oils, by Henry Bevis, the scene painter, of Pentonville-hill; it is well suited for open-air exhibition, though it is usually shown indoors.

Mr. Kirkham began by saying that the picture was designed by Mrs. Reihlen, the wife of a wealthy merchant in Stuttgart, between thirty and forty years ago, and was painted by Mr. Walker, an amateur artist, also residing in Stuttgart. On returning from Holland in 1868, where he had been preaching to the Dutch by interpretation, Mr. Kirkham brought home a copy of the Dutch edition from which his lecturing copy was painted. In 1883 an English edition was produced, which has since had a large circulation.* The first part described was a general foreground, occupied by persons of high and low rank, preparing to set out in one direction or the other. A guide-post, an open Bible, a preacher, and a parable in nature, with the ten commandments in the centre, were the chief things noted here. On each side of a wide gate the worship of Venus and Bacchus was represented. Inside the gate was a crowded way, where the theatre, the gambling-house, the Sunday train, and other things were seen, at the end of which was seen the balances of unerring justice and the doom of the wicked. On the other side of the picture was seen a low, narrow door, inside of which was seen a cross, from the foot of which a fountain of living water gushed. Near by was a church, and on the road appeared a Sunday-school, deaconess house, hospital, tent, open-air preaching, a prodigal restored, conflict with a lion, and at the end the New Jerusalem, while over all is seen the eye of the Triune Jehovah.

The large crowd listened for an hour with undivided attention while the meaning of the picture was unfolded, and at its close it was felt that the Conference lesson of separation had been most clearly set forth in parable.

FOR QUEEN AND COUNTRY.

Immediately at the close of the Dutch picture lecture, a "prayer-meeting for our country and rulers" was held. Mr. Miles Macinnes, M.P., was announced to preside; but was unable to be present; so his lack of service was supplied by Mr. Robert Paton, who read part of 2 Tim. ii. Prayer was offered by several persons in different parts of the crowd. No one can doubt the importance of the crisis through which this country is passing at the present time, or the need of fervent prayer; but it is difficult out in the open air, with a strong breeze blowing, to obtain the quiet solemnity so necessary for such an exercise. But the old tree, if it could speak, would testify that under its shadow some of the most fervent petitions ever heard have been offered, and that every part of the globe, and all forms of Christian work, have been the subjects thereof.

DR. BARNARDO'S WORK.

The announcement that Dr. Barnardo would speak of "Rescue work among Waifs and Strays," coupled with magnificent sunshine, drew together on the afternoon of the second day a crowd so large that the Doctor's voice, not at its best, was taxed to make them all hear. Rev. George Savage presided. Dr. Barnardo, who spoke for an hour, began by reminding his hearers that it was now nearly twenty-one years since he commenced his work in the East of London. He touched on the deeply perplexing problems of the social condition of the poor, and asked, What were its roots? specifying drink and overcrowding as the deepest. He then recalled attention to the magnitude of London, a city without parallel for size in the history of the world. The condition of the people was such that thousands of children had no chance of success owing to their surroundings. In answer to an imaginary objection that such work as that in which he was engaged put a premium on vice, he said that the Church of Christ was bound to act without waiting for a solution of the difficulties to which he had referred.

Coming to the direct question: "What do our institutions do for the destitute?" he prefaced his reply by the assertion that, however hard and indifferent men might be, there was a tender place in the heart for a child, i.e., the work in which he was engaged appealed to humanity as a whole. He then related two midnight searches for children, on the 6th and 8th of last January, a time of snow. They were also able to save children from cruelty. in illustration of which he related the story of a half-starved crippled girl. Then he rather startled his audience as to the magnitude of his work by stating that he had received last year 1111 new cases! Figures multiplied rapidly. Two parties of about 200 children each had already been sent off to Canada this year, and 200 more would go in July, making 600 altogether. He had now sent off 7986 children—viz., 2176 to Canada, and the remainder to different parts of England. Of those sent to Canada only five boys had failed, and not one girl. The mention of Canada led the Doctor to wax eloquent in speaking of its receiving capacity. "There are millions of acres never yet trodden by the foot of man," of which he had secured 4700 in the Red River Valley, west of Winnipeg, on which to form a settlement for his Industrial Home lads, 130 of whom were now in the East London Home.

No one could have listened to the Doctor's story without deep emotion, and from time to time the visible tear testified to the strength of the invisible feeling, and doubtless, as the meeting broke up, many secretly resolved to send help to feed, clothe, and educate the 1600 rescued ones at present in the various Homes.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

On the closing day of the Conference, the subject of "Open-air Preaching" was considered, The Chairman, Surgeon-Major Robert Pringle, read an extract from the diary of Mr. John MacGregor, relating to the formation of the Open-air Mission thirty-three years ago.

Rev. Charles Neil, vicar of St. Matthias', Poplar, illustrated parochial preaching by relating how he had open-air services twice a week at the Bedford Mound in his churchyard, and that these services had proved a benefit by uniting the congregation, bringing fresh people to church, and finding out new open-air preachers.

Mr. J. W. Godfrey, who led a Gospel choir, which sang very effectively between each speech, said it consisted of the North Evangelistic Choir, which had taken 187 services of song last year, the South Evangelistic Choir, which had taken 115, the North-west Evangelistic Choir, and others. All were formed for singing the Gospel, and aiming at direct soul work in connection therewith.

Mr. Gawin Kirkham, secretary of the Open-air Mission, gave the closing address, on "Some Elements in successful Open-air Preaching." He put Compassion first. The tendency of open-air preaching was to produce an iron Christianity in the preacher himself. But there must be compassion for the souls of the lost, even as Jesus was moved with it. Ability was put next. Yet that ability was as much an acquisition as a natural gift. Even great preachers had often failed at first. The voice, too, the preacher's capital, was developed by doing the work. Attractiveness was necessary. Music, and song, and lamps might all be legitimately used, but the power of attraction must chiefly be in the preacher. There must also be Appropriateness. Times and seasons would suggest topics, and the Bible was full of open-air texts. 1 Sam. ix. 27 was quoted as an illustration. "Stand thou still awhile" was for the people: "that I may show thee the word of God" was for the preacher. Knowledge was essential. Knowledge of human nature, knowledge of the art of preaching, but above all, knowledge of the Bible. Conviction was also insisted upon, i.e., the preacher must speak with the accent of conviction. He must speak because he believes and because he knows. And Perseverance was indispensable. Many began this work, but few continued it. The weather, the voice, want of co-operation, and other things discouraged many men. Mr. Kirkham urged that while the fine weather lasted people should begin this street work, and they would become so enamoured of it that they would be unwilling to cease even amid the snows of winter.

Meetings in the Tent.

PRAYER FOR ISRAEL.

On Wednesday afternoon a prayer-meeting for Israel was presided over by Dr. Laseron. Passages were read from Mal. iii. and Ezek. xxxiv., giving the assurance that the promises of God to his ancient people could not fail of fulfilment. The prayers offered were fervent and to the point; one by Mr. Radcliffe was marked by extraordinary earnestness. The intended circulation of 100,000 copies of the New Testament among the Jews on the Continent was specially remembered.

Dr. Laseron remarked on the ridicule with which the idea of the Jews' restoration to Palestine was treated some years ago: but what do we see now? They are at the present time learning all the languages of the known world, and thus are being prepared for the missionary work that is before them. In our prayer-meetings, Indians and Hottentots were often remembered, while the Jews were forgotten. Requests for praise were mingled with intercession, and the readiness of the Israelites to hear the Gospel was gratefully acknowledged. Medical Missions were also earnestly commended to the Lord; also Dr. Young's work in Rome.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

At the prayer-meeting in the tent on Thursday, the special topic was "Prayer for Missions." A large number of requests were read. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided and led off the meeting with his accustomed warmth. Rev. John Wilkinson prayed that the Christians in England might be led to feel heavily the burden of foreign missions, and to know that on them lay the responsibility of sending the Gospel all over the known world. Other friends followed. A missionary from Central Africa asked for the preservation of the missionaries in Uganda from the hand of the assassin. Dr. Baedeker said it was not becoming that redeemed men and women should stand idle in the midst of a perishing mass of heathen. He trusted that God would send the bread of life into Germany and Russia. Miss Child prayed for the heathen in Ratcliff-highway, and also for the missionaries present who would soon be on their way to the foreign field.

* Copies may be had of the publishers, Morgan & Scott, 1s. each, and the explanation 1d.

Mr. Radcliffe, in the midst of his fervour, called for ejaculatory prayer from many; immediately, petitions burst forth from all over the tent, the sisters being rather more prominent than the brethren. The twenty-eight millions of Italians were imploringly commended to God by Mr. Clark of Spezzia, and China was remembered by another. A Salvation Army brother prayed that God would bless everybody.

Mr. Radcliffe said many were ready to go into the foreign field, working for their livelihood and serving God in spare hours. It was becoming a serious matter, and great wisdom was needed to handle the matter aright. A brother of the martyred Bishop Hannington was about to go forth to the place where his brother was martyred. Let them pray that God would brush out a good many from Mildmay who ought to have gone long ago. Then there was the Chinese opium traffic to be thought of. That alone was enough to account for the dark clouds that had long hovered over England, in the way of depression of trade, &c.

HOW TO DEAL WITH THE ANXIOUS.

This was the subject for consideration immediately after the communion service on Friday afternoon. An address was given by Mr. Charles Inglis, suggesting that a spirit of discernment was needed relative to each case, with much tact, and patient dealing. Mr. Spencer Walton said the chief qualification was being filled with the Holy Ghost. He had found that no good came of arguing with infidels; the best thing was to tackle them about their sins. The chief difficulty met with by Mr. Hucklesby was the complaint, "I can't realise that I am saved." He had found that John v. 24, expounded clause by clause, with the inquirer's assent to each, had led many to apprehend clearly the simplicity of believing unto salvation.

The tent was crowded and more than one speaker directed his remarks to any inquirers who might be present. A thorough acquaintance with the Scriptures, the getting of the anxious one upon his knees before God, the need of the worker abiding under the Gospel's power himself, with fervent prayer that the Lord would qualify and teach them, were among the points referred to. A gentleman from Norwich gave his experiences of success in winning souls in railway carriages and among sailors.

[We are obliged to defer till next week some further Afternoon Gatherings, and Mr. Fox's address on the second afternoon.]

After the Conference, What?

Did not this question come to many of our hearts as we withdrew from the blessed fellowship at Mildmay? And was there not an inward determination that by God's grace the outcome of the Conference should be felt to the ends of the earth. We have humbled ourselves before God; we have afresh "Nazarited" ourselves to Him. If our consecration meant anything, shall not the Agags be had in and hewn in pieces before the Lord? Shall not the Goliaths be slain? Shall not the Lord be so "found" in his "temple" that the Dagon of self shall now and ever fall before Him? Then we must show it by conquered tempers, gentle bearing of the petty daily annoyances, hearty engagement in home duties; by steady persistence in the right course against all odds, by converted houses, drawing-rooms, gardens, purses; by consecrated sons and daughters to go where God calls for them. The Lord has claimed us, and we have admitted his claim; we are now individually responsible to be utterly his.

Some of his children from the humbler classes are offering themselves for foreign mission service; shall there not also be many from the upper ranks of life among us who shall lay ease, luxury, wealth, talents at the feet of Jesus; who shall forget their own people, their father's house, to go to those in darkness? By June, 1887, may many have exchanged the privileges of the Conference time for the greater privilege of a more lonely post among the heathen. So shall we prove that our hearts were true and that it was no solemn farce in which we took part the other day at Mildmay. F. B.

For the Young.

A LETTER FROM BARBARY.

BY MR. WILLIAM MACKINTOSH.

If some of you were asked where Morocco is, you would, perhaps, find it difficult to tell. So little is known about it, and so little interest has been taken in it, that one would have thought it to be the most distant country in the world, as well as the least inviting. But in real fact the reverse is the case. It is so very near—only four days' sail from Land's End—that people cannot travel by sea towards the south or east to any other part of the world without passing very near its coast. You have heard of the "Pillars of Hercules"? Well, one of them is in Morocco, while the other is now the famous British fortress of Gibraltar. They are two great, rugged mountains rising up precipitously just at the narrow inlet from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean. They stand opposite each other, and hold such a commanding position that the idolatrous and superstitious ancients might well have pictured their supposed protector as standing with one foot on the summit of Gibraltar and the other on "Apes' Mountain," or Jebil Mûsa, as the people of Morocco call it, so that all ships going in or out would have to pass underneath him.

There are people in Morocco who used to be, before the days of steam, pirates, or sea-robbers—robbing all the ships which they could catch, and sometimes killing or making slaves of the poor sailors. Those who were cleverest in this occupation were the Rîfians, a branch of the Berbers, who inhabit all the Atlas Mountains of North Africa. They are wild-enough looking still. We often see them at Tangier, with long, dishevelled hair, and no covering on their heads, as if they cared nothing for the burning rays of the sun, and only sought to arrange their costume in order to frighten people. When we see them, we often say, "Morocco has well been called Barbary." They are very fond of knives and gunpowder, and, when not actually at work, they invariably carry a long flint-gun and other weapons of warfare, and in their own wild mountains their only way of settling a dispute is to shoot each other. Yet they are very industrious, and some of them are faithful. They are very fond of gardening. It is curious—almost incongruous—to see a wild-looking, bare-headed Rîfian, with a large, rough, brown leather apron, like a shoemaker's of the oldest fashion, and sometimes his scarlet gun-cover comically twisted round his head as an impromptu turban, working with the greatest delight and neatness among the most delicate flowers. At another time you might see him carrying into Tangier beautiful bouquets of the brightest colours, and all tastefully arranged by his own hands.

There are other people in Morocco whose Arab ancestors came all the way like locusts from the Arabian desert, traversing and conquering the whole of North Africa from Egypt to Morocco. After they accomplished this, they crossed the Straits of Gibraltar, conquered a large portion of Spain, and held it for eight hundred years. They usually go under the name of Moors. They and the Rîfians are not Christians, but Moslems, in religion, following Muhammad, the so-called prophet of Arabia. They profess to believe in Jesus Christ as a prophet, but do not believe Him to be the Saviour of the world. They hate idolatry, and yet many of their practices are as degraded as those of the heathen. The Rîfians, wild as they are, seem more ready to fraternise with us than those of Arab descent. One of our servants is a Rîfian young man. We have found him handy and faithful.

We have also a Moorish woman, and her girl of fourteen. They were quite untaught when they came to us, but by dint of much repetition they have brightened up. The girl has committed a number of texts from the Bible to memory. This morning, at family worship, I was teaching her the Lord's Prayer in Arabic. You could guess which of the petitions she learnt first. It was "Give us this day our daily bread." The Rîfian lad told her that she would be sure to understand best anything that might have "bread" in it. The other petitions are difficult, but she is persevering. Her mother, who is a milk-woman as well as our servant, used to put water in the milk when we first made her acquaintance; but now we never hear of her doing it. She brings beautiful milk with plenty of cream in it. The Rîfian is much quicker in understanding, and often explains a Scripture subject very well to others who come in. Last Sunday morning, while speaking at our weekly Arabic meeting about Joseph and his brethren, and the deliverance of the Israelites from the destroying angel by sprinkling the blood of the lamb on the doorposts, he told us that the Rîfians, when cholera or any calamity threatens them, have a strange practice of sprinkling blood on their doors. This custom may have been handed down to them from the time before the Arab invasion, when their forefathers were Christians, and they knew the Bible.

Mrs. Mackintosh gives lessons to the servants and the Colporteur's two boys every forenoon, and lately two blind Moorish boys have been coming in to her—induced partly by getting a piece of bread when they have finished their lesson, or the promise of a new shirt if they continue to come regularly. This is a very small nucleus of what we would wish to see done for children in Morocco. You may be astounded to hear that there is not one Christian school for Moorish children in the whole empire of Morocco!

Now, think if you can by any means help to link Morocco carriages on to the Missionary train. By the kind help of the Bible Society and the Berber Mission, a few of us are trying to get Bibles into the hands of the grown-up people, and some of its teaching into their minds. Our work is slow. But it cheers us to remember that the patient and noiseless labour of "the ox," as it ploughs up the ground, must prepare for and accompany the sowing of the seed. We want to see something done for the children; but who is to teach them? How much more the Bible will be sought for in Morocco when they are taught to love Christ!

You might like to know something of how we travel in Morocco. The country may well be called Barbary, because everything is in a very barbarous and primitive condition. There is not one carriage or coach, much less a railway, in all Morocco, although it is about as long as from the Orkney Islands to the Isle of Wight. So we have to ride on donkeys, mules, or horses, and lodge at night in tents when we go travelling. Perhaps you may say, "This must be very jolly; we should like to be with you." So it is, when the weather is fine, as it is pleasant to move slowly through a strange country so as to see the people and their customs, as well as the wild flowers, and animals as they graze. But when the sun is very hot, as it is in summer, or when the ground is covered with deep mud after rain, it is by no means so agreeable. A few days ago we took a Bible tour to Tetâwin, a town only forty miles from Tangier. But it takes two days to go there, and when coming back we did catch it. The rain poured as you scarcely ever see in the British Isles, so that the whole ground was covered with sheets of running water and deep mud. And you must remember there are no made roads, so that many of the paths we ride over become something like a turnip-field in deep soil when a heavy storm of snow is thawing. So it is not surprising that the poor animals, so patient and persevering, should often fall in the mud, and sometimes stick in it until half a dozen men come and remove their loads and pull them out. At one place, when we were happily nearing our home in Tangier, one of our mules, while crossing a deep stream where usually there is no water, fell into a hole up to its neck, so that for a moment I feared it would be drowned. Our Rîfian lad, in his anxiety to help the mule, rushed to its aid, and fell into the same hole. He had no second suit of clothes to put on, so when we got home he had to dry them on his back by sitting with a pan of fire under his jellab, or cloak, as if he were taking a vapour bath. Other incidents of a like kind entertained us on the way, and made home feel pleasant when we got back.—Gleanings for the Young.

CARDIFF.—We are desired by Miss Tilly to state that the "Strangers' Rest" in this seaport, of which she is hon. secretary, is quite distinct from the Temperance Hotel, at 228, Bute-road, conducted by Mr. G. Lawrence.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND IN STOCKHOLM.

The Queen of Sweden, having learned that we were on a visit to her country with the view of entering upon an evangelistic mission, kindly sent us an invitation to Rosendal Palace, Her Majesty's summer residence, in the suburbs of Stockholm. Her Majesty received us in the most cordial manner. Previous to our interview Her Majesty had received and read a copy of "The Conversion of Children." The Queen had been interested in hearing accounts of the meetings in Stockholm, and expressed much satisfaction on being told that many had professed conversion.

It was pleasant to see Her Majesty so much interested in Gospel work. She told us that she had sent to the Sabbath-schools many of the leaflets of the Children's Special Service Mission. I knew previously from Mr. Spiers that a contribution had been sent to him for the foreign fund of that Mission.

A few years ago Lord Radstock spent seven months in evangelistic work in Stockholm. I find lasting results of his labours. Last Saturday we dined at the country-house of a gentleman of good position; in the evening we held a meeting for his people and others in the neighbourhood. In speaking of his conversion he said his wife attended one of Lord Radstock's meetings; on her return, she said he had stated that every one in the audience might be saved before leaving the room. "This," said the gentleman, "astonished me. I asked my wife to request Lord Radstock to call and see me the next day. Afterwards I felt greatly troubled that I had made the request, and said when she returned from another of his meetings, 'I hope you did not deliver my message.' 'Yes, I did,' was her reply, 'and he is coming to see you.' When Lord Radstock came, my first question to him was, 'Can you show from the Bible that the statement you made about the possibility of immediate salvation is correct?' It was soon all made plain to me from the Word of God, and in an hour and a half, after prayer together, I saw the way of salvation through Christ, and received Him as my Saviour." This gentleman has since been an active and useful Christian. What he has accomplished cannot be told here. Though a banker and business man he finds time to preach the Gospel. He and his wife support an institution for homeless young girls. Many of these young people came to the meeting I conducted at his residence. I found that most of them were Christians. If Lord Radstock could have looked upon that gathering, where there were so many who had either directly or indirectly been led to Christ through God's blessing on his labours in Stockholm, it would have cheered his heart.

In Philadelphia a child, eleven years of age, remained to the inquiry meeting, anxious about her soul. We told her of Jesus, and her young heart went out in love to Him. Twenty-one years, with its many changes, passed by, and last Sabbath I found her at work in one of the meetings in Stockholm, pointing weeping sinners to Christ. She told me, when speaking of her conversion, that she had followed me in her prayers during all these years. Blessings such as we have seen in Norway and Sweden are, I believe, in answer to the prayers of many such Christians. She is now the wife of Rev. J. Stadling, an earnest missionary sent out by the Baptist Publication Society in Philadelphia. In his mission work, Mr. Stadling has visited Lapland, Finland, and Russia. Though living in that cold country with their reindeer, he found the Laplanders most warm-hearted, and very susceptible to religious truth. Last Friday we held a meeting at Ostersund, and then went to Trondhjem for a few days' services.

PREACHING AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The annual temperance fête will be held at the Palace on Tuesday, July 13. Mr. William Forbes will be pleased, as in previous years, to meet preachers and singers on that day at the Bible-stand in the Palace at two o'clock.

MEDICAL MISSION IN CAIRO.

This Mission to poor Moslems who come for bodily relief is the only opportunity they have of hearing anything of the good tidings of God's love through the Saviour. As a rule, the Moslem is shut out by circumstances, by bigotry, and by ignorance from hearing any good. In the lower class none of the women, and but few of the men, can read. All they have ever heard of Christianity is against it. They have been told Christians are infidels and all that is bad. The sufferers come to our dispensary and for the first time hear of the physician of souls. The Egyptian peasant feels kindness, especially help in bodily suffering, very strongly, his bigotry is softened and his heart opened. He must wait awhile for his turn for the doctor, and he cannot help listening. Many a voice I have heard saying, "I never knew these things before! this is truly a blessed word."

The poor women cluster round with sick babes on their knees, or with eyes which tell their own story of suffering; they hear of Him, who says, "Come ye, buy and eat, without money," and of the need of a Saviour, which they never knew.

If space allowed, I could give many cases that would touch the heart to read; of the poor old woman who got the prayer, "God be merciful to me a sinner," written out for her on a paper, that her son should read it to her daily till she knew the blessed words perfectly; of the poor negress from the Soudan, deserted by a soldier husband, saying, if her poor babe (cured by the doctor) lived "to grow big," she would bring her to us that she might learn to read "in that book;" of a patient who was rather longer under treatment than some others, and was heard explaining in her simple way the portion of a Scripture to a more ignorant friend, and saying, "it was for our sins the Lord came to die."

I want to entreat prayers and help of your readers. The work in the Medical Mission is a very quiet, unobtrusive work; only a patient and diligent sowing of the seed on a soil made soft by the blessed dews of kindness and sympathy and help in suffering. Surely it will not be lost work. We want our Christian friends to strengthen our hands and help the work, for our Lord and Master's sake.

NORTHFIELD AND MOUNT HERMON.

To-day, June 17, the Young Ladies' Seminary at Northfield has sent out its third class of students, thirteen receiving diplomas. The young gentlemen from Mount Hermon School had a holiday, and graced the occasion with their glad smiles and songs. By the way, the young ladies rendered with exquisite taste chants and anthems of high order and merit. Addresses very suggestive and helpful were given by distinguished men, and the occasion was one of peculiar delight. Applications for both schools exceed the accommodation which large and roomy buildings afford, and the cry is "More room!" The motto of the graduating class is, "Life is what you make it," and the crest taken by Mr. Moody for the Seminary is the "Laurel"—singularly appropriate, as hillside and valley are radiant with the brilliancy and beauty of this New England wildflower.

The experiment of a Summer School for Bible study, for College students, is to be tried in July for the month. At present writing the prospect is of there being gathered at Mount Hermon students from all parts of the United States. Such teachers as Whittle, Morehead, Pierson, Gordon, Erdman, Brookes, and others indicate the spiritual and intellectual atmosphere to be breathed, while ample provision will be made for athletic sports and physical recreation. Messrs. Sankey, Towner, and players on instruments will add their soulful melodies. S. E. B.

Northampton, Massachusetts.

SAILORS AT NAPLES.—Mr. Martin, who has been a sailor, is appointed to go to Naples, and look after the Rests in the city, the Rest at Pozynoli, and particularly to look after the welfare of young men ashore. Mr. Stephen Burrows, who is now on a visit to this country, will engage in Gospel work at Glasgow and Greenock. His address will be, The Seamen's Bethel, Eaglesham-street, South Side, Glasgow.

MOTHER AND SON.

"The beautiful stars look down all night
On a world of sin and woe,
But my boy doth sleep, while angels sweep
White pinions to and fro
Above his pillow; in love and light
Guarding my slumbering child;
Shielding from harm, in a holy calm,
His spirit undefiled."

Oh, mother, thy boy hath already pressed
To his lip the cup of sin;
Do ye deem him blest? unknown, unguessed,
Is the strife his soul within.
Oh! plead for him now, in the midnight hour,
That the life so young and fair
Be snatched from ill, ere his life-cup fill
With woe through the tempter's snare!

To-night, fond mother, the starlight falls
On many a wasted face
Of a Christless son, unblest, undone,
Through shame, disease, disgrace,
And the cry goes up: "Had a warning come
In my boyhood long ago,
I had not passed to death's verge at last,
Lost, lost, in my utter woe!"

But ye deem of the child ye love so well
That his life no wrong can dim;
That day and night are a dream of light
And purity for him.
Ah! his heart e'en now is a battlefield;
In his soul the forces lurk
Of a will untamed, unwarned, unblamed,
Which deadliest ill may work.

Fond mother, now watching o'er boyhood's sleep,
Ye image the soul as fair
As the bright flushed face 'gainst the pillow's lace,
'Mid the cloud of sunny hair;
Yet the tempter hath many a poisoned shaft
For the young, and your human voice
Should be clear as the guardian angel's near
To warn from a wrong life-choice!

MR. GEORGE SOLTAU.

At the close of the parents' prayer-meeting, held on the last day of Mildmay Conference, a number of friends gathered for the purpose of specially "setting apart" Mr. G. Soltau for Gospel work in Tasmania. Every member of the family now in England was present, as well as many relatives, and this short dedicatory service will long be remembered by them all.

Rev. D. B. Hankin, vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay, who presided, having read Isa. vi. 1—8, said, in the course of his remarks: Our brother is going forth on the noblest errand ever entrusted to mortal man. He is going to a congregation of immortal souls, to lead them to life and glory. He may well be humbled and say, "Who is sufficient for these things?" and yet he may fearlessly say, "Here am I, send me," seeing the Good Shepherd goes before him, and will lead him into the green pastures and beside the still waters. Yes! the Lord will watch over and care for him, and his wife and family every step of the way.

A number of the friends present then gave suitable texts of Scripture for the encouragement and strengthening of Mr. Soltau in his future work. Rev. F. White said: We meet to commend to the Lord a proved and tried brother, whom God has greatly used in the past. I could speak of all the service he has rendered to me and my people. He is held in love, and esteem, and respect by all of us. Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, having quoted the words, "Thou hast ascended on high; Thou hast led captivity captive; Thou hast received gifts for men," offered prayer, commending Mr. Soltau to God, and formally setting him apart for the ministry of the Word. As he prayed, he laid his hands on him, and was joined in the solemn act by Pastors J. Stephens, Theo. Monod, E. Schrenk, J. Riddell, J. Wilkinson, Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, and Mr. J. E. Mathieson. This simple, but solemn service seemed a fitting close to the Conference on Separation to God. The prayers of our readers are asked for these friends as they leave these shores for their new sphere of work.

PIONEERING IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Some months ago we stated that Mr. Andrew M. Milne, agent of the American Bible Society, passed through London on his way from the Argentine Republic to the Northern provinces of the South American Continent, where he and a Spanish companion, Señor Penzutti, were purposing to distribute the Scriptures and engage in such evangelistic work as might be possible. In a letter received from Mr. Milne, dated Bananguilla, Colombia, May 20, he says:—

The Republic of Venezuela has a population of somewhat over two millions. Caracas, the capital, a city of 50,000 inhabitants, lies directly back of La Guaira at a distance of about ten miles, and at an elevation of 3000 feet. To gain this height the railway has to zigzag and wind about, until it makes a journey of almost twenty-four miles. A range of mountains, that intervenes between Caracas and the sea, rises at some points to 7000 feet. The average temperature of Caracas is 71°24, and that of La Guaira 84°62. For a South American city, Caracas is comparatively clean, but at certain seasons it is subject to fevers. Towards the close of 1885, fourteen men, half the staff of English workmen on the Caracas and La Guaira railway, died of yellow fever in a few weeks, and during the first month of our stay at Caracas, the manager and two workmen died of the same.

Our books came to hand in good time, but we lost some weeks in an effort to have them exonerated from the heavy import duties levied on books in Venezuela. Our work embraced the following places in addition to the capital: Petares, El Valle, Maignetia, Macúto, La Guaira, Puerto Cabello, Valencia, Maracai, Villa Cura, La Victoria, and Maracaibo. The time we were actively employed in the distribution of the Scriptures was about two and a-half months. Including some sales at Caracas after we left, a little over two thousand volumes were disposed of.

During our stay at Caracas we held meetings for worship in English and Spanish, and left a Sunday-school, and a meeting in Spanish for worship of about forty members each. Señor Penzutti had a petition handed him with the above number of names asking him to return and become their pastor. An aged gentleman, at one time a rigid Catholic, but now vacillating, according to his own statement, expressed himself as most desirous to see permanent Spanish evangelisation set on foot in Caracas, and in his opinion there would be no difficulty in raising at least £20 a month towards expenses of a place of worship. In most Spanish Republics, toleration is all that the constitution guarantees. In Venezuela there is religious liberty. Why so inviting a field should remain unoccupied it is difficult to see.

WOMEN'S WORK IN INDIA.

Though Europeans in India are accustomed to crowd to the hills for the hot season, the spiritual well-being of the paharis (i.e., mountaineers) has been hitherto almost totally neglected. Some time since two Christian ladies started work in a village near one of these Himalayan stations. They used to go on Sunday afternoons to sing Gospel "bhajans" (i.e., hymns set to native music), and speak a few words to the people who congregated to listen to them. Sometimes as many as seventy-two assembled as their audience, and so much was their effort appreciated that the villagers requested to have a school for their children started.

"This village, with all its interests," writes Miss Jerrom, "has been left to me as a legacy, with a place appropriated high up on the mountain side for a little school. Who will help, in order that we may accomplish something that will benefit these poor neglected ones? I am intensely anxious to get one or two helpers, and set them at work as soon as the winter's snows shall have sufficiently disappeared."

PARIS.—A correspondent desires us to state, for the benefit of English visitors to Paris, that a simple congregational service is conducted in English by an earnest pastor at 23, Rue Royale, at 11.15 a.m. and 7.30 p.m. on Sundays.

A FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES.

On Tuesday afternoon and evening last week two interesting meetings were held in connection with the close of the fourteenth session of the Institute, Harley House, Bow, over which Mr. H. Grattan Guinness presides, and the departure of several of those who had been trained there for the mission fields of Africa, India, Tasmania, and elsewhere.

Brief addresses were given by Mr. George Soltau, who is about to proceed to Tasmania, and by Mr. Thompson, who is proceeding to another part of the same field. Messrs. Murphy and Leák are leaving for Africa, Mr. Morphy for India, Mr. Manly for Jamaica, Messrs. Hughes and Kent for Canada, Mr. Bowen for Illinois, and Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian for Scutari. Dr. Alexandrian said he and his wife had the desire of their hearts fulfilled in his going out as a medical missionary to Constantinople to work among Jews and Mohammedans. Both these peoples were opposed to Christ, for the Jews denied his Messiahship, and the followers of Mahomet his Sonship. Of the former he knew some who once were thieves and robbers who now might be called chiefs of the Christian Church, and there were now many Christians bowing before the throne of grace who were once Mohammedans.

Rev. J. Denham Smith having briefly spoken, Mr. H. Grattan Guinness described the fields of labour to which the missionaries were going out. He added that there were forty-five students at Cliff, and ninety-three students in the Institute. They were sending missionaries to China, India, Africa, Orissa, Arabia, Wisconsin, Illinois, Australia, Tasmania, &c. There were twenty-two about now to leave to occupy various foreign stations. Mrs. Guinness also addressed the company, remarking that the correspondence and the financial department of the work rested upon her. It should be understood that home mission work was not neglected, and a good deal had been done in the East-end of London. They were very grateful for all the help which Christian friends sent them. Financially no one would be surprised to learn that the year had been a very trying one, for they had lost by death several of their best friends, and others had not been able to do what they had long found pleasure in doing, in consequence of impoverished circumstances. Some who once could give their £500 now could only send their £5. The income last year was £8000, which left them about £1000 short of what they really wanted. In the course of her remarks Mrs. Guinness referred to a remarkable discovery which had been made since Mr. Stanley's visit to the Congo. The most central town in Central Africa is Nuangue, and a direct water-way has been discovered from Stanley Pool to this town, by which steamers will be able to cross in a short time, and there will be a line of navigable way connecting the Atlantic and Pacific right through the heart of Central Africa. This line of water-way is 900 miles long.

At the close of the afternoon meeting a numerous company sat down to tea in a large marquee in the garden, which was looking its loveliest. In the evening a meeting was held in it, and addresses were given by Pastor Appia, Mr. Glenny (North Africa), Rev. Dr. Bennett, Dr. Barnardo, and other friends.—Record.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—A series of meetings has been held here by Mr. Spencer Walton for eight days, when he delivered most interesting Gospel addresses and Bible readings, which were accompanied with the marked influence of the presence of the Holy Spirit. The holiday on Whit Monday was taken advantage of, and a United Convention for Christians held, when many had a feast from the Master of Assemblies.

FRENCH LITERATURE.—May we invite the attention of the readers of The Christian to the two French periodicals, "L'Ami de la Maison," and "Le Rayon de Soleil," published in Paris at the Depôt Central, 4, Place du Théatre Français, and at Partridge & Co., 9, Paternoster-row, under the able editorship of Miss Blundell. They are now in the eleventh year of their publication. Based upon the model of The British Workman and Children's Friend, and thoroughly Christian in their tone, they are admirably adapted for circulation among French-speaking populations. May we commend them to those who are about to travel on the Continent as especially suited for gratuitous distribution? English parents would also find these periodicals good, wholesome reading, in pure Parisian French, and well adapted to assist children in their French lessons.

A CAMP MEETING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

In The South African Methodist for May 5, there is a long report of a Methodist Camp-meeting held in one of the South African circuits.

How far such an institution is likely to suit the genius of our South African Churches, to what extent something of the same kind may be made helpful to the revival of spiritual work, as well as stimulate the social life of our scattered communities, is yet, perhaps, a problem to be solved; but the experiment recently tried in the Fort Peddie district encourages those who were privileged to join in its exercises to hope that this, almost the first of the kind, may be followed up by others yet more successful.

The services were commenced on Tuesday, April, 13, by a prayer-meeting at 8 a.m., which was marked by spiritual power and gracious promise. Arrangements had been made for a Harvest Thanksgiving Service on this first day. This, some feared, would interfere with special spiritual work, but the officers of the circuit felt that such a gathering of people from all parts of this wide district would be the right opportunity for a general thanksgiving, and would, moreover, stimulate right feeling in respect of purely spiritual and soul-saving work; and the result justified our expectations. Wednesday's services included morning prayer-meeting for Christian consecration, a special children's service, and an evening sermon and prayer-meeting. Thursday dawned with fine weather and with songs of praise from every camp, for there was not a family in which there had not been some saved. This day, too, was well filled up with religious exercises; in fact, feeling had become so intense, and desire for conscious salvation so general, that it was quite impossible to think of engaging in anything else. The projected cricket match, and other social gatherings which had been anticipated, were quite forgotten. The testimonies borne this day, and the addresses delivered by one and another were edifying and stimulating in the extreme, and the feeling which prevailed soon convinced us that though our programme was run out, it would be impossible to close the services. Again and again the Benediction was pronounced, and one and another tried to return to their tents, but as soon as a move was made, some other souls in agony of distress came forward crying, "Oh, don't go, pray for me! and for me!" until as midnight drew near, the ministers tore themselves away for a brief rest in their tent; but no! rest was impossible, and they must needs return again to the camping ground, where strong men were now bowed in penitence before God, and the mighty influence of the Holy Ghost so prevailed that sleep could no longer be thought of. During the morning hours there was, however, a brief respite, but we were awakened with songs of praise and Hallelujahs all around the camp.

On Friday morning the Rev. Mr. Cotton preached what was intended to be the farewell sermon, but so many were longing to tell of what God had done for their souls, we were constrained to hold yet another meeting for testimony, during which public recognition and suitable advice were offered to the young converts, and whilst one and another spoke with beautiful simplicity of salvation sought and found, we had indeed the "shout of a King in our Camp." God came down in the mighty power of the Holy Ghost, and the scene we then witnessed baffles all description. Parents bringing their weeping children before the Lord; husbands and wives weeping and rejoicing together in experience of new-found joys; strong men and women gathering round their aged father and weeping and praying in agony for his salvation; and ministers and local preachers exhorting, praying, bidding affectionate farewells, and scarce knowing how to drag themselves away from the hallowed ground.

Certainly this Camp-meeting has been a success. Heaven's manifest approval has rested upon it. The whole Church in the division of Peddie has been mightily moved, and though only a few from the adjoining circuit of Bathurst were present, doubtless they will carry a blessing with them to their homes.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC AND THE NEW PARLIAMENT.—Permit us to ask your many readers who are electors to support those candidates who will most promote the stoppage of the sale of drink in our country. Even when the candidate has been elected without a contest, it is most desirable that the M.P. should have the views of his constituents brought before him by an influential and intelligent deputation.

EVANGELISATION IN GERMANY.

MISSION HOUSE, BLANKENBURG, SCHWARZATHAL, THURINGEN.

FRAULEIN VON WELING, whose devoted labours for God on the continent are well known amongst Christians in England, has opened a very large Mission house, exceedingly neat, and comfortably arranged, and beautifully situated in one of the most lovely parts of Germany. It is purposed to make this house the centre of evangelistic work in this part of Germany, and already different kinds of meetings for young and old, Sunday-school, &c., have been established, with very encouraging results. But the house is especially adapted to be a meeting-place for Christian workers.

As a first step in this matter a Conference has been fixed for July 12—15, when a number of Christian brethren, on their common ground of love to their Master, will meet to wait before the Lord, and help each other to live and serve Him more faithfully. English brethren, who may be travelling on the continent, might have an opportunity to show their fellowship in the Gospel work in Germany in joining us.

I wish to draw the attention of English people, single or families, who wish to spend a few weeks on the continent, amidst the beautiful mountain scenes, in quiet and Christian atmosphere, and at moderate terms, to stay at the Vereinshaus. They may thus enjoy much that is needed for a holiday trip, and in the meantime help the work. Fraulein von Weling speaks English like her native tongue. The railway runs right up to Blankenburg.

During recent months they have had a very happy time in Gospel work on the continent; doors are open more than ever, and God is doing wondrously. My heart is full of joy and courage.

Blankenburg. H. P. ZIEMANN.

A HUGUENOT MEMORIAL.

DEAR SIR,—The Protestant churches throughout the world united with us a few months ago in commemorating the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. It has appeared to us that one of the most appropriate as well as most useful memorials of the faith and sufferings of our fathers would be to erect a house of worship at Charenton, where the Huguenots of Paris had a large and celebrated "Temple," that was then levelled to the ground. There is again a community of believers, belonging to the Reformed Church, in Charenton, but they have no suitable place of worship. They have subscribed liberally, and have been helped by their fellow Protestants in France. It is in order to complete the necessary sum that my friend and colleague, Pastor Pélissier, is now making an appeal to our brethren in England.

Will you allow me to commend the cause to them through your columns? May it not be truly said, of our persecuted fathers, that "the diminishing of them was"—in more senses than one—"the riches of the nations," and will not many, more especially among their own descendants, be glad to acknowledge their indebtedness by contributing to this resurrection of a "second temple" after two hundred years?

Help may be directed to M. Pélissier, at the Reformatory and Refuge Union Office, 16, Charing-cross, London; or 13, Avenue Daumeuil, Vincennes, Seine, France.—Yours fraternally,

THEO. MONOD.

36, Boulevard Henri IV., Paris.

P.S.—If other papers would kindly take notice of this appeal, they would be doing us a favour, and helping us to do "the right thing at the right time."—TH. M.

SOLDIERS IN SECUNDERABAD.—In THE CHRISTIAN of May 6 there were a few notes regarding the Lord's work in this station among the soldiers. They have a walk of three miles from their barracks to the native church, but the distance does not hinder their attendance. The foundation-stone of a Soldiers' Institute was laid here last month, when many were present. The walls are now rapidly rising, and there is every prospect of the building being opened within three months. The Lord be praised for all his goodness to us here. A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.

Secunderabad, May 31.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE IN NEW ZEALAND.

FROM reports recently received from New Zealand, we learn that Mr. William Noble arrived at Auckland from Honolulu on Sunday, May 9, when he was warmly welcomed by the President and officers of the Gospel Temperance Mission, and other gentlemen. He commenced his mission there on the evening of the same day, when he delivered an earnest and stirring address in the Theatre Royal, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The following week he conducted services in Mr. Spurgeon's Auckland Tabernacle, and the Pitt-street Wesleyan Church. A series of meetings followed in the Theatre Royal, and on May 27 a General Convention of Christian Temperance Workers was held in the Tabernacle, when addresses were given by Mr. Noble, and several ministers and gentlemen.

The Leader (Auckland), referring to Mr. Noble's work there, says: "No opportunity has been lost by him—at early prayer-meetings, at mid-day meetings to women, at Sunday afternoon assemblies of children, at Sunday evening evangelistic services at the theatre—to impress the soundness of his mission and the truth of the Gospel upon his hearers. And surely he has done a great deal of good. How many have joined the temperance cause during the fortnight we are not in a position to say, but the result of his visit will be felt far and wide in other ways than signing the pledge. Men will be led to think of the evils of the drink question who never gave it attention before; mothers and fathers will be led to keep their children from temptation; and there will be a more united feeling among Christian temperance workers."

Want of space prevents us from giving detailed reports of these interesting meetings, but we rejoice to know that Mr. Noble has had such a good reception, and has been so successful in the interests of the temperance cause in "Maori Land."

TEMPERANCE FESTIVAL, NEWCASTLE.

THE fifth annual temperance festival on the Town Moor, Newcastle-on-Tyne, last week, was favoured, as on former occasions, with the most brilliant weather. This great temperance gathering is held on the ground on which the races took place, previous to their removal to Gosforth-park, a little distance northward. Wednesday is the "great carnival of the North," though, thanks to the institution of this festival, to the great majority of the people it is so under widely different circumstances and influences.

On Wednesday afternoon, at a meeting presided over by Mr. W. D. Stephens, the Bishop of Newcastle, Rev. Albert Bishop (Wesleyan), the Mayor of Newcastle, the Vicar of Newcastle (Canon Lloyd), and Rev. A. S. Wardropper gave brief addresses.

The various games and sports were entered into with much zest. The treat to 3000 "street arabs," who had a special feast of bread and milk ad libitum, and little games of their own, was a deeply interesting feature of the day. There was a Salvation Army platform and several temperance stands on the ground on both days. On the "Central Hall" platform a gambling table was conspicuously placed, and utilised for the taking of pledges, &c., and it appeared that it had been seized by Rev. W. J. Townsend whilst in active operation, and carried bodily away in the face of the baffled gamblers. After this another seizure was made by Mr. Stephens, and one of the men handed over to the police, so that the ground was speedily and vigorously cleared of the gambling fraternity.

On Thursday the weather was again most delightful, and everything went agreeably and happily. The Temperance Festival Association may be congratulated on the great success that attended their efforts in promoting a movement which undoubtedly has exercised a most beneficial influence in this populous community.

REV. C. J. WHITMORE, author of "Herrings for Nothing," "Tit for Tat," &c., will be glad to arrange for sea-side work during August. His address is 38, Caversham-road, London, N.W.

BAPTISM OF JEWS.—At the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on the Sunday evening after the Conference, a deeply-interesting sight was witnessed in the public baptism, by Rev. John Wilkinson, of two sons of Israel, who, upon very clear and satisfactory evidence of conversion, desired to be admitted by baptism into the Christian Church.

A MOTHER AND HER SON.

A LOCAL paper publishes a sketch of the late Mr. W. Brooks, of Wellington, Somerset, written by Mr. D. C. Fox (a gentleman whose name and family are held in high esteem, and who was closely acquainted with Mr. Brooks' work from the time he took up his residence in Wellington until his death):—Mr. William Brooks was born at Moorwinstow in 1812. His mother was a remarkable woman of whose life-work an interesting and instructive memoir has been published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, under the title of "A Handmaid of the Lord." Mr. Brooks was engaged in business for about twenty years at Chumleigh, Devon, during which time he was an earnest local preacher and tract distributor. In 1856, in response to an invitation from the committee of the Wellington Town Mission, he became their first missionary, which post he has faithfully and successfully filled to the present time, winning and retaining the confidence and esteem of Christians of all denominations. Mr. Brooks' first work was to supply every house in the town with a copy of the Scriptures, and to induce the people to attend a place of worship and send their children to Sunday-schools. Several times, when he found a number of children too ragged and neglected to go to school, he took a room in the district and taught them for weeks or months, until by degrees the parents were induced to clothe them, and they were drafted to the regularly established schools.

The inns, public-houses, and lodging-houses of the town, travelling shows and circuses, regiments of soldiers on the march, the markets and fairs, the aged and infirm, all bore witness to his devoted and zealous love of souls.

He found several houses of ill-fame in the town, which were all closed through his influence, and up to the time of his last illness were never re-opened. He sought out the fallen, and either restored them to their friends or placed them in homes where they might regain their lost position in society, and return to the Father in heaven who was thus seeking his lost sheep. He first discovered the spiritual destitution in the neighbourhood of Clayhidon, where he held cottage meetings, and was the means under God of founding the Mission there which has since assumed such great proportions under the influence and labour of Mr. George Brealey and his son and other helpers. He found Westleigh spiritually neglected, in consequence of which the town Mission maintained a missionary there for many years, at last handing over the station, with a nicely appointed chapel and congregation, to the East Devon Association. He commenced the Mission at West Buckland which his son has since carried on with so much success. In Barnstaple and other towns of North Devon which he visited during his holidays, he was the means of establishing Scripture readers, female missionaries, or Bible colporteurs, to carry the light of God's truth into dark neighbourhoods.

He has now received his reward, and resting from his labours his works follow him, but his active influence and wide-reaching sympathies will no longer be felt amongst us. May his example stimulate those of us who remain to more earnest self-denying work for our common Master, who has told us that inasmuch as we render any loving service to the weakest of his disciples, we do it unto Him.

CHILDREN'S OPEN-AIR SERVICES.—The first of a series of these services was held on Tuesday, June 28, on the site of the proposed "Jurston-street and Shaftesbury Memorial School," Charles-street, Westminster Bridge-road, S.E. About 150 of the very poorest children of the neighbourhood were gathered together, and an earnest address was given by Mr. E. Hughes, Superintendent of the school. The little ones seemed greatly to enjoy this novel meeting, which it is hoped may be continued bi-weekly until building operations are commenced. Funds towards this object are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by Rev. Newman Hall, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. The school is at present carried on, under most unfavourable circumstances, in a badly-ventilated hall, at 24, Lower Marsh, formerly occupied as a penny gaff.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give a portrait and sketch of Dr. Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow.

A correspondent in South Africa writes to us, urging that at the British and Colonial Temperance Congress, to be held in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, on July 14—16, some suitable day should be set apart to be observed as a day of earnest and united prayer for blessing on all temperance workers and their work. Such a call to prayer our correspondent thinks would be a grand manifestation of unity among Christians the wide world over, and might bring about good results, such as cannot be estimated. We commend the excellent suggestion to the conveners of the Congress.

A general and widespread interest is awakened throughout the North and West Highlands of Scotland in connection with Dr. Somerville's evangelistic tour in those districts. He hopes to begin about July 11, and has resolved to take the western division of the Highlands during autumn, leaving the eastern district, where railway communication is available, to be taken up later on. Many will follow the venerable Moderator of the Free Church in his mission with deep interest, and there will, doubtless, be much earnest, believing prayer offered on his behalf.

It is to be feared that the troubles in Madagascar are not at an end. We read in the Paris correspondence of The Daily News :—

> Le National, in noticing the obstacles which beset the Resident-General in Madagascar, says that it will not do for France to neglect them. Madagascar is not only a splendid stepping-stone on the route to India, but a necessary link in the chain of possessions with which France is girdling Africa, and has partially girdled that continent. Le National says that if the Hovas negotiated because no longer able to fight, it does not follow that they are conquered. It hopes that M. de Villers will keep his eye upon the agents of the London Missionary Society, who, the writer assures us, "will, under the pretext of religious zeal, leave no stone unturned to oust the French." At the same time he should not ignore their acquired influence, or absolutely favour the Catholic missions. Freedom of religion should be assured to all. Le National seems to forget that under the Patrimonio Treaty M. Myre de Villers has no right to meddle with questions of home policy.

So long as French agents do not interfere with their freedom of action, France has nothing to fear from the agents of the London Missionary Society, any more than the French Republic itself has cause to fear from the workers of the McAll Mission in Paris and Marseilles.

The country is again in the thick of a General Election. Our lines, happily, lie outside the bounds of party politics. We deal with principles, not with partisans. So we feel no obligation or inclination to point out to our readers for whom they should vote; but there are two things we should like to say. The first is, Do not cherish great expectations of the benefits that may be derived from a new Government. After the Reform Bill was passed, the most absurd hopes of advantage to be received were entertained. Some went so far as to think that gold was to be gathered like "stones of the brook." These delusive anticipations come back, in a greater or less degree, with every election. They take their rise in the proneness of men to believe that well-being is to be secured by institutions rather than by individual conduct. The folly of such a belief, is seen on reflection.

The second thing is: Avoid the tendency to exalt policy above principle. That tendency is the curse of modern politics. It undermines the righteousness which exalteth a nation, and lowers the standard of thinking and acting. Bring every word and deed to the touchstone of truth and right. Keep your hands clean and your consciences pure. Avoid the slavish adherence to party which clouds keenness of mental vision. Some men get a set of opinions so engraven on their minds that they act as if these opinions were their beliefs. It is pitiful to hear such men say, "I believe this or that," while at the time their belief is not the fruit of honest conviction, but the result of their being tied to the apron-strings of a political leader or faction. "The truth shall make you free."

> He is the freeman whom the truth makes free,
> And all are slaves beside.

Servants of Jesus Christ should rejoice in an unfettered freedom to think and do the right. They do not bend to human opinion, but to Divine truth, and so they enter into the larger liberty of Christianity.

The Peace Society has issued a manifesto to electors, calling their attention to the duty of pressing on Parliamentary candidates the claims of a policy of economy and pacific non-intervention. It is not likely that the cause thus advocated will in the present contest meet with due consideration. Yet none the less do "Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform" deserve a prominent place in practical politics. The country groans under heavy burdens imposed by the maintenance of an army and a navy for war. So long as wars go on, taxes must go up. It is surely high time, after nineteen centuries of Christianity, to consider whether the Gospel of Jesus Christ does not offer a better method of settling quarrels than by the sword, and whether the money made by honest toil could not be spent in a more profitable way than in killing those who happen to offend us.

The extension of the franchise has now put power into the hands of the people. They have felt the pinch of war-taxation too severely to ignore the claims advocated by the Peace Society, and they know the principles of Christianity well enough to understand what course should be pursued by a nation which professes to follow the Prince of Peace. Let them exercise their power by sending a strong Peace Party to Parliament, and supporting it with all the force of hearty co-operation.

The report of the Mansion House Council on the dwellings of the people deserves the careful study of every Christian in London. It reveals a state of matters which is little short of a national disgrace. The condition of the houses of the poor in some parts of the Metropolis is so disgusting that we shrink from giving a detailed description of them. We think we have said enough when we express the belief that they are better fitted for pig-styes than for human abodes. The Vestries are responsible for this crying evil, but they will not be roused to a sense of their responsibility till the voice of public indignation is lifted against them. It is the interest of some of their members to let things remain as they are, because their purses are filled by the money wrung from the tenants of these miserable houses. Personal gain blinds men in the presence of a wrong; but their eyes must be speedily opened. We hope that every lover of his kind will do all that in his power lies to remedy this grievance, and see that the existing laws are put into execution.

The Committees in connection with the Council have done good work. At an expenditure of less than £1000 they have dealt with 6000 cases during the past year, and they have stirred up the Vestries to some attempts at reform. Their hands should be strengthened. The golden rule makes it imperative for every follower of Christ to do unto others as he would be done by himself. Those in comfortable homes should be filled with a great pity for unfortunates doomed to dwell in insanitary abodes, and never rest till full justice is measured forth to brethren whose poverty is preyed on by the rich.

Bishop Ryle, in a recently published sermon, preached at Winchester Cathedral, on "The Rights and Duties of Lay Churchmen" (William Hunt & Co. 6d.), strikes a very direct blow at one phase of Popery in Protestantism—the idea that the clergy are the Church. He abundantly proves his position from the New Testament, and quotes the learned Bishop of Durham, who says :—

> The sacerdotal title is never once conferred on the ministers of the Church. The only priests, under the Gospel, designated as such under the New Testament, are the saints, the members of the Christian brotherhood.

Bishop Ryle is convinced "that the prominent position occupied by the laity in those Primitive Communities was the grand secret of their undeniable strength, growth, prosperity, and success."

The following are remarkable words to be spoken by a bishop from the pulpit of a cathedral :—

> Lifted above their due position, the English clergy have always been inclined to sacerdotalism, priestism, self-conceit, and an over-weening estimate of their own privileges and powers. Fallen below their due position, the English laity, with occasional brilliant exceptions, have taken little interest in Church matters, and have been too ready to leave everything ecclesiastical to be managed by the clergy. In the meantime, for three centuries, the Established Church of England has suffered great and almost irremediable damage.

Bishop Ryle goes on to consider how this state of things is to be remedied. He says, "such doctoring as 'lay co-operation' will not heal the wounds of Zion," and pleads for "the mighty principle that nothing ought to be done in the Church without the laity, in things great or in things small."

In the early days of the revival which began in 1859, the distinction between clergy and laity was itself repeatedly shown to be invidious and unscriptural. It is not, however, in the Establishment alone that the liability exists to regard the ministry as solely responsible for the well-being of the Church, with the inevitable result that duty and responsibility are shirked by the people. It is very natural for a minister to wish to see the prominent members of the church in their pews twice a day; but it would be more spiritual to urge them to spend one part of the day, at least, in imparting to others what they have learned. The diligent workers and the liberal givers in many churches are not a fifth, often not a tenth, of the membership, and one great cause of this, as well as one chief part of the remedy, is well pointed out in Bishop Ryle's sermon.

It has frequently been said that one of the best results of foreign travel is that of making people more tolerant, and it is true that in many cases such an effect is a desirable and beneficial one. There is, however, always the danger of failing to distinguish between toleration for those who

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

Christian Friends are EARNESTLY INVITED to assist in Evangelising the unreached masses in London and the Provinces by means of

TENT SERVICES,

Open-Air and Indoor Preaching, Bible Carriage, Colportage Work, House-to-House Visitation, &c., and thus help us to use the opportunity the present splendid weather affords for Town and Village Gospel Work in Tent Meetings, which have been so much appreciated by the people, and so graciously blessed of God during the past 20 years. Five Marquees are now in full use, and several others are about to be sent out as soon as funds are forthcoming for the necessary working expenses.

In the several Halls of the Mission also FUNDS ARE MUCH NEEDED TO COVER THE WORKING EXPENSES.

A DAY IN THE COUNTRY.

There are many poor people with their children who attend the various halls of this Mission, who never see the Country or breathe its purer air except on the occasion of our Annual Treats. Will friends help us again this year by sending contributions, however small, for the above Funds, to the Director,

HINTS FOR BRAIN WORKERS.

Restoration to a normal state of vigour can only be obtained by the natural impartation of new life and energy, apart from the use of tonics and stimulants. This is the one source of invigoration for those who by prolonged mental application, or harassing worries, have lost the relish for study, and have to force themselves to the performance of the most ordinary duties. Sometimes the simple act of fixing the attention upon a given subject becomes laborious, and has the effect of fatiguing the physical system as well as the mental faculties.

If we exercise a thought upon what we are doing when taking stimulating drinks as tonics, we must be aware that the temporary stimulus we feel from them is not strength, as it is succeeded by a corresponding diminution of the strength we possess. (The arguments here advanced against stimulants are such as abstainers do not need, and which many non-abstainers will readily endorse.) Yet the want experienced by brain workers and sufferers from brain-fag is not generally understood, nor is any practical remedy suggested. Rest is certainly a wiser course than stimulation, but it seems almost impossible, in this age of activity, to relax our efforts and still keep abreast with all onward movements. If recuperation of our powers and fitness for work could be obtained while in work, many an anxious heart and aching brow would hail such a talisman. Is this possible? We think it is as possible to maintain mental vigour while pursuing mental work as to obtain nourishment from food while performing physical labour.

The superior value of Magnetic Treatment arises from the perfect control which it has over the mental states and the emotional life of the patient, extending its healing virtues into the realms of causation, and touching the spring of the body's vitality and power. For there is a pathology of the mind as well as of the body; and to restore the true harmony of thought and feeling, intellect and sensibility, should be the steady aim of him who would "minister to a mind diseased." It is because this unseen or odic influence of Magnetism acts upon or with the animating principle of our being that it re-energises the mind, and removes hindrances and encumbrances which are revealed to our consciousness from time to time. Magnetism is, then, pre-eminently an element of mental power, and one which naturally coalesces with all the forces of the (so-called) physical economy, to restore the natural order and normal condition of our being.

Rev. T. J. FORSYTH, The Manse, Lisburn, Ireland.

"I am glad to say the Nerve Invigorator has proved most beneficial, as I never thought to be strong; indeed, my life was despaired of, and many thought my work for God was done. I can now enter into all my duties, and preach with as great energy as ever. I have recommended your Treatment to several friends."

March 2, 1885.—"I can endorse all that I have previously said of your Treatment, as I have received all the benefit I have described to you."

All those who experience loss of energy, unfitting them for ordinary duties, and exposing them to debilitating, perhaps epidemic, disease, should make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the Odo-Magnetic mode of treatment. Mr. B. Copson Garratt has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of the beneficent force of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy; they may be had from 16, Finsbury-square, London, E C.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT wish to call the attention of Visitors to their Editions of the following Works:—

The People's Life of Wesley.

128 Pages, Crown 8vo. Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.
With Portrait, Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

JOHN WESLEY:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D., Author of "Happy Homes, and How to Make Them," "Buy Your Own Cherries," &c.

"The spirit of a great reformer's life has seldom been presented in a form at once so brief and lively. . . The memoir pourtrays Wesley in all the aspects of a character that was many-sided. Every page sparkles with edifying anecdote. . . The book costs only a SIXPENCE, and ought to have a sale of many thousands."—Christian Leader.

"We should suppose this SIXPENNY book will sell by thousands, and do good wherever it finds a place."—Baptist Messenger.

"Written in a popular style; yet of high literary merit. One hundred and twenty-eight pages, crown 8vo., 6d.! After this, who need be without a Life of Wesley?"
Primitive Methodist Magazine.

"In some nineteen chapters Dr. Kirton tells, in a popular aud fascinating style, the life of the Great Founder of Methodism. It is, emphatically, the Biography of Wesley for the people. The volume contains 128 pages; and the price is only SIXPENCE. To every Primitive Methodist we say, Get it at once!"—Primitive Methodist.

"The happiest and most successful attempt yet made to present, in a brief compass, a really life-like account of Mr. Wesley and his work. We most heartily commend it. A copy should be in every home. The Publishers and Author deserve universal thanks for placing within reach of every one in the community such a gem of a book."—Irish Christian Advocate.

The People's Life of Whitefield.

128 Pages, Crown 8vo. Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.
With Portrait, Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By J. R. ANDREWS, Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell."

"A SIXPENNY well-printed and well-told life of this extraordinary man of God deserves a world-wide circulation, and will probably be read by thousands."—Baptist Messenger.

"A marvellous record of earnest labours and successful work; one, too, that may be purchased for sixpence."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"We cannot imagine a better SIXPENNYWORTH of human authorship. Oh that every Minister in the three kingdoms possessed this 'Life of Whitefield,' and would read it through! Why, it would set the Church in a blaze! It would be a noble thing if some wealthy man would see to it that this biography was placed in every manse in the United Kingdom."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in The Sword and the Trowel.

"A most interesting, and withal marvellously cheap, biography of the great Evangelist of the last century—the Moody of his day."—Baptist Witness.

are in error, and sympathy with error itself. The ceremony which seems harmless and almost pathetic in its childishness may be based upon a dangerous doctrine, and it is absolutely necessary, if we tacitly tolerate the one, to be firm in our opposition to the other. It is easy to say that certain ceremonies are but the ways in which some people approach God; but, if we are to accept the Bible as the foundation of our faith, we cannot, and we must not, close our eyes to the solemn fact that God has laid down the method of man's approach to Him, that "living way" of Christ Jesus. Anything which is substituted for the finished work of Christ must, therefore, necessarily be false and unworthy of sympathy, however poetical or pathetic its surroundings may be, and the Christian must not tamper with it.

In this spirit, we must earnestly deprecate some of the teaching in a sermon by the Dean of St. Paul's on "Foreign Travel," as being dangerous in its tendency to confuse the mind of the unthinking reader with regard to sympathy and toleration. We have no wish, whatever, to forget "the brotherhood of Christian people," but we must remember that a tree is known by its fruits. When we find people fresh from their "venerable rites" ready for the Sunday dancing-room and drink-shops, with their surroundings of painted and unpainted vice, it is difficult for us to be anything else but alive to our differences. Frivolous people may regard these things frivolously, or, by participating in such Sabbath-day laxity, may even help to perpetuate the differences which the Dean so much deplores; but the thoughtful traveller, unable to separate religion from daily life, looks with sadness rather than with sympathy upon all attempts to unite things which cannot be joined, and to seek for a fig-tree where the fruit consists of thorns. If the traveller on the Continent takes his Bible with him he can be quite independent of services with which he is not in full sympathy, and if in such circumstances he is alone in a foreign land, the promise that wherever two or three are gathered together in his name, there Christ will be in the midst of them, will graciously be made to apply to one only.

We are glad to find that a thoughtful and able American writer, Mr. J. P. Dunn, has boldly taken to himself not only the task of relating the sad history of the "Indian Wars of the Far West," the "Massacres of the Mountains," as he boldly terms them, but to justify, to a great extent, the position of the Red Men. Few chapters of American history are more painful than the records of the war of extermination, waged for so long a time and with such varying success, against those who loved the familiar woods and streams of their childhood, and who fought (oftentimes, it must be admitted, with base cruelty) in defence of their homes.

It is to be lamented that a Christian nation should not have been able to hit upon a wiser and kinder mode of dealing with the question of Indian possession than that which has resulted in "a century of dishonour," with its concomitants of bloodshed and murder, and it is to be hoped that in the future it will be found possible to adopt a more humane policy. Strange to say, Mr. Dunn disputes the statement that the Indian population is decreasing, and, whilst admitting that the vices which civilisation has carried amongst them have made fearful inroads, he asserts, and seemingly proves, that the life-prolonging customs which also have been introduced have had the effect of counteracting the injury done. There does not appear to be any reason why, with a more Christian policy, the Indians should not become assimilated, as so many other races have been, to the great American family, and become partakers of all the blessings of Christianity.

The Spectator has a weighty article on Evolution and Revelation. An attempt has been made, and has received considerable attention, to produce a conciliation between the doctrines of Mr. Spencer and those of the New Testament. The attempt is shown to be an utter failure. Mr. Spencer contradicts Christianity step by step; he assumes that supposed relations between man and his Maker have grown out of dreams; that freedom and moral obligation are delusive; that religious ideas are delusions from end to end. In short Spencerianism is subversive of the Christian faith, and nothing but mischief can come from such a conciliation.

In our last week's issue there appeared an article on Mr. George Müller's Orphanages at Bristol. We had in some way overlooked the fact that we gave last August a notice of the 1885 Report, and our notice last week was a second one based on the same Report. The Report for 1886 will not be published, we learn, till the usual time—the middle or end of August.

The Palestine Exploration Fund has given an excellent account of itself at its twenty-first annual meeting. In every part of the Holy Land, in that of the Hittites, in the Sinaitic Peninsula, and in the region of the Red Sea, most remarkable elucidations and corroborations have been given of Scripture history. Recent additions to our knowledge of clean and unclean beasts are confirming the evidence that Leviticus was written at the beginning and Deuteronomy at the close of the Israelitish wanderings, and important discoveries, in regard to certain statements in the Gospels, are anticipated in tracing the second wall of Jerusalem.

The Egyptian Exploration Fund has also been doing most valuable service, and its last discovery possesses deep interest. The distinguished explorer, Mr. Flanders Petrie, has been investigating a mound which had excited his attention, and which was called by the Arabs, "The Castle of the Jew's Daughter." This turns out to be the palace of Pharaoh Psammetichus, in which, B.C. 585, the fugitive daughters of the King of Judah were placed. The whole discovery offers a remarkable corroboration of Jer. xliii., and is still further destined to confirm the historical accuracy of the prophet.

Apologies are often made for the Bible which go far towards betraying it. It is said that its aim and scope are spiritual; that it is no authority on matters of science; that historical discrepancies may be looked for; that there are inaccuracies as to facts, but that still it is able to make men wise unto salvation. Let this, however, be noted: the Bible, far more than any other ancient book, has remarkably anticipated modern science; apparent discrepancies and inaccuracies, which stumbled readers a quarter of a century ago, no longer do so when read intelligently; and, instead of apologies, our wisdom is to wait for further light on the difficulties which remain. Every new discovery lessens those difficulties.

Dr. G. F. Pentecost, of Brooklyn, like so many more of his countrymen, is now on a holiday visit to this side of the Atlantic. Last Sunday he preached twice to large audiences at the Mildmay Conference Hall. In the afternoon he gave a stirring and stimulating address to workers, from the text, "To every man his work." In the evening he discoursed with much power and effect on the words, "Keep yourselves in the love of God." This sermon was much blessed on its delivery during his visit to London two years ago, and he repeated it on Sunday evening by special desire.

A correspondent writes:—

> It is far from my wish to enter into political discussions, but a statement made by the Prime Minister, in Scotland, is too important to be passed over in silence. The Roman Catholic Church, it is affirmed, allows full religious liberty in France and Italy. I have travelled in these countries, and am justified in asking, "Is this liberty that which is offered by the Church, or by the civil authority?" I was in Rome before the Italian court came, and found it was almost impossible to buy an Italian Bible, and it was difficult for English travellers to get their own through the Custom House. In Venice I was asked on a Sunday to preach to a few friends, but we had carefully to avoid singing a hymn, because all Protestant service was prohibited. It was the Romish priesthood who arrested the measure of toleration Austria had granted some years ago, and looked on while soldiers formed a cordon to keep out the Scriptures from the frontier. The Committee of the Bible Society know well how their colporteurs in Spain, and other parts of the Continent, are perpetually hindered by village priests. If there is freedom anywhere on the Continent, it has come from the efforts of politicians, and not through, but in spite of the action of Roman ecclesiastics.

The baptism of the Spirit is so important in its bearings on the Christian life and fuller service for God, that any contribution to our knowledge about it should be gladly welcomed. Mr. Mansfield has made such a contribution in his admirable book on "The Plan of Our Being," reviewed in another column. He bases the spiritual baptism on the family relationship between God and the believer. "It is the father's embrace and the mother's kiss." It produces a state of mind far beyond ordinary Christian joy and peace, in the additional consciousness of power separate from them, and a strong and full faith, which continues in the midst of opposition and apparent failure. Its existence is a proof of the potency of spiritual presence, and is capable of rational explanation by the fact that the soul is capacitated to receive such a blessing. These truths deserve careful attention in our day. Christian workers need a spiritual baptism to cheer them in despairing moods and months when their labours seem to be fruitless, as well as to equip them for a special enterprise. Despondency weakens effort; an abiding joy, because of an unseen but felt Presence, inspires strength.

THE "CHICHESTER" AND "ARETHUSA."—A large company of ladies and gentlemen left town on Friday morning in order to take part in the annual inspection of the Chichester and Arethusa training-ships, which lie in the Thames, off Greenhithe. Among those present were Earl Jersey, Lord Leigh, Admiral Buckle, and Colonel Grant. After luncheon, the prizes and medals given by friends of the movement and by members of the Committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children were distributed. Subsequently Mr. William Williams, the secretary, addressed those assembled. He remarked that the ships had been in existence for forty years, and during that time, without reference to the simple education of the poor of St. Giles's, 10,000 children had been admitted into the homes and on the ships of the Institution. When the work was commenced there was only one training ship on the Thames, and now eleven had been set in operation. The Earl of Jersey, as the new president, addressed the lads in kindly terms.

THE CAPTAIN'S WATCH.

> "Matters were getting serious: the captain was almost worn out, on the bridge day and night, and the fog appearing to grow denser every hour."—From a letter written on board the "Sardinian," June 3.

He stood on the bridge through the weary day,
Wrapped round by the mist so chill,
And the lone midnight, and the dawn's first light
Found him standing and watching still.
For the ship with her freight of young and old,
Was given in charge to his hand;
Her course to guide o'er the waters wide,
Safe on to the friendly strand.

He watched, as the hours dragged slowly by,
With a keen, untiring gaze,
But the practised eye could nought espy
All round save the blinding haze;
He stood unmoved through the long, long day,
And the weary, throbbing brain,
With its care oppressed, might know no rest
Till the path shone clear again.

Our Captain stands on the bridge above,
High over the outstretched deep,
Through the long, long day, and the twilight grey,
He will never slumber nor sleep.
He watches still o'er his church below,
Her safety is in his hand;
Through the night of fear, o'er the waters drear,
He will bring her safe to land.

His eye can reach to the farthest shore,
Though the mists be never so dim;
The sunshine bright, and the darkest night
Are all alike to him.
He passed through the darkness once for us;
It never can touch Him more;
While He stands above we shall safely move
Right on to the shining shore.

Y.W.C.A. HOLIDAY DEPARTMENT.

As the summer season advances, and many are on the point of starting for pleasant trips to lakes and mountains, or returning to their fine parks and country seats, we are anxious to bring before them the case of numberless young women in our large towns, toiling from morning to night in shops, workrooms, &c., to whom even one week of such rest and refreshment would be an untold benefit, but which is quite beyond their reach without assistance from outside. By the help of contributions sent us last year, many tired workers obtained two or three weeks' change to the country or seaside, and the little fund which has gathered in since May has enabled us to arrange holidays for eighty more. Besides these, over 100 touching applications have lately reached us from those who, though paying all they can into the Y.W.C.A. Holiday Club, are unable to pay the whole cost of even our cheapest holiday—namely, from 5s. to 7s.

More than fifty excellent cottages, lodges, farms, &c., have been offered us, where there are kind hearts ready to welcome these young girls for the smallest possible remuneration; but our Holiday Fund is nearly exhausted, and unless replenished, we cannot take advantage of their loving hospitality, and many a worn-out worker must remain in town during the hot and sultry season.

We urgently ask, therefore, that those who are kindly intending to assist this effort will send their contributions, without delay, to the Secretary of the Y.W.C.A. Holiday Club.

GERMANY.—Last month there passed to his rest a man who will be missed by the whole Evangelical Church of the German tongue. Pastor August Schwartzkopff, of Wernigerode, Hartz, born in 1818, was richly endowed in head and heart, a poet of no mean order. The turning-point of his life came when, through Gossner, he received the truth as it is in Jesus in all simplicity. Henceforth his time and talents were consecrated to his new Master. He was the author of "O der bittern Scham und Noth," with which Pastor Theo. Monod has made us so familiar by his translation into English, "Oh the bitter shame and sorrow." His dying words were, "Lord, my Light, my Strength, my Comfort, my Fortress, my Redeemer, my strong Helper."—Anzieger.

MR. GEORGE NEEDHAM.

In a circular letter dated Elim Cottage, Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., June, Mr. Needham says:—

Through the goodness of the Lord I find myself again at my home for summer rest, having ended an evangelistic campaign which occupied nearly eight months. Let me ask you to join with me in thanksgiving for evident tokens of revival interest in the following places where I have conducted a series of special evangelistic services: Lynn, Mass.; Newburg, Mattewan, and Staten Island, N.Y.; New York City; Westchester and Chadds-ford, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Lynchburg, Charlottesville, Norfolk, and Portsmouth, Va.; Raleigh, N.C.; Galveston and Dallas, Texas; Memphis, Tenn.; Louisville, Ky., and Washington, D.C.

My dear wife accompanied me to many of these towns and cities, where she also addressed large audiences on Gospel and prophetic themes. We thank God for this inestimable privilege of preaching Christ. Thousands have heard the Word of Salvation, and many, we believe, have been quickened into newness of life. We also rejoice that there is an earnest call for Bible teaching. Wide doors swing open east, west, north, and south, to those who preach the faithful Word.

CARING FOR THE SICK POOR.

Nearly a year ago a small Home was opened here by way of experiment to receive a few from among the respectable poor in the last stages of illness, whose hopeless condition did not, as a rule, justify their being admitted to, or retained in, the ordinary hospitals, and before whom there might be no prospect but the sick ward of a workhouse until released by death. The work was commenced with the hope of not only soothing the bodily sufferings of some poor friendless ones, but as a means of spiritual blessing. It has already met, though in only a small way, a great need. The details of the cases received are full of interest.

Circumstances have arisen to prevent the continuance of this work in its present locality after September; it is hoped, however, that the way may be opened for others to carry on what has now been proved to be practicable and a means of much comfort and blessing. It would surely be a pity to close the Home without making known the favourable results of our experiment. Inquiries as to the cost of maintenance and other particulars will be gladly given at this Home on application either personally or by letter. F. M. D.

SALVATION ARMY INTERNATIONAL FAREWELL.

Last Thursday evening a great meeting took place in Exeter Hall, to bid farewell to the foreign contingents of the Salvation Army, who have just concluded their tour through England. The African, Indian, Chinese, French, Swedish, and other nationalities were dressed in their native costumes. General Booth, who presided, said he hoped for grand results from the visits, as the soldiers would return to their native lands, and proclaim the Gospel of Truth. He then introduced to the audience a young Swedish girl, sixteen years of age, who was now able to address them in English, though she could not speak the language a month ago. She gave an account of her conversion in good English, and sang several Salvation songs in different languages amidst great cheering.

The General stated that a sum of £2000 was required to send the officers back. They had, however, during the past few weeks fallen on unfortunate times, for owing to the Whitsuntide holiday, and the manner in which people were engrossed with the elections, they had not been able to get much money. Thus they had only £1100 towards the £2000. The expense of the night's meeting was £30, and the collection only amounted to £17. He hoped they would not let them lose.—Daily News.

IF LONDON were from rim to centre the unchallenged possession, the loyal heritage of the Christ of God, the world's millennium would cease to be far distant!—Rev. J. Jackson Wray.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In Colombo, Ceylon, the Band of Hope movement is progressing, but has many hindrances.

The Church of Ireland Temperance Society since its formation has enrolled 90,000 members.

In Scotland, as a rule, farmers do not provide beer for their labourers in harvest time. The custom is English.

The Maine law is so rigidly enforced that at Portland liquor is sometimes sold in sealed egg-shells, the original contents having been blown out.

The death is announced of Sir C. E. Trevelyan, cousin to the late President of the United Kingdom Alliance, and a liberal contributor to its funds.

The President of the Irish Medical Temperance Association says the best grapes yield 17 per cent. of alcohol, whereas the liquor sold often contains 50 per cent.

The Hon. James Black, U.S.A., writes Mr. Malins that as far as he is aware the prohibitory laws of the States do not make provision for compensation to liquor sellers.

In response to her appeal for "20,000 shillings." Miss Weston has been enabled to purchase the two public-houses, and add them to the Sailors' Home, Devonport.

Lord Ripon, who has had opportunities of observing the effects of the drink traffic in many lands, says the temperance cause is one of the most important before the country.

In the United States District Court, Northern Georgia, the judge refused compensation to a drink seller on the ground that the interests of any trade were subordinate to the public good.

The Temperance Society in connection with the Episcopal Church, U.S.A., is spreading rapidly through the States. It is an off-shoot of the Church of England Temperance Society.

Captain Conder, R.E., lecturing before the Anthropological Institute, said the Bechuana tribes were deteriorating in physique, owing to the introduction of bad liquors by the whites.

The Secretary of the Middlesex Hospital has contradicted the statement that 66 per cent. of the expenditure in alcohol is for its consumption by officials; he says 40 per cent. is the proportion.

Public-houses are included in the operation of the Shop Hours Regulation Act. The Act limits the working hours of persons under eighteen to 74 hours per week. Great vigilance will be needed to prevent evasions.

Rev. A. G. Marment, the recently appointed missionary of the Central Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has, since March 1 last, secured fifty-seven pledges from "drunks" and other defendants, at the city police-courts which he attends daily.

Owing to the efforts of Dr. Benson, when Bishop of Truro, a Whitsuntide "pleasure fair" held in the city was removed to the suburbs. This has been a great gain to temperance and morality, as formerly the public-houses were crowded, with the usual results.

The Council of the Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety had arranged for a Colonial and International Congress on Inebriety in London during the current month, but the General Election has made postponement desirable. The Congress will meet when Parliament sits.

In the debate on the Indian Budget, Mr. S. Smith strongly condemns the action of the Government in forcing liquor shops on the natives for the sake of revenue. Drunkenness was thus being caused amongst the most temperate communities in the world, and where it was before unknown.

The International Conference on the liquor traffic in the North Sea have come to an agreement upon the object for which the Conference was convened, namely, to elevate the moral condition of the fishermen by putting an end to the abuses of the liquor traffic, especially that carried on by the copers. The agreement thus arrived at will be submitted to the different Governments represented.

A correspondent in Cape Town writes:—The Cape Parliament, with a diminishing revenue, under the influence of the Dutch wine producers and brandy distillers, who at present can get a majority in the House, has repealed the excise on wine and brandy, while, at the same time, the same class of people are agitating for a protective duty on imported corn and flour. The Dutch South African farmer cares little that the native races will drink his poison to their utter ruin; or that the poor Colonist shall find it hard to subsist owing to the price of bread, so long as he can sell his brandy and get a good price for his corn. Verily, the people of the Cape have need to pray, "Give our senators wisdom."

Mr. A. Gustafson, author of "The Foundation of Death," now on a visit to the United States with his wife, has been interviewed by the representatives of a Washington paper on the traffic question. Mr. Gustafson said:—"Theoretically the temperance movement in England is far in advance of the movement here, but practically there is hardly any comparison. Prohibition can hardly be said to have got a footing even in England, while here it is an important factor in every election. Half measures, such as Sunday closing and some kind of local option, more or less faulty in its capability of application, will no doubt soon be granted in England, but there, as here, it will be useless to expect the steps necessary for the suppression and annihilation of the liquor traffic until the best elements in both parties come out from the parties and join hands and hearts for the express purpose of exterminating this evil."

HOW TO CONDUCT A PRAYER-MEETING.

"Lord, teach us to pray, even as John also taught his disciples."

Are you invited or called upon to conduct a meeting for Prayer? If so, and you feel disposed to render this service, let the following hints have your consideration:—

I. (1) Seek the approval and confirming seal of the Holy Ghost. Put yourself deliberately into his hands. Have your own heart in tune by receiving Him as the "Praying Spirit" in you, and through you. Solemnly and duly make preparation for the meeting.

(2) Carefully and prayerfully choose a goodly number and variety of appropriate hymns. See that they harmonise as much as possible with the subjects to be brought before the meeting.

(3) Carefully and prayerfully cull some brief portions from the Scriptures, specimens of prayer, intercessions, confessions, promises, assurances, &c.

(4) Carefully and prayerfully select suitable subjects for Prayer. Here you will consider the nature of the meeting, the real object for which it is to be held, the needs of those likely to be present, and the needs of those for whom intercession will be made. In this manner set in order the petitions you desire to bring before the King, grouping them on paper, together with your hymns and select Scripture portions.

II. (1) Thus prepared, take your place at the meeting shortly before the appointed hour. Remember, the Holy Ghost must preside, and that just in proportion as you yield yourself up to Him as his mouthpiece and willing instrument, will there be blessing in you, and through you.

(2) Let your motto-words be—brevity, variety, pointedness.

(3) Begin punctually at the hour. If some would keep you waiting, that is no sufficient reason for you to keep the Lord waiting.

(4) Have for an opening hymn one full of praise to God, and heart-stirring appeals to the people. Look well to your hymns throughout the entire meeting. As a rule, more prayers go up to God through the hymns sung than through the orations made by many who profess to lead in prayer. Let the people sing often, though but a few verses at a time, and see that the hymns harmonise as far as possible with the prayers.

(5) Let the opening Prayer be from your own lips, very brief, and invoking the special presence, guidance, and aid of the Spirit. Be careful here. Many a good meeting is half-strangled at the birth by the long prayer (falsely so-called) offered at the opening, while many of those that survive this shock are killed outright at the close by the presiding brother only beginning to pray when he and everyone else ought to have concluded. If you should have special petitions laid on your heart, reserve them, presenting them during the course of the meeting. Do not, as a rule, pray at the close, offer all your prayers DURING THE MEETING, in common with the rest who may lead the devotions.

(6) Take, in the name and strength of the Spirit, full control of the meeting, checking all irregularities, and gently guiding it as the Spirit guides you. Do not allow too many to pray at a time, but opportunely give out a verse to be sung. Should anyone transgress, approach him after the meeting, and humbly, kindly, and prayerfully instruct him.

(7) Make good use of your selected Scripture portions; feed the meeting with them—a little at a time, but often.

(8) Do not give an address, unless there is special call for it. Remember it is a meeting for Prayer, not for addresses. If there are to be addresses at all, they must be very brief, and real helps to prayer.

(9) Bring in due order before the people the petitions or subjects for prayer on your list. The King's business is worthy of being done in a methodical and business-like manner, as well as in a humble and devout spirit. Invite those present not only to take up the subjects you propose, but to present special petitions of their own. Where there is a stated meeting, it is well to invite the people to write, or have written, their special requests for prayer on slips of paper, laying them on the table. During the meeting these can be read over, a pause of half a minute being made after each, in order that all present may present them to God in silent prayer. When all have been thus read over, you can present them collectively in an audible prayer of one minute.

(10) Let there be intervals of from one to two minutes for silent prayer, during the course of the meeting.

(11) You may introduce into the meeting a powerful means of quickening by inviting to speak, for a couple of minutes each, those who can, from their own experience or knowledge, record instances of special or direct answer to prayer. In such cases let supplication give place to thanksgiving.

(12) Conclude punctually. Should there be present some who would desire to continue the meeting, let them have a special meeting afterwards, but first close the meeting in hand. Let the closing be, not with a long prayer, nor yet with a short one, but with a simple Benediction.

THE NEW ABOLITIONIST CONGRESS.

The Congress of the British and Continental Federation for abolishing the State Regulation of Vice, held last week in Exeter Hall, was the occasion of much interest and profit to those who attended it. Thirteen countries were represented, and the reports of progress and of the spread of the principles of the Federation were most encouraging. A keynote of rejoicing ran through the whole proceedings, on account of the abolition of the system in England, while an equally strong feeling was expressed that no effort must be relaxed until that abolition should be extended to our colonies and foreign possessions.

In Belgium, Italy, and Germany the subject has occupied the attention of the respective Legislatures during the past year. The President of the Federation, M. Emile de Laveleye, the well-known professor of Liege, expressed what he believed to be a well-founded hope, that Belgium would be the next country to throw off the shackles of this iniquitous system. From Holland the reports were extremely interesting; in Utrecht compulsory examination has been suspended by the municipal authorities. At the Hague a number of Christian gentlemen have banded themselves together to investigate the moral condition of the city, and already much has been brought to light to show the extent to which the conscience of the people is seared by the blighting effects of State regulated vice. Haarlem has abolished the system, and in Amsterdam it does not exist. In Norway and in Denmark, a midnight mission to men has been commenced by bands of devoted Christian men stationing themselves outside the houses of infamy, and endeavouring to dissuade those who would enter. The Emperor of Brazil has declared that vice shall not be regulated in that country during his reign.

Papers were read by Mr. W. Shaen on the closing period of the abolitionist struggle in the British Parliament; by Mr. Benjamin Scott, City Chamberlain, on ancient laws for the regulation of vice in the City of London; by Mr. Percy Bunting, to show that the Criminal Law Amendment Act was in harmony with the principles of the Federation; by Pastor Le Gros for Mr. George G. Butler, concerning Criminal vice on the Continent and the violation of the penal code in licensed houses of infamy; by Mr. Stephen Burrows, on the State of Naples, &c.

A considerable time was occupied with the revision of the statutes of the Federation with a view to the better consolidation of the organisation, and its permanent establishment on a sound basis.

Meetings for prayer were held each morning in connection with the Federation, though not part of its official programme. These were well attended by most of the foreign delegates as well as English friends.

On Wednesday evening a meeting was held of the International Union of the Friends of Young Girls, a collateral work which has grown out of the Federation. Lady Beauchamp presided, and addresses and reports of work of the deepest interest were given by Madame de Lavaleye, of Brussels; Madame Humbert, Neuchâtel; Madame Coste, Lyons; Madame Andersson, of Stockholm, concerning Sweden, Finland, and Russia; Mdlle. Lungstross, of Bonn, whose work is akin to that of George Müller in many respects; Mrs. Bath, of the work among foreigners in London, and others.

A largely attended and enthusiastic public meeting was held on Thursday night in the Memorial Hall. The City Chamberlain, who presided, urged upon the English abolitionists to place on permanent record the facts, figures, and data with which they had been able to demolish the C.D. Acts. Mr. Aaron Powell, of New York, expressed his intense thankfulness, as an American, for the success which had crowned the labours of the repealers. Speaking as a fellow-worker with W. Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, &c., he brought the greetings of the old Abolitionists of the New World to the new Abolitionists of the Old World, and bade them God speed. America had escaped the taint of legalised vice, but the great moral earthquake which had shaken London last year had roused into vigorous activity an American movement for the protection of girls. The age of consent in one American state was yet fixed as low as seven, in more of them at ten or twelve. It was not till after last July that their eyes were open to the scandal of such laws, and they were now labouring for their amendment in every State in the American Union. M. de Lavaleye said that to come to England after the Continent was comparable to nothing so much as a visit to the pure, bracing, and invigorating air of the High Alps. England was now travelling at a rapid rate along the highway to democracy. Democracy, to be stable and strong, must be based on a high standard of morality, and he believed that the work of the Federation was directly calculated to contribute to the stability and usefulness of the English democracy. Pastor Appia, of Paris, eloquently characterised the destruction of the system of legalised vice in England as one of the greatest events in the history of the century. It gave a deathblow to the doctrines of the necessity of vice, and affirmed the absoluteness of law and the inviolable sanctity of the person of woman. Addresses followed from Madame de Morsier, of Paris, Mrs. H. W. Smith, of the American W.C.T.U., M. Aime Humbert, of Neuchatel (who spoke in French), Mr. Stead, and a Spanish delegate.

Great regret was felt that Mrs. Butler was only able to be present during a very small part of the Congress, owing to the illness of Canon Butler.

ALL THE HISTORY of Christianity is a story of the Supernatural.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

MR. F. T. SNELL has been holding open-air meetings in Cornwall during the past two months; not a few have cried to God for and obtained mercy in these meetings.

THE OBITUARY for the past week includes the names of two well-known Presbyterian pastors in Scotland—Dr. W. B. Robertson, of Irvine, and Dr. George Mackay, of Inverness.

WE OWE MUCH TO OUR VILLAGES.—John Bunyan, the greatest of allegorists; Andrew Fuller, the chief of our theologians; William Carey, the first and foremost of modern missionaries; Robert Hall, the prince of English preachers; John Foster, the profound essayist; and Charles Haddon Spurgeon, the most popular of Christian ministers, were cradled in village homes.—Rev. Charles Williams.

A Y.M.C.A. GARDEN PARTY was held last week at "Caen Wood Towers," Highgate, in connection with the Finsbury Branch. Strawberries and cream were plentifully dispensed, and varied diversions were added to the attractions of the beautiful grounds. After tea an open-air meeting was held, at which Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. Hind Smith, Mr. Orchard, Secretary, and others advocated the claims of the Y.M.C.A. Several of the young men gave testimony to blessing received in connection with the work at Finsbury Park Hall.

A CHRISTIAN WORKERS' OUTING.—Last Saturday the band of evangelistic workers attached to the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., accompanied by other friends, spent a most delightful afternoon and evening among the Surrey hills and dales. Train was taken to Epsom Downs, whence the largest contingent of the party were driven, through lovely scenery, to Box-hill, Dorking. Mr. Robert Burn, the Secretary, who lived for a number of years at Epsom, acted as "guide, philosopher, and friend," pointing out the many features of interest by the way. On Box-hill a luxurious feast, both physical and mental, awaited the party. After enjoying the "high tea," they spent some time in prayer and sacred song, Mr. Burn giving a few details of the Gospel work carried on from Aldersgate-street, and urging the workers to continued and persevering endeavour. All the way back to town the happy company sang favourites from Songs and Solos and The Christian Choir, taking care to ring out a hearty chorus at the stations where stoppages were made.

The Book World.

The Pearl of Lisnadoon; or, A Glimpse of our Irish Neighbours. By Mrs. Ensell. Elliot Stock. The motto on the title-page gives the key-note to the story, which is a well-written one. Mrs. Ensell writes as one in sympathy with her subject, but she writes wisely. The appearance of the book just now is appropriate.

Short Sermons. By Rev. Henry Harris, B.D. Second Edition. Henry Froude. These sermons are models of brevity, interest, and scholarship which keeps a high level of pulpit exposition without descending to pedantry. We have only one fault to find with them: they do not emphasise as strongly as we should like certain points of evangelical doctrine. They are more ethical than spiritual.

Ursula's Beginnings. By Howe Benning. Religious Tract Society. Those who have read "Quiet Corners" will know what to expect from this, its companion volume. It is a strong, wholesome story, showing how right-thinking girls may make their lives beautiful and useful by cheerfully taking up the duties of home, and by sacrificing self for the sake of others' happiness. From the same publishers we have Elsie's Auntie; or, Bearing one Another's Burdens—another excellent story of a loving life full of a noble purpose.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton we have received several volumes of the Sunday Library for Young People. "Violet and Daisy," by M. H. (2s. 6d.), is a story that will warm the hearts of those who care for the poor and suffering around them, and will teach lessons of love to others who have not yet tasted of the luxury of doing good. "Rosa Lindsay" (2s. 6d.), by the same author, shows the responsibilities of a Christian, and the right use of the talents entrusted to us by God. "Elsie Ellis" (3s. 6d.), by Hetty Bowman, is a thoroughly fresh and interesting autobiography of a happy and useful life.

Human Destiny. By Robert Anderson, LL D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. We have already called attention to this noteworthy book, and a fuller perusal deepens our sense of its value. Its strength lies in its fidelity to revelation and its vigorous exposure of mere human speculations which have whispered peace when there was no solid ground for peace. The various theories of the "larger hope" are discussed with scholarly acumen and a keen regard to the teaching of the Bible on the future of the impenitent. The conclusions reached are stated with a force and solemnity which cannot fail to carry conviction to the unprejudiced reader.

Glimpses of Maori Land. By Annie R. Butler. 5s. Religious Tract Society. And such pleasant glimpses! There is not a dull page in the book. Wherever the authoress went she took her Master with her. She and her party "found traces of Dr. A. N. Somerville's visit to the colonies all along our route, in the shape of Young Men's and Ladies' Christian Associations, which are doing much good." The Wellingtonians seem in advance of us in the matter of temperance hotels. Miss Butler speaks of one where she got "a capital dinner of soups, meat, vegetables, and sweets for a shilling. There is a large choice, and all is beautifully cooked and served up." It is delightful to read of Maori Christians, and of the work of Mr. Richard Taylor among them. This book, as full as it can hold of good things, will form a suitable companion to Mr. Wyatt Gill's "Jottings from the Pacific."

The Steps of a Good Man. By H. S. Engström. Wm. Hunt & Co. Devout meditations in verse. The poetry is halting in rhythm and technical finish, but the thought glows with pious aspirations.

Inward Holiness. By L. F. Selwyn. 1s. Jas. Nisbet & Co. Practical remarks on the guidance and control of the Holy Spirit are here given. The little book will be helpful to those seeking to live a truly Christian life.

A Sketch of the Life of Bishop King. By J. Hanchard. 3d. Kensit. Those who wish to know about the insidious progress of Ritualism should get Mr. Hanchard's exposure of the sayings and doings of Bishop King.

The Church, the Laity, and the Hospitals. By B. Burford Rawlings. 1s. Edward Stanford. This pamphlet advocates the idea of national relief for the sick poor. The appeal made to public philanthropy is strong and forcible.

Caprana. By Rev. Duncan Macintosh. 2d. National Temperance Depôt. This temperance tale, told in verse, cannot lay claim to high poetical value, but it throbs with earnestness of purpose and righteous indignation against the national curse.

Papers for the Present Time. No. ix. Yeast By Pastor Joshua Donovan. 2d. S. R. Briggs, Toronto. Mr. Donovan looks at the parable of the woman leavening the meal as a picture presenting certain historical and prophetical truths.

Substitution. By Rev. A. R. M. Finlayson. 1d. Drummond's Tract Depôt. Sound teaching conveyed in a winsome way. We have need of such teaching, especially on the fundamental doctrine which Mr. Finlayson handles with marked ability.

Guide to Norwich, 6d.; The Rivers and Broads of Norfolk and Suffolk, 2d.; Great Yarmouth, 2d. Jarrold & Sons. These guide-books contain numerous illustrations, with interesting descriptive accounts of these favourite summer resorts.

The summer number of The Graphic has been issued, and is a very attractive production. Amongst numerous other coloured illustrations, it contains the last of the series of drawings of the late Randolph Caldecott, which render the number of unusual interest.

Illustrations. Conducted by Francis George Heath. 3d Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co. This cheap and attractive monthly has already found a distinct place for itself in the crowd of periodicals. Its illustrations are the special feature; and its articles are short and interesting.

Reasons for Home Rule. By Rev. Malcolm MacColl, M.A. 6d. National Press Agency. Mr. MacColl's arguments are weighty. and deserve careful consideration. His conclusions may not commend themselves to the reader, but they are worth more than a passing thought.

New Idea of the Sabbath. By Rev. John Harries. 1s. Elliot Stock. This interesting and scholarly monograph on the Sabbath question deserves careful study. It is the production of a man who has evidently acquainted himself with the literature of the subject, so his conclusions carry weight.

India's Needs. By John Murdoch, LL.D 1s. 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C. This is a valuable hand-book of facts regarding the material, political, social, moral, and religious condition of India. It gives a great deal of useful information, and shows how the evils from which the Hindoos suffer may be remedied.

The Gospel of St. Luke (chap i. to xii.). By T. M. Lindsay, D D 4d. Blackie & Son. Professor Lindsay continues his useful work of furnishing commentaries for Bible-classes and senior Sabbath-school scholars. He has the knack of putting a truth pointedly, and of condensing the expositions of great exegetes.

Ireland's Woe, England's Worry: A Lecture by Rev E. C. Britton. 4d. John Kensit. Mr. Britton charges the Church of Rome with teaching principles which involve the destruction of the supremacy of the law of the land, national unity, the advance of true knowledge, and domestic purity. His words are worthy of attention in the present crisis.

Rome's Theory of Tradition. By C. H. Collette. 1s. John F. Shaw & Co. This is an able and interesting comparison of the rules of faith adopted by the churches of the Reformers and that of Rome. It hits hard at the folly of lending the weight of authority to Apostolic tradition, and exposes the blind trust demanded of Papists by their spiritual teachers.

The Ground and Transfer of Suffering. By L. W. Mansfield. E. & J. B. Young & Co., New York. Mr. Mansfield is a Christian philosopher. In this pamphlet he argues that the ground of suffering is to be seen in the structure of spiritual being, and that the transfer of suffering, which receives its highest illustration in the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ, can be partially apprehended in the facts of Christian experience.

The Art of Speaking; or, The Principia of Vocal Delivery. By Rev. Harold Ford. 1s. Heywood. Mr. Ford deals very lucidly with the first principles of oratory, and if the concise rules he lays down are thoroughly and persistently applied by the student, they cannot fail to secure them advantages, although one may not become a Demosthenes, "a man who proved himself to be a miracle of genius, because he had been a miracle of labour."

The Case of the Irish Protestants in Relation to Home Rule Stated. By One of Them. William McGee, Dublin. The political crisis through which we are passing is responsible for this book. Its value lies in the fact that its writer is an Ulster Radical, who knows what he talks about. He maintains that the Irish, if power is given to them, would do again what they did before. They cannot show open violence towards the Protestants, but they would, he believes, slowly yet surely encroach on their rights and liberties.

Journal of the Transactions of the Victoria Institute, or the Philosophical Society of Great Britain. No. 77. 3s 6d. 7, Adelphi-terrace, Strand. This journal contains a valuable and suggestive address by Professor Stokes, of Cambridge, on the results of modern science; an able discussion of the contribution that Egyptian records on tombs and papyri have made to the illustration of Bible history, by Dr. Porter, of Belfast; and a trenchant criticism of the theory of Natural Selection, by Professor Duns, of Edinburgh.

Israel's Greatest Prophet. By H. L Hastings. 2d. S. Bagster & Sons. Our brave American friend, to whose imprisonment for preaching on Boston Common we lately called attention, does good service through the Press as well as on the platform. He conducts an "Anti-Infidel Library," which is calculated on the one hand to strengthen faith, and on the other to expose the errors of atheism. In the number before us, he forcibly traces the points of resemblance between Moses and the prophet greater than Moses, and shows clearly to the sons of Israel that the Messiah has come.

Temperance Literature. 337, Strand:—"Temperance and Young Physic. By Dr. B. W. Richardson. A powerful address, urging the importance and necessity of the medical profession taking a decided stand on the side of temperance. Would that Dr. Richardson's advice was followed! "And so We Bury our Dead." By Mrs R D. Bolton. A tract written to expose the horrors of drink at funerals—the making merry (?) over a corpse, and drinking "toasts to the dead." "The Extension of Inebriate Homes for Women." By Susan Dransfield. A list of Inebriate Homes, with some interesting facts as to their management, powers, results, and need.

The Covenant Promise of the Father. Second Edition. By Thomas Payne. 1s. 6d. Simpkin. Marshall & Co. This treatise explains what is meant by the Pentecostal anointing of the Holy Ghost, and tells how that blessing may be obtained. Its method of exposition is thoroughly Scriptural. It insists on the clean heart as a condition of enduement with power from on high; and it maintains that every Christian should not only seek personal salvation, but should also look for a soul-saving baptism, which would fit him to turn many to righteousness. We rejoice to know that it has already been helpful to many workers in the vineyard, and we wish it a still wider sphere of usefulness.

Colonial and Indian Exhibition.—As a panoramic presentation of the inexhaustible resources of the Empire, the Exhibition now holding possession of South Kensington is chiefly remarkable, and it is this impression that the proprietors of The European Mail and The Colonies and India have sought to reproduce in the penny illustrated Guide just issued from their office. Of the success with which this happy conception has been carried out it is impossible to speak in too strong terms. Consisting of over 150 pages, profusely illustrated by well-executed woodcuts, and generally got up in a style that will ensure its preservation for years to come, this guide is a veritable monument of journalistic enterprise.

We have received from Messrs. John F. Shaw & Co. several booklets of more than ordinary value. Revival, the Present Urgent Need of the Church, by C. Russell Hurditch, when delivered as an address was useful in stirring up Christians to pray for spiritual blessings; we hope it will serve the same end in its printed form. What is a Christian? by F. E Marsh, is characterised by sound exposition and spiritual teaching, and may be profitably put into the hands of young converts. The Hope of the Christian, by J. Denham Smith, points to Christ's second coming. Beware of one False Step is a reprint of an address by the late Rev. Samuel Martin, of Westminster Chapel.

COW-CROSS MISSION HOME OF REST.

A small cottage, known as Pelham Villa, Tulse Hill, Ventnor, Isle of Wight, has been taken (for at least one year), at a rental of £38 per annum, and will be opened on the 16th inst., as a home of rest for our weary workers (six at a time), needing a fortnight's change of air and scene. The former occupant has kindly given and bequeathed to Mr. W. Catlin, superintendent of the Mission, the furniture of the cottage to be used for this purpose. But the helpers in Gospel work (street preachers, tract distributors, Sunday-school and Band of Hope teachers), who give their services gratuitously, are all of them very poor people, so that in most cases we shall have to pay their travelling expenses, as we shall not feel it right to use the funds of the Mission. Contributions in the shape of food, garden produce more especially, will be very thankfully received by the housekeeper as above.

These wearied workers, when refreshed, are anticipating some evangelistic work in other parts of the island, as the Lord may open up the way. We earnestly commend our brother, William Catlin, now nearly sixty years of age, and his band of volunteers, to the practical sympathy of your readers.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

DECAZEVILLE.—M. Réveillaud has been giving addresses in this and some neighbouring towns, where he has found most attentive listeners.

PARIS.—On Whit Sunday the Synod of the Augsburg Confession caused to be read in its churches a circular recommending the duty of family worship, and also that prayer should be made in public and in private for the Church.

LAUSANNE.—The sixth triennial fête of the Y.M.C.A. of French Switzerland was held at Lausanne May 22, in the Ton-halle, Lausanne, for three days. Delegates came from all the affiliated towns, and sermons, reports, banquets, &c., made a very successful gathering.

DRESDEN.—This city has given £5000 towards the building of a hospital by the evangelical Lutheran Deaconesses' Institution, in addition to £15,000 devoted to the same purpose by the Diet of Saxony. The Hospital is to be used as a training-school for nurses.

BERLIN.—The Society whose object is to help the unemployed and homeless, has given an account of its last winter's work. From September to May, 6538 persons were refreshed by a warm breakfast on Sunday mornings, and it is hoped strengthened spiritually by the Gospel addresses.

BULL FIGHTS IN FRANCE.—The Evangéliste of Nîmes, again calls upon the authorities to put down bull-fights, those savage, brutal, and illegal entertainments which in the summer months are got up for the people, and which are complaisantly tolerated by those charged to execute the laws.

BELGIUM.—Although much encouragement has been received in colportage and evangelisation, the work is very difficult. At Antwerp the Pastor seeks in vain a room in which to hold meetings. As soon as it gets to be known they are Protestants, the house, ear, and heart are shut to them. Gross superstition reigns, not only in country places, but also in many towns.

GENEVA.—The Swiss Society advocating the observance of the Lord's Day was held in Geneva, June 23. The Committee urgently pressed upon all Christians to seek to suppress the public noisy fêtes held on Sundays. A very successful innovation was made quite recently, when the "Tir Militaire" held its grand shooting festival on Thursday instead of, as heretofore, on Sunday. The Committee is working for the suppression of Postal service on Sunday.—Evangéliste.

SPAIN.—M. Empaytaz, of Barcelona, speaking of the hindrances to the free proclamation of the Gospel during the reign of Alfonso XII., says they were caused not so much by the young king as by the intolerance of the party who called him to the throne. If the Gospel has not made more progress of late years, it must be attributed to the profound indifference of the nation to anything really serious. Mr. Armstrong is of opinion that with more religious liberty, evangelical work would advance in Spain; he believes that though the recent terrible judgments have not caused a national humiliation, yet that many individuals, especially in the villages, are better prepared to receive the truth.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE.

Sir,—As a great deal has been written in the public papers in favour of the People's Palace for East London, I trust you will allow the doubts and fears of those who have laboured for years for the good of the working classes there, to be expressed in your columns, especially as £100,000 of public money is proposed to be expended in this scheme for the benefit of the people. Our fear is that if drink is to be sold, in conjunction with indoor and outdoor concerts, it must lead to a sort of Cremorne Gardens in time, and if there is to be Sunday opening the result will be a further source of demoralisation to the neighbourhood, so that the whole thing will be a curse instead of a blessing. It is now some months ago that Canon Wilberforce publicly asked if intoxicating liquors were to be sold on the premises, and, as no answer had been given up to last week, our secretary, Mr. Kerwin, wrote asking:—

(1) Will intoxicating drinks be sold on the new premises of the People's Palace?

(2) Will the Palace be opened on Sundays?

To these straightforward inquiries the following reply has been received:—

"Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 18th inst., I beg to state that the two questions to which you refer, viz., whether intoxicating drinks are to be sold in the People's Palace, and whether the Palace will be opened on Sundays, have never yet been before the trustees; and it would obviously be premature for them to discuss the points while they still require £30,000 to carry out their scheme.

"Yours faithfully,

(Signed) "A. Brownlow, Hon. Sec.

"Edwin H. Kerwin, Esq."

This is not calculated to allay our fears, and I should hardly imagine it would be quite satisfactory to those who are subscribing their money in the hope of helping to raise the masses.—I am, yours faithfully, Fredk. N. Charrington.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, E.

[If it would be premature to consider such vital questions as the above while £30,000 remained to be subscribed, it was still more premature to obtain £70,000 before considering and deciding them.—Ed. Christian.]

A TREE OF LIFE.

Sir,—"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick; but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life." My heart bubbles over with joy in the Lord this morning. The article on "The Scapegoat," signed M., in The Christian for May 20, is a precious tree of life to me. Over thirty years ago, when I was a girl going to Sunday-school in Glasgow, in dear old "Bible-loving Scotland," the Scapegoat came up, but the explanation was not satisfying. All those years I have been desiring light on it, for there seemed a precious truth in it, but it was hid. Now it shines. "Shining more and more unto the perfect day." "One lot for the Lord, and the other lot for dismissal." How clear it seems now, praise the Lord, and how the precious texts proving it rush to my mind. "Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats . . . sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works."

Now for "dismissal" (see R.V. margin), "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us" (Ps. ciii. 12), and again in Isa. xxxviii. 17, "Thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back," and further, in Micah vii. 19, "And thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea;" Heb. viii. 12, "And their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Not only dismissal, but forgetfulness. O glory to his precious name. And it is all in Jesus. It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell, and if we are just in Him we get it all. And in Him such joy even in this life: "These things have I written unto you, that your joy might be full." Joy and peace. In Me, peace—in the world, tribulation; but be of good cheer I have overcome the world."

And the happy thought comes to me in connection with this; the watching, longing children are craving for light on his coming. Nothing but the personal presence of the beloved Bridegroom can satisfy the bride. "We groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption." O come, Jesus, is the cry of my whole being. The whole creation groans under a load of sin. That is the only cure. It will joyfully break on us some day, just as this light, long desired, came to me yesterday. O to "be counted worthy." I heave a sigh for the poor unbelievers, but they won't listen. Lord, help us to be faithful. I do thank "M." for that precious article. Helen Robertson.

Y.M.C.A: WHERE TO DRAW THE LINE.

Sir,—This is the question that is being asked by many Y.M.C.A. Secretaries at the present time, who are seeking counsel of God in the matter. "First things first" is the motto cry of some; with others, the expediency of opening the door wider, and advocating what is now called "muscular Christianity."

Will you allow the question to be discussed (I trust in a prayerful spirit) through the medium of your valuable paper, so that we may arrive at some practical conclusion, if possible, in the matter?—Yours very truly, C.

THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me to augment the methods proposed by Rev. F. B. Meyer, in your issue of the 24th inst., by the following suggestion:—The Indian and Colonial Exhibition is causing at the present time an unusual influx of wealthy colonists into the Metropolis, amongst whom there are doubtless many earnest Christians. Could not some steps be taken to elicit from the brethren, coming from all parts of the world, information on the above subject which would be most valuable to friends willing to assist in this important work? These colonial visitors might also be stimulated to help on the work after they return home. A more opportune time for organising a world-wide scheme of evangelisation by unpaid agency may never again be presented to us.

I heartily approve of the scheme suggested by Mr. Meyer, and hope that those who can will help the many colonists and intending emigrants, who really long to be heralds of the Cross.

A PHILOSOPHICAL STUDY OF MAN.*

A purely philosophical work is often uninteresting to the general reader, because of its use of technical phrases and severe reasoning. Mr. Mansfield has accomplished the praiseworthy task of writing a book which, while logical in thought and expression, discusses philosophical problems in a language and manner capable of comprehension by the many. His object is to find the plan of our being in the conditions of that being. He considers man mentally, physically, and with reference to his material surroundings. Starting with the axiom—"a created personality, coming from a spiritual Creator, will be a spiritual personality, and its construction will be from spiritual elements"—he shows man to be self-active but not self-existent, self-conscious but not self-creative; in other and more familiar words, to live, move, and have his being in God. This activity must find scope for exercise, and its proper field is outside of itself. Receptive, emotional, and retentive capacities are given to receive, continue, and hold what has been bestowed. Will comes into play to execute. The living soul and rational spirit act through powers gifted and sustained by God. Their operations are, however, hampered and twisted by the forces of sin and evil, which have entered into human history.

Mr. Mansfield is specially happy in pointing out how Christ mediates between the Supreme Will and our wills in the atonement and the ministry of reconciliation thus inaugurated. Departure or lapse from purity and holiness of spiritual being will, from the potency of its elements, increase indefinitely unless adequate powers of resistance are received from a supernatural source. Such powers of resistance are brought by Christ to all who receive Him. He unites Himself with the human personality, and makes it a joint-heir with Himself to the inheritance reserved for the people of God. The individual will merges gradually in the Divine, and in so doing is introduced to a plane of thought and action on which the highest desires are gratified.

This is an imperfect outline of a complete and suggestive scheme of Christian philosophy. The details, in which the value of the book lies, deserve careful study. They put the thinker on a lofty height, and furnish him with a breadth of vision which must help him greatly in facing the problems of life.

* Traces of the Plan of our Being. By Lewis W. Mansfield. Second Edition. 75 cents. E. & J. B. Young & Co., New York.

SOUTHPORT HOLINESS CONVENTION.

This Convention, organised a year ago for the deepening of spiritual life, is likely from the success which has attended the meetings to become an annual institution. The sessions last week were held four times a day. A large tent seating 1500 people was erected, and this was crowded nearly every evening to its utmost capacity.

On Monday evening, June 28, Rev. E. E. Jenkins, gave a searching introductory address, based on Malachi iii. 1—3.

On Tuesday evening Rev. Thomas Champness gave a powerful address on "Consecration." Speaking to those who could not engage in public work for Christ, the speaker said: Don't look down on your work, but whatever it is "fill your hands" with it. The mother with her children can so fill her hand with service as to lead the children to Jesus, and was not that something worth doing? Not the indolent Christians, but those whose hands are filled with service, are the happiest. Let us not be thinking so much of going to heaven as of finding our heaven down here in hands filled with service for Jesus.

On Wednesday evening, Dr. Stephenson, of the Children's Home, gave a helpful address on 2 Chron. xxix., which he said might be regarded as an Old Testament parable of the cleansing and restoring of the temple of the heart, for our hearts are now the temples of the living God. In applying the subject, he said emotion is intended to lead to service, and the holiness that spends itself in song is not the holiness that God requires, or the holiness that the Church needs. "The secret of a happy life," said Dr. Stephenson, in conclusion, "is a moment at a time, and that moment for God." A profound impression was produced by the address of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, on Friday evening, on "Be filled with the Spirit." Everyone, he said, who wholly gives himself up to God is filled with the Spirit of God, whether he knows it or not: "Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates (or counterfeits)?" We have not to wait as the disciples did for the Day of Pentecost. These conditions do not exist now, and if Christ were standing here in our midst, He would say, "Be filled with the Spirit." In John iv. 14, Christ says: "The water (water always represent the Spirit) that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life." We are to be wells of water, not "broken vessels," as we sometimes sing. Among the things obstructing the outflow of the Spirit Mr. Hughes enumerated worldly pleasures; shady practices in business; love of money, an unforgiving spirit, &c. Our space will not allow us to report the other excellent addresses which were delivered at the various sessions of this Convention.

BOURNEMOUTH Y.M.C.A.—The "Cairns Memorial House," St. Peter's-road, Bournemouth, is now completed, and we are prepared to receive young men as boarders for short or long periods.

Charles F. Haines, Secretary.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—July 11, Acts xvi. 1—13; July 12, xvi. 14—24; July 13, xvi. 25—40; July 14, xvii. 1—15; July 15, xvii. 16—34; July 16, xviii. 1—17; July 17, xviii. 18—28.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on tent meetings at Langholm, N.B.——A rector in the county of Berks entreats prayer that God would graciously grant a revival of true religion in his church.——That God would speedily open the way for the establishment of a coffee tavern in a village in Suffolk, and pour out his Holy Spirit upon the inhabitants.

MR. A. G. PARROTT (late of the China Inland Mission) is now in this country pursuing his medical studies with the view of returning to China to labour as a self-supporting worker in the Gospel. He would be glad to undertake the Sunday services of any small congregation within easy distance of London; communications may be made to him at 143, Wilberforce-road, Finsbury-park, N.

BRIDPORT, DORSET.—A series of tent services, lasting three weeks, has been concluded here. They were well attended throughout, a large proportion of those present being working men in their working clothes. The services were conducted by Mr. John Bennett, of the Evangelisation Society. His earnest words of appeal to the undecided, and of Christian counsel to believers, will be long remembered.

SUNDAY, JULY 11.—2 SAMUEL II.

1.—David enquired of the Lord.—A beautiful illustration of Prov. iii. 5, 6, and Ps. xxxvii. 23. Hebron was "situated in a strong position in the mountains of Judah, amidst David's friends, and withal having peculiarly sacred associations"—S. C.

3.—And his men that were with him did David bring up, &c.—"Thus doth our heavenly Leader, whom David prefigured, take us to reign with Him, who have suffered with Him. Passing by our manifold infirmities, as if they had not been, He removeth us from the land of our banishment, and the ashes of our forlorn Ziklag, to the Hebron of our peace and glory."—Bishop Hall

"It is, perhaps, the general rule, that we are seldom admitted to the fulness of God's presence, and to the enjoyment of that peace which passes all understanding, until we have gone through great throes of spirit, and groanings that cannot be uttered, in the conviction of our forlorn and miserable condition."—Kilts.

4.—They anointed David, &c.—"David had already been anointed by Samuel (1 Sam. xvi. 13). . . . His first anointing indicated God's secret purpose, his second the accomplishment of that purpose. The interval between the anointing of the Lord Jesus as the Christ of God, and his taking to Himself his kingdom and glory, seems to be thus typified. David was anointed again king over Israel" (v. 3).—Sp. Com. Might not the anointing of David by Judah be rather taken as typical of our Lord's acceptance by the Church of this dispensation, while the third anointing (by Israel) speaks of that millennial glory when He shall reign whose right it is?

14.—Play.—The word "is applied to the serious game of war, to be played by twelve combatants on each side, with the two armies for spectators."—Sp. Com. It was an attempt to avoid a pitched battle by a fight between champions chosen to represent each of the contending armies.

16.—Fell down together.—There was no defence; each was intent on slaying his fellow. The left-handedness of the Benjamites would help to make the slaughter complete.

28.—Pursued after Israel no more, &c.—i.e., in that campaign, for iii. 1 tells of long war.

MONDAY, JULY 12.—2 SAMUEL III.

3.—Maacah, the daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur.—Geshur—"a region in Syria, north of Israel. This marriage seems to have been a political match made by David with a view to strengthen himself against Ish-bosheth's party, by the aid of a powerful ally in the north. Piety was made to yield to policy, and the bitter fruit of this alliance with a heathen prince he reaped in the life of the turbulent Absalom."—Jamieson.

16.—And her husband went . . . weeping.—"Phaltiel was not the first man, nor the last, who has lamented to be deprived of that which did not belong to him."—Kitto.

17.—Ye sought for David in times past, &c.—True desires diverted. So with many now who have real longings after Christ, their King. Some Ish-bosheth, some secondary object, intervenes. Ish-bosheth was not a heathen. During his reign much land was recovered from the Philistines. So the spiritual Ish-bosheth need not be anything frivolous or evil. It may be intellectual work, or some high moral aims; some Christian friend or minister, some favourite theology, or some patent plan for Christian living, put in the place of Christ. This speech shows that Abner had been guilty in opposing David hitherto, that he knew him to be the Lord's anointed. His motive was probably ambition. He thought to have more power and liberty under Ish-bosheth. Are there not many Abners still—men who, knowing that they should yield all to Christ, resist from an unworthy fear of loss of power and freedom? If Abner had yielded to David at the first, there is little doubt but he would have been David's chief captain instead of Joab. So when we do give Christ his royal seat we gain vastly more than we lose. Only then do we attain to our highest capabilities.

18.—Now then do it.—It was entirely in their own hands. David wished to be king. It was God's will that he should be By him only could civil war be ended, and complete deliverance from all enemies be attained. Their will alone hindered their prosperity. Just so, many are now praying for some future deliverance, whose first duty is that present submission to the King which is their highest privilege. By the hand of my servant David, &c.—He was to bring them victory. Therefore it was of far greater importance to admit him as king, than to fight the foe. The taking up of a right attitude towards Christ our King is the first and greatest duty, greater even than any direct attack on sin, whether within or about us. It involves everything else, since it is by his hand deliverance must be wrought.

TUESDAY, JULY 13.—2 SAMUEL IV.

2, 3.—Beeroth, &c.—"From Joshua ix. 17, it might have been expected that the population of Beeroth would be Canaanite. But from some unknown cause the Canaanite inhabitants of Beeroth had fled to Gittaim, an unknown place, unless it is the same as Gath, and continued there as sojourners. It is obvious to conjecture that this flight of the Beerothites took place at the time of Saul's cruel attack on the Gibeonites (2 Sam. xxi. 1, 2). If so, it is possible that Baanah and Rechab (the latter name is a foreign one, Jer. xxxv. 6) may have been native Beerothites, and have been instigated to murder the son of Saul by a desire to avenge the blood of their countrymen. The fact of their being reckoned as Benjamites is quite compatible with their Canaanitish blood. Anyhow, it is significant that the destruction of Saul's house and kingdom should have proceeded from Beeroth, the Gibeonite city."—Sp. Com.

4.—Jonathan, &c.—"This mention of Mephibosheth seems to be inserted here partly to show that with the death of Ish-bosheth the cause of the house of Saul became hopeless, and partly to prepare the way for the subsequent mention of him (see ix., xvi., xix. 25, &c.)."—Sp. Com.

9—12.—David's quick, hot anger is greatly to his honour. It is grand to see his generous and fiery wrath, as he answers the culprits in total forgetfulness alike of his own interests and of their subtle flattery. His conduct in this instance is most noble.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14.—2 SAMUEL V.

1, 2.—Behold, we are thy bone, &c.—A threefold reason for anointing David king, which is full of suggestion:—(1) Relationship: "We are thy bone, &c." So with the Christian and his Lord. "We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones" (Eph. v. 30). The believer's oneness with Christ is the true foundation of a consecrated life. It makes full consecration possible, while it makes it to be only "our reasonable service." (2) Experience: "In time past," &c. Many have experience of the delivering power of the true David, even before they acknowledge Him fully as their king; and these occasional experiences are great inducements to a subsequent submission. (3) Divine appointment: (a) As shepherd—"Thou shalt feed" (i.e., shepherd); and (b) as leader in war—"Thou shalt be captain."

4.—David was thirty years old, &c.—"The age at which the Levites entered upon their duties (Num. iv. 3); at which young men commenced to take part in public business in Greece; at which Joseph was made ruler over Egypt (Gen. xli. 46); at which Jesus Christ was anointed with the Holy Ghost in his baptism" (Luke iii 23).—Cam. Bible.

6.—"Except," &c.—Read rather: "Thou shalt not come hither, but the blind and the lame shall keep thee off."—Coverdale's Bible.

8.—For "whosoever getteth up to the gutter."—Read, "by the watercourse."—Sp. Com.

There is here no sign of David's seeking Divine counsel, and subsequent history shows that Joab was a thorn in his side. This is another warning of the wrong we do ourselves and others when we neglect our high privilege of acknowledging God in everything.

17.—But when the Philistines heard, &c.—The full consecration of a heart to God is often the signal to Satan to make his fiercest attack. But how safe is such a heart!

19—24.—David inquired.—The two invasions were alike, to all appearance. David sought and received Divine guidance in regard to the first. He must have been in great danger of presuming on that guidance in reference to the second. But no; he inquires again, and receives a very different answer. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him," &c.

THURSDAY, JULY 15.—2 SAMUEL VI.

2.—The ark of God.—"Why did not David remove the Mosaic tabernacle to Mount Zion at the same time as the ark? One of the principal motives may have been that two high priests had arisen, one of whom officiated at the tabernacle of Gibeon; whilst the other—viz., Abiathar—had been the channel of all Divine communications to David during the time of his persecution by Saul; so that he could no more think of deposing him than he could of deposing Zadok, the officiating high priest at Gibeon."—Keil and Delitzsch.

3.—Upon a new cart.—It should have been carried on the shoulders of the Levites (Num. iv. 15, and vii. 9). The "new cart" was the way of the Philistines (1 Sam. vi. 7, 8), the shoulder was God's way. The first mistake, then, was in serving God in a forbidden fashion.

6, 7.—Uzzah put forth, &c.—"Uzzah's offence consisted in the fact that he had touched the ark with profane feelings, although with good intentions. Touching the ark, the throne of the divine glory and visible pledge of the invisible presence of the Lord, was a violation of the majesty of the Holy God. 'Uzzah was therefore a type of all who with good intentions, humanly speaking, yet with unsanctified minds, interfere in the affairs of the kingdom of God, from the notion that they are in danger.'"—Keil and Delitzsch.

14, 15.—David danced . . . with all his might, &c.—Here we see the great-hearted enthusiasm of David's godliness. Not with mere painstaking propriety, but with the fulness of his heart did he serve his God—not with a stately ceremonial, but with the exhuberant gladness of one who had found his home in God.

FRIDAY, JUNE 16.—2 SAMUEL VII.

5—16.—The Lord's message to David.—"Thou shalt not build a house for Me; but I, who have from the very beginning glorified myself in thee and my people, will build a house for thee: and thy son shall erect a house for Me. This message contains the deep, general truth that God must first of all build a man's house before the man can build God's house, and applies it especially to the kingdom of God in Israel."—Keil and Delitzsch.

"The way to render to God is to take yet more largely from his bounteous hand. To be a thankful, unquestioning recipient of grace glorifies God far more than all we could render unto Him."—C. H. M.

13, 16.—I will stablish the throne of his kingdom for ever.—"However unmistakable the allusions to Solomon are, the substance of the promise is not fully exhausted in him. The threefold repetition of the expression 'for ever' points beyond the time of Solomon, and to the eternal continuance of the seed of David. . . . When the promise was given that the throne of the kingdom of David should continue to 'eternity,' an eternal duration was also promised to the seed that should occupy this throne. We must not reduce the idea of eternity to the popular notion of a long, incalculable period, but must take it in an absolute sense, as the promise is evidently understood in Psalm lxxxix. 30: 'I set his seed for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven.' The posterity of David could only last for ever by running out in a person who lives for ever—i.e., by culminating in the Messiah"—Keil and Delitzsch.

18—29.—David's thanksgiving.—As we realise the greatness of his blessings, we are laid low, both in his sight and in ours. Our prayer should be, "Lord, humble me by thy love."

21.—According to Thine own heart hast Thou done all, &c.—To David the great goodness shown to him was valued chiefly as a revelation of God's heart He did not allow the abundance of the gifts to hide the hand that gave.

SATURDAY, JULY 16.—2 SAMUEL VIII.

General view of Chapter.—"To the promise of the establishment of his throne there is appended a general enumeration of the wars by which David secured the supremacy of Israel. In this survey all the nations are included with which war had ever been waged by David, and which he had conquered, and rendered tributary: the Philistines and Moabites, the Syrians of Zobah and Damascus, Toi of Hamath, the Ammonites, Amalekites, and Edomites. It is very evident from this, that the chapter before us not only treats of the wars which David carried on after receiving the Divine promise mentioned in ch. vii., but of all the wars of his entire reign."—Kiel and Delitzsch.

2.—Casting them down to the ground.—Better, "Making them lie down on the ground." "David took great numbers of the Moabites prisoners of war, and made them lie down on the ground, and then divided them by a measuring line into three parts, putting two-thirds to death, and saving alive one-third."—Sp. Com. "Jewish writers assert that the cause of this particular severity against this people was their having massacred David's parents and family, whom he had, during his exile, committed to the King of Moab."—Jamieson. "By this victory Balaam's prophecy was fulfilled" (Num. xxiv. 17).

6—14.—The Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.—This sentence is twice repeated in this short summary of David's wars, in order, doubtless, to impress upon our minds that by God's favour alone did he succeed.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED IN 1844.

THE Committee very earnestly appeal for greatly needed help in Annual Subscriptions, Donations, and Offertories to maintain their present large staff of earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers engaged under the directions and superintendence of the Parochial Clergy, in visiting the poor, the sick, the ignorant, and the erring; and who help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Some grants have been withdrawn and others are in jeopardy for lack of funds.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a VESSEL WITH EVERY FLEET.

E. J. MATHER, Director.
181, Queen Victoria-st. (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. Earl of Aberdeen.

Over FIFTY THOUSAND of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 RAGGED SCHOOL MISSIONS affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by JOHN KIRK, Secretary.
Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THEATRICAL CHILDREN at the Sea side.—Mr. and Mrs. COURTHOPE-TODD desire to take to Lowestoft this summer some of the sickly and over-taxed little ones who are members of Macready House. Children's Services will be held daily on the sands, so that sea air and spiritual instruction will be simultaneously afforded. Who will contribute—not for a "day in the country," but a week by "God's beautiful Sea." Please send to "Sick Fund, Theatrical Mission Institute, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden."

Mission and other Appeals.

Hounslow Gospel Mission.—Will any of your readers contribute towards erecting a Gospel Hall in this neighbourhood.—W. E. Whittaker, Shaftesbury Villa, Hounslow.

Ealing Y W C A.—The Lord is blessing the work here, and we are compelled to seek larger premises, for which we need help towards furnishing. We are also much in need of a piano. Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Secretary, Mrs. E. S. Tulloch, 50, Grange-park, Ealing, W.

German and Dutch Tracts.—Would you ask your readers if they would send me, as in former years, a supply of Mrs Grimkè's text-cards, in German and Dutch, to take abroad for distribution. They are very much liked by the people abroad, and who can tell of the blessing that they will bring, remembering God's promise that his word shall not return unto Him void.—(Miss) Anne von Mielecka, 43, Doughty-street, Mecklenburgh-square, W.C.

Mission to Roman Catholics in Gratz, Styria.—This Mission was commenced thirteen years ago by the American Board of Foreign Missions, but the Board have found it necessary to curtail their operations in Austria, and among others in Gratz, where they have a devoted evangelist at work. His work must, however, be given up unless the latter find £30 per annum to help defray expenses. Mrs. Oppler, 7, Somerleyton-road, Brixton, will thankfully receive and acknowledge donations.

A Scriptural School has been kept up for many years in a Roman Catholic district in Ireland. Children both Protestant and of Roman Catholic parentage come daily to be taught out of the living Word at the lips of Christian teachers. The school-house is miserably small and inconvenient; has no back premises; and in addition to this it has recently been examined and pronounced "unsafe." The landlord will give a site rent free, and assist in other ways, and it is estimated that £150 will provide us with a comfortable new school-house, with apartments for teachers. Money sent will be thankfully acknowledged by Mrs. Shawe-Taylor, Castle Taylor, Ardrahan, Ireland.

HARROGATE.—In consequence of the Directors of the Royal Spa Concert Rooms having (to the surprise and grief of many) decided upon giving Sunday afternoon concerts, the usual addresses to Christians so long delivered there will, until further notice, be given at the saloon of the People's Hotel, Albert-street but the Gospel meetings in the evenings at seven will be continued for the present as heretofore at the Royal Spa Concert Rooms. Mr. T. Shuldham Henry will conduct these and other meetings throughout the remainder of the present month.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, July 3, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

SOUTH GERMANY.—The Evangelische-Kirchlicher Anzeiger, of Berlin (June 18) is very much disturbed, because, according to The Christian of December 17, 1885, Drs. Baedeker and Zieman represented South Germany as having had the Gospel only most superficially proclaimed. "No wonder," says The Anzeiger, "when people, with a slight knowledge, represent Germany as in a state of heathendom, that the English are so ready to send Methodist apparatus to bring them out of the darkness, and to convert them."

THE 5s. EDITION OF

Cruden's Concordance to the OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

THE SPECIAL FEATURE OF THIS EDITION IS THE NEW TRANSLATION OF THE PROPER NAMES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, WITH THEIR MEANINGS IN THE ORIGINAL LANGUAGES.

By Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated," &c. Presentation Edition, handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.; Library Edition, half bound in leather, 10s. 6d.; Illustrated Edition, with Twelve exquisite Steel-plate Engravings and Six coloured Maps, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

"This large and most useful book for five shillings. . . . We need not say a word to commend Cruden's priceless work. Young men can now for a crown purchase a new copy of the best Concordance; whereas not long ago we thought ourselves fortunate if we could pick up a second-hand copy at that rate."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Seventeenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

"APEX of RIGHT LUNG AFFECTED."

Such was the report of a physician after "a long stethoscopic examination" in the case of Mr. A. W., of Ormskirk.

A full statement of the case (according to the questions which are given at the end of my book on Consumption for patients to answer) was sent to me in the early part of last year. The top of the right lung had been reported to show indications of "commencing organic disease." Consumption had been manifest in the family.

The treatment directed "took immediate hold of his symptoms" (so he writes me). In July he reports himself cured, and that his breath is better than it ever has been.

I heard again from him in January (when he continued well). Writing me for medicine for a young man, he says: "His knowledge of the cure wrought on me has induced him to apply."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MORELLA.

AT LAST! Advocates of Temperance have here what has been so long desired, a strictly non-alcoholic unfermented Wine, both still and sparkling, from the pure juice of the famous Kentish Morella Cherry, preserved by a newly-discovered process, without alcohol. Its delicious flavour charms the palate, whilst by its wholesome fruity character and body, it refreshes and sustains as no other temperance drink can do. Apply to your Grocer, or send Sevenpence in stamps for a sample of still, or Eighteenpence for sparkling, with particulars by Parcel Post, to

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

DR. ANDREW A. BONAR.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Stuart, Glasgow.)

LIKE his elder brother, Horatius, Dr. Andrew A. Bonar is one of the best known and most highly esteemed pastors in the Free Church of Scotland. He was born in Edinburgh in 1810. He came of a good stock, and a great deal lies in that. His family had been a tower of strength to evangelical faith, and a source of light in Scotland's dark days. His father was Solicitor of Excise, and a man of high Christian character and extensive knowledge. He got the best educational advantages in his youth. Early training has much to do with the after life. "As the twig is bent, so the tree grows; as the channel is made, so the stream flows." The student habit—the power of continuous application, and the resolute determination to know—is easily acquired in school days. Andrew Bonar acquired it then, and has preserved it ever since. The fruits of his application soon became apparent; he won the proud position of dux of Edinburgh High School. The same success attended his academic career at the University of his native town, where he secured the approbation of his professors and the esteem of his classmates. He was licensed to preach in 1835, by Jedburgh Presbytery. Dr. Candlish, then in the zenith of his fame, had his attention turned to the promising licentiate, and invited him to assist him, as parish missionary. Mr. Bonar consented, and came under an influence which must have helped to mould his methods of pulpit preparation, as well as to fill him with a lofty conception of the office he had undertaken. The pleasant connection did not last very long, for the assistant was, in 1838, called to go up higher; he was ordained to take part as colleague in the pastoral charge of Collace, in Perthshire. It was a rural parish, where weeks and months might pass as quietly as the rotation of the seasons. Stirring events were few and far between. The minister had time to do his work faithfully, and to prosecute the studies he had not thrown aside with his University gown. He got to know men and books well; his character developed; and his inner life, fed by communion with God and nature, grew strong.

These were happy and peaceful days. Only echoes of the world's din reached the country home. But the time speedily arrived when Mr. Bonar had to go out into the light of public life. The change came about in this way: his friend, Mr. McCheyne, who was settled in Dundee, and had charge of a large congregation, threw himself into his work with such intensity that his health suffered. Dr. Candlish wished to restore the strength on which so much depended, and at the same time promote the welfare of the Jews, in whom he was deeply interested. This led him to propose that Mr. McCheyne should undertake a Mission of Inquiry to the Jews. Mr. McCheyne gladly agreed. The other members of the deputation fixed on were Dr. Keith, the writer on prophecy, Dr. Black, a celebrated Oriental linguist, and along with these the subject of our sketch, who was chosen partly on account of his familiarity with the Hebrew Scriptures, and partly on account of his intimacy with Mr. McCheyne. Thus early did his acquaintance with the saintly minister of Dundee prove a factor in bringing Andrew Bonar before the world.

The visit was satisfactory in every sense of the word. It served its immediate purpose, and gave rest to the weary workers for Christ, who felt the inspiration of walking on the ground made sacred by the feet of Him who went about doing good, and gained the power to give local colouring to the Gospel they loved to preach. On their return home McCheyne and Bonar wrote a "Narrative of the Inquiry." It was eagerly read, and did much to awaken throughout the length and breadth of the land an interest in the Jews which has not yet died away, and never will, we trust, till the outcasts are gathered home again.

Collace welcomed its minister joyfully. His absence was felt. Before he came to it, it had suffered, like most of the parishes in Scotland, from the blighting reign of "Moderatism." He had from the beginning fervently preached evangelical truth, with the result that souls were saved, and life caused a shaking of the dry bones of dead forms. He had long prayed for an outpouring of the Spirit, and now his prayer was answered. William Burns occupied Mr. McCheyne's pulpit while he was away, and in connection with his ministrations a tide of blessing swept through Dundee and the district round about. Mr. Bonar flung himself heartily into the movement. He was unwearied in his labours. He gave himself no rest, nor did he think of rest. The energy of his manhood was laid on the altar of God's service. The baptism he then received fitted him for the work that lay in the future.

This revival was destined to bring about a great change in the religious life of Scotland. Ministers were stirred up to a sense of their responsibilities, and the influence they could wield as ambassadors for Christ. The people, feeling the need of Gospel preaching, felt they could not be sure of having it so long as the choice of ministers lay in other hands. They thought they had the right to choose their teachers in spiritual things, and demanded it. They began to see that the appointment of pastors by careless patrons was the source of deadness in the congregations. So the conflict commenced which ended in the Disruption of 1843.

Andrew Bonar bore himself bravely in that battle. The fire of his Covenanting forefathers entered his spirit, and made him strong to do and ready to suffer. Though naturally timid and retiring, he was bold in the Master's service. He was a law-abiding citizen, but when it came to be a question between allegiance to earthly authority and to the Head of the Church, he did not hesitate one moment in deciding to obey Christ at all hazards. God honoured his faithfulness by giving him the reward he liked best —souls for his hire.

When the day of decision came, Mr. Bonar cheerfully threw in his lot with the Evangelical party, and left the church in which he had hitherto ministered. He did not leave alone. The great majority of his parishioners followed him. They did not fear to face opposition and ridicule in the company of their beloved teacher. They drew strength from his example and words. A new place of worship was built, and new associations were formed. The fierceness of the fight gradually died down, and peace again spread its healing wings over the parish. Men found once more leisure to listen and think. In Collace the work of grace went quietly on. The minister sought souls, and got them. His sermons were both rousing and edifying: sinners were pricked to the heart, and saints were instructed in the things of God. Other congregations heard of the man so signally honoured, and tried to woo him away; but their efforts were unsuccessful. He loved to dwell among his own people, and had no ambition to shine in a larger sphere.

So the happy years glided by till, in 1856, he felt it to be his duty to accept a call to Finnieston, Glasgow. This was no influential city charge; it was only a mission station. At his first meeting in it to organise a congregation, only ten persons were present: the membership now is nearly a thousand. These figures convey an idea of the numerical increase, but they fail to give any right estimate of the lives blessed, the stimulus afforded to self-sacrificing devotion to the noblest aims, and the rich lessons of wisdom taught by Andrew Bonar during the years of his pastorate in the busy Metropolis of the West.

Earthly honours came to him as he grew older. Edinburgh University recognised his scholarship and his contributions to theological literature by conferring the degree of D.D. on him in 1874. The Church he has served so well paid him her tribute, in 1878, by giving him the highest position in her power to bestow—the Moderatorship of the General Assembly. He carried that distinction well. His opening address is yet remembered because of the weight of its matter and the grace of its expression. It was full of the humility of the speaker, and showed how the mantle of his fathers had fallen on him. These honours did not turn him aside from the prosecution of his life-work. He knew nothing among men, save Christ, and Him crucified. His one object in life was to proclaim the message of salvation. Every evangelistic agency received his warmest sympathy and support. He welcomed Mr. Moody, and gave him all the aid he could. In 1881 he was a welcome and honoured guest and speaker at the Northfield Conference, and came back with a heart on fire. Old age has not dimmed his enthusiasm, nor lessened his activity. Now, as in the days of his youth, he is able to do the duties of a strong man.

Dr. Andrew Bonar's contribution to literature has not been so large as that of his brother Horatius. The book by which he will be best remembered is his "Life of McCheyne." It has built for the author, and for the devoted pastor written about, a monument more enduring than brass. It has had a circulation of above 136,000 in this country, and is widely read in America. It is a model of what a biography should be, and it has widened the influence of that saintliness which enabled Mr. McCheyne to accomplish in his brief twenty-nine years a work ministers of seventy-nine might envy.

Dr. Bonar's "Christ and his Church in the Psalms" is marked by rare spiritual insight and fulness of Hebrew scholarship; and his Commentary on Leviticus is strong in showing how New Testament truths lie latent in Old Testament rites. He has written a large number of little books, such as "The Gospel pointing to the Person of Christ," and many tracts. The wisdom gained by thorough knowledge of men has taught him that in these days of keen competition and high-pressure living, a little book is read when the big book is put on the shelf. So he suits himself to the requirements of the age, and produces many "silent messengers," which carry his words to audiences far beyond the reach of his voice.

The power of the preacher lies in his matter, and in his personality. The Gospel, in all its fulness and freeness, is attractively set forth by him. He never wearies of telling the old, yet ever new story of a Saviour's love, and tells it with such winning sweetness that men are drawn by it. His sermons are eminently Biblical. They are suffused with a poetic glow, and lit up with many illustrations. Often simple in form, they are far removed from those of the magazine article type, so common, unfortunately, in our day. They throb in sympathy with the real wants of the hearers, and point to the balm in Gilead, and the Physician there. The personality of the preacher, which has been defined as the truth flowing through his whole manhood, is the best half of a sermon. As water cannot rise above its level, so preaching cannot rise above the level of the minister's spiritual life. Andrew Bonar walks with God, and because of that he speaks with unction.

He excels as a pastor. It is said—and we believe it is true—that he can salute each member of his congregation by his or her Christian name. He visits his people frequently. His gentle manner and kind words make him welcome at the fireside. He carries comfort to the sorrowing, strength to the weak, resignation to the bereaved, and consolation to the sick. Wherever he goes, he leaves behind tokens that a servant of God has passed that way. The poet says:—

> We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
> In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
> We should count time in heart-throbs. He lives most
> Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Andrew Bonar has lived long in deeds and in years. We may well thank God for such a life, and pray for grace to tread in its footsteps, as far as it has followed the one Perfect Life.

FRIENDLESS and FALLEN in LIMEHOUSE.

The Bishop of Bedford, assisted by Rev. W. Donne, Rector of Limehouse, recently held a short service at Mitre House, Three Colt-street, dedicating it to the Lord's service for Rescue and Preventive Work among Young Girls. For some time a project has been on foot to plant this Home in Limehouse, but unavoidable delays have occurred to prevent the earlier fulfilment of it. Now, however, the work is going on in earnest, and in no quarter of our great city is it more urgently needed. No other work of the kind is being done there; houses of ill-fame abound, and the unhappy girls and women are of a lower and more degraded type than even those of notorious Ratcliff. Great, therefore, will be the responsibility, many the difficulties, stern the conflict with vice and misery.

Our sister who has undertaken, in the Lord's name, this great work, needs the prayerful sympathy of God's people; we trust that many of those whose hearts have been wrung over England's saddest and sorest blot, the degradation of our young children, will feel it laid upon them to plead in secret at the mercy-seat for the success of the work, and to come forward and help in the spirit of those social reformers of Ezra's day, who encouraged him with the words, "Arise, for this matter belongeth unto thee; we also will be with thee . . . be of good courage and do it." That this Home, standing like a fortress in the enemy's land, may prove to many a poor wanderer a true Bethel—the house of God and the gate of heaven — is the earnest desire of those whom the Lord has called to work there.

It is hoped that in time the Home may be made partially self-supporting by means of laundry work, but at present funds are required to carry it on. Help in any form will be gladly received, in the Master's name, by Miss Ada Forsaith, Mitre House, Three Colt-street, Limehouse, E.

PURE LITERATURE SOCIETY.—This Society has been actively engaged for nearly thirty years in promoting the circulation of pure and interesting literature, and it has supplied books at half-price to nearly 7132 libraries for working-men, schools, and other institutions, to the value of £58,268. The continued use of these libraries lessens the demand for frivolous and impure reading. Funds are needed, especially to meet the numerous applications from poorer districts, and £600 will be required for this purpose during the present year in addition to the regular annual subscriptions. The Society does not edit, print, or publish any books or periodicals, but it carefully selects those that are suitable, and continually adds to the list, which contains about 4000 volumes, all of them to be seen at the office, 11, Buckingham-street, Adelphi, Strand.

WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR THE PEOPLE?—4.

By LADY HOPE.

"How shall we make our coffee-houses still more successful?" I think I hear some earnest readers say. Ah! we could not ask a better question; nor one that can find a plainer answer. By having them pervaded with a more earnest spiritual life; by praying more earnestly for a blessing upon them; and then looking for the blessing we have asked. We, as Christians, must not be content with the mere sale of food and drink at our counters! Oh no! We have a far higher aim in view, and while it is our bounden duty to do well every part of the work that falls to our hands, yet we have a spiritual task to perform which far outweighs in importance the monetary success of our undertaking. We want to make the people happier; we want them to find a way of escape from the miseries into which they are dragged by false pleasures, the allurements of evil, that are surrounding them on every side. We want to lead them to a Saviour's love. We would show them better friendships; and the pathway of truer delights. We want their recreations to be re-creations of their whole nature, physical, mental, spiritual, instead of influences that are deteriorative and even destructive in their tendency. And why should they not have real enjoyment with their common pleasures?

MUSIC,

for instance! Why should they not have music and songs of an elevating and beneficial kind, instead of an evil one? There are hymns and songs by the hundred now, suited to every taste, and full of harmony as well as variety, that can be sung every evening in the coffee-rooms, and joined in by all; for the people never tire of them. They are very popular, and can always attract the working men; better still, they will keep them in the coffee-rooms, proving an efficient counter-attraction to the fiddle and low dance of the public-house.

SCRIPTURE CLASSES,

too, are invaluable, if well conducted. They lead the people to the Fountain of Truth. There they learn to "Fear God, and honour the king;" to "love the brotherhood;" to be "content with their wages;" to "seek peace and pursue it;" to "follow after holiness;" to "rejoice in the Lord." Remedies are found in the Divine Book for every ill. Each grief has its balm provided there. We wrong the people if we do not carry to them tidings of our Friend—the One who loves the tried and tempted, and is willing to bless and save.

TEMPERANCE MEETINGS,

too, if judiciously conducted, and not held too rigidly or too frequently, are most useful adjuncts to coffee-house work. Drink, as we all know only too well, is the curse of the working men. Some of our readers have not an idea how general this curse is! Ask any employer of labour, and he will tell you how this terrible evil hinders all his work, injures his trade, and spoils his best mechanics, turning clever men into idle ones, and skilled operatives into untrustworthy characters that need constant oversight and supervision! "Well! you know, Bank holiday is coming!" said a tradesman the other day; "and that means a lot of time wasted. All these men, except one or two, will be off 'on the drink;' and then there is no doing anything with them." "What! twenty or thirty men! Do they all drink?" "Yes! almost all of them, when they get a chance; and always on a holiday. The only thing is to try and keep them at work." There was another "only thing," which he did not mention; it was a strong Gospel temperance principle that possessed the men who were exceptions to his rule. "That man!" said another who was standing by, "is as fresh in the evening as the morning. He is a good workman; and then, you see, he does not dabble in the drink." Yes! our friend, who was using his plane and foot-rule so vigorously in the corner, was a blue-ribbon man. His healthy look, with busy hand so strong and firm, told its own story. He had found "a better way;" and no one could say he was a loser by walking in it.

INDIVIDUAL CONVERSATION

is another and most important means of reaching the people. This is one reason why a well-managed coffee-saloon is so useful. It offers opportunities for quiet talk. In a meeting, one person only at a time can speak. His hearers may or may not agree with what he says; but as the men sit round the tables in the evening, they can speak to one another. Numbers of men who could not, or would not, address a crowd, can find a field for usefulness here. They can use the influence of conversation. If there has been a meeting in another room, or if a temperance work is going on, the subject will become a topic for question and answer; and no one knows, but those who have tried it, how much impressions may be deepened in this way, and wavering impulses brought to a decision. A few sentences here may do much for a man who never enters a place of worship, nor would think of attending a meeting. The thin end of the wedge enters his heart beside the quiet cup of coffee, and he determines to "go and hear more about it before the week is out."

DIALOGUES AND RECITATIONS

may also be used with great effect. If well chosen and spoken—not repeated like a lesson!—they carry home truths in an amusing but very direct way, and sometimes a most serious one, to their listeners.

I do not deny that all these things require trouble and effort on the part of those who are over-looking the coffee-house work, as well as from many of its frequenters; but the trouble is repaid a hundredfold in the sure and lasting results that follow. Many buried talents may be used in this way; and young men's energies can be turned into channels of usefulness when their hearts are given to the Lord and his work. In some of the best coffee-houses I know the principal workers have been, and are, reclaimed men. They were once infidels, drunkards, singers in the tap-room of the public-house. Now their powers, being consecrated to their Saviour, are used by Him, and for Him. Though all men cannot speak at meetings, every man can do something. "What wilt Thou have me to do?" is the question of the renewed heart. Such a question need never remain unanswered. The Counsellor above is waiting to give it his own sure and direct reply, though He may sometimes do this through human lips: "It shall be told thee what thou shalt do."

And now I hear an inquiry in the distance: "Why do so many coffee-houses prove a failure? Or, even if they manage to drag on an existence, it is very often a miserable one. You cannot say they always succeed!"

Here we come to the black side of the subject; for it must not be ignored. "Why do they prove a failure?" For one of these reasons: Either through neglect, bad management, careless supervision, ignorance of the trade, or lack of attraction. Many people take a house, start it, and leave it! Who can wonder that the coffee-house fails? They leave it to the tender mercies of the manager! Although it is not his concern, but theirs! How would other trades prosper, if we conducted them in this way? How would our own houses fare, if we acted thus? "A good manager is everything!" people sometimes say to me sadly; "and good managers are so hard to find." "No!" I feel inclined to say, "the manager is something, but not everything! He holds a most important post; but he is only like the foreman in the business. The lady or gentleman, or company who start the undertaking is responsible for it! and must give the closest supervision to the details of the work, otherwise there will be failure instead of success."

The dirt and discomfort of numberless coffee-houses make them a disgrace to the temperance cause, a silent, but a very serious, blot upon its escutcheon. "How is your coffee-house getting on?" I asked the solitary and dejected-looking man who was standing at an empty bar, his elbows leaning upon the greasy counter. "Oh, very bad!" he said; "nobody comes." "What attractions do you have?" "'Tractions!" he answered, looking surprised; "there's chops!" I could not help being rather vexed than amused. "Where are they?" I asked. "I can get you one in a quarter of an hour," he answered. But as I glanced round the miserable room, noticing its stale buns, and dirty tables, its unswept floors, its multitudinous bills pasted upon the windows, and the unwashed appearance of its crockery, I turned away with a feeling of despair, as I thought of the thousands of working men who pass along that splendid thoroughfare every day of their lives, only to see public-houses staring them in the face, with but one alternative offered, and that a house, which I venture to say, no human being would ever wish to enter; and this was the sole representative of the temperance cause in that street! Had I only a sufficient fund in hand, I would buy up many of these miserable places, and put them at once upon a proper footing. The voice of prayer and singing should resound from those rooms; bright lights and flowers should adorn their windows; fresh books and papers should grace the newly-polished tables; and savoury viands and appetising drinks should be found at their bars. I venture to say, the only difficulty that could hinder us in our delightful reforms would be the lack of space for seating our many customers!

Once more I make an earnest entreaty to my friends, at least to respond generously to my appeal on behalf of "The Golden Bells," that its work may be well begun, with the promise on my part, that by God's help, it shall be well carried on.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

The Convalescent Home of this Mission was opened in July, 1876, and has, since that time, received over 1100 convalescents needing rest and change. This year the number of applications for admission has been nearly double that of last year, and, although we have already received over fifty patients, we have had to refuse needy cases from want of funds. We are continually receiving testimony to the blessing received, both in body and soul, during a stay at the Folkestone Convalescent Home.

I feel sure that the need of these valuable institutions has only to be mentioned to obtain a hearty support from your readers.

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

The latest Report of this Society states that during the year 2460 meetings have been held in 113 places, a larger number than in any previous year. There have been seventy continuous missions, each lasting from a fortnight to six weeks, conducted for the most part in five tents and a movable wooden hall, capable of seating about 600 persons. The Report contains details of the labours of the evangelists; the spiritual results that appear in so many different parts of Ireland are in every way most encouraging. One writes, "Such a work of grace I never in the same time witnessed;" another, "It has never been my privilege to engage in such a blessed series of meetings;" another, "Since 1859 there has been nothing like this revival;" another, "The Lord Himself is saving precious souls;" and yet another, "We have had great crowds at the meetings, and better still, great blessing." From one place £54 was sent in to the Society as a thankoffering.

Thus we have a bright picture of the work of the Society and its effects amongst the people; we cannot but wish that such efforts to make known the Gospel, to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified, could be indefinitely multiplied. James Barton, Esq., Dundalk, is Hon. Sec.

THE DUTY OF REST.

The holiday season has come, and wearied workers are everywhere beginning to taste the sweetness of rest. The busy pen is thrown aside for a little, and the active brain knows what it is to think leisurely. We all realise the pleasure of rest, but we often fail to realise the duty of rest. Rest is needful. This truth is emphasised by Nature and revelation. In winter, when the snow lies thick, and the winds blow hard, trees and flowers sleep after summer's toil, to waken at the first kiss of spring. No worker was so diligent as Christ, yet He too found time to rest. We read how, when wearied by the multitude which pressed Him, He got a little boat, and sailed into the soothing calm of Galilee's lake. Again, we find Him in the desert—far from the busy haunts of men—alone with God and his disciples. In the later days of his life, He turned from eager crowds, wrangling disputants, and the tumult of Jerusalem's streets, to the quiet of the home at Bethany. These Sabbatic pauses in the Master Worker's activity teach us the duty of rest.

This duty is also enforced by experience. Some men's work is slavery, because they have denied themselves the buoyancy and vigour that true leisure can supply. They pull the oars as if they were chained to a galley; they do not cleave the waters with the happy heart and cheerful air which could give strength to their strokes. Life is to them a monotonous drudgery of so many days passed and so many tasks performed. Other men carry with them into their labours a feeling of blue skies overhead and green grass under their feet. For them the birds sing and the flowers blossom, even while they are tied to the desk, or pore over a crabbed volume. What makes the difference? This, and this only: the first neglect the duty of rest, and suffer the penalty of that neglect; the second know what it is to creep out of the bustle and din of their work for a little time, that they may go back to it with renewed energy.

Over-work is a curse of our generation. Our lot is cast in a high-pressure age. We crowd the work of a week into a day. The consequence is unstrung nerves and weakened capacities for effort. Victims of over-work abound. These unfortunates may not necessarily have done more than their fellows, who still fight on in the struggle for existence, but they have done more than their strength allowed. They forgot the truth that activity is conditioned by physical strength. They are depressed without a cause; they are listless; they get into the frame of mind in which the question, "Is life worth living?" is seriously entertained. For such there is but one cure, and that is rest. If the instrument is out of repair, it must be put in order before it can be used; if the piano is out of tune, it must be tuned before the musician's skill can call forth harmonious music. So when worry and fatigue have silenced the music of men's activity, the healing touch of rest must be felt before the old strains are heard again. The lesson of rest has to be learned.

Thomas Carlyle preached a gospel of work to our century. Such a message was needed; but a gospel of rest is also needed. Students and statesmen, ministers and lawyers, are hurried into an early grave, and the world is robbed of the good they might do, by their failure to realise the duty of rest. Toilers in the vineyard of God require to cease from their labours now and then to grow strong in body and soul. The voice of their Master sounds more distinct in the hush of retirement than in the noise of the world. In loneliness they can learn rich and full lessons. God often gives his workers a season of vegetation. He led Moses to the wilderness, and kept him there forty years. He took Paul to Arabia, and shut him up in the prison of Cæsarea for two years. These pauses were great gains; they threw new light on old problems, and furnished strength for duties yet to be done. Let it be so with us. Let us welcome a season of rest as a time of closer communion with God, and deeper meditation on what should be the one question of our redeemed activity—what He would have us do. Then we can return to the tasks we left with new enthusiasm and fresh strength.

The happiest and strongest work is that done in a restful spirit. Fretful ardour and querulously impulsive enthusiasm fight against true success. The man who is filled with the calm of a great purpose, and the consciousness of a sustaining force, is the man who does the best work. Christian worker! "rest in the Lord." Co-operating with Him, you shall enter into the peace of his unhasting, unresting activity, and leaning on Him you shall find that your weakness is made perfect in his might. Your service shall then have the gladness and freedom which accompany restful strength.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

A good story, well told, is sure to arrest attention. Both of these are combined in the thirty-third Annual Report of the Open-Air Mission. The paper, the type, the arrangement of the matter, and especially the pictures, a dozen of which adorn its pages, proclaim great care and good taste.

But what shall we say of a society which can accomplish so much work for so little money? The statistics show that the members have worked in 649 towns and villages in the United Kingdom, have visited 710 races, fairs, and other special gatherings, and distributed nearly a million of tracts and other Christian literature at a cost of £1741. This shows great diligence on the one hand, and economy on the other.

This admirable report may be had for 4d. by writing to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Secretary Open Air Mission, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

A RAID ON PUBLIC-HOUSES.

Dear Sir,—Your readers will be glad to hear the glad news that the two public-houses in Fore-street, Devonport, the "Royal Naval Rendezvous," and the "Napier Inn," have capitulated. The keys are in my possession; the last barrel of beer has been rolled out, and never, thank God, will another bluejacket be tempted to go wrong on the premises. I rejoice to state that since the establishment of the Sailor's Rest, five public-houses, including the two just purchased, have succumbed

The kind help of your readers has done much, and from two wealthy friends I have received the munificent gift of £2000, but the work has only just begun. The public-houses are purchased and paid for, but only to be pulled down and rebuilt. I expect, by God's blessing, to receive as many "shilling bricks" for the rebuilding of the publics, as I have received "shilling shots" for knocking them down.

Yours in the Master's work,

Sailors' Rest, Devonport. Agnes E. Weston.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—The agent at Hankow has reported that 96,000 portions of the Revised Wen li Version had been issued from the Society's press during the previous four months. Mr. Murray, of Peking, with his native helpers, had sold 2100 Chinese Gospels at various temple fairs in the neighbourhood of Cho Chow. They had been cordially received by the people as "Show Jen" or "familiar friends."

THY LOVE TO ME.*

"I have loved thee with an everlasting love."

Thy love to me, O Christ,
  Thy love to me,
Not mine to Thee, I plead,
  Not mine to Thee!
This is my comfort strong,
This is my only song,
  Thy love to me.

Thy record I believe,
  Thy word to me.
Thy love I now receive,
  Full, changeless, free.
Love from the sinless Son,
Love to the sinful one,
  Thy love to me.

Immortal love of thine,
  Thy sacrifice,
Infinite need of mine
  Only supplies.
Streams of divinest power
Flow to me, hour by hour,
  Thy love to me.

Let me more clearly trace
  Thy love to me,
See in the Father's face
  His love to thee.
Know as He loves the Son,
So dost Thou love thine own,
  Thy love to me.

TIDINGS FROM BIBLE LANDS.

A meeting of unusual interest, called at the instance of the Secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, was recently held in the Council-room of the Evangelical Alliance. Gen. Field presided, and addresses were delivered by missionaries from Persia and Egypt, both of them Bible lands. Rev. Benjamin Labaree spoke of the wonderful progress which hed been achieved in that region since the day when Dr. Perkins began with a small school of six boys in the basement of his house in 1836. The hospital had received 564 in-patients last year, and thousands more were treated out of doors. Last year there had been a remarkable awakening in many villages, and hundreds hopefully converted, one of the most signal instances of blessing in connection with a mission which has been favoured in that way all along. At the Jubilee gathering of last year 800 women were present, nearly all of whom can read and write—a great change from the time when it was said, "Women, they be beasts." The mission to the Nestorians has become a mission to Persia and Teheran. Tabriz and Hamadon have been occupied for Christ.

Rev. J. W. Hawkes, of Hamadan, spoke of that youngest of the stations, and of the good beginning which has been made among the Armenians, Moslems, and Jews of that town. Young men of good families have asked to be taught English, and the best book used is the Bible. Thus they are brought in contact with Gospel truth at once. A church of about sixty members has been formed. Some years ago there was a stir in the Jewish community, and several Jews were brought to the Lord.

Rev. Dr. Lansing, from Cairo, followed. He stated facts as to the numerical increase in the mission throughout the valley of the Nile. The Christians—mostly Copts—were accustomed to meet in the school-rooms or chapels for prayer and study of the Scriptures, and, in some cases, that daily prayer-meeting had continued fifteen years. Education has done much for the people, and teachers from the training-school of the American Mission are everywhere preferred. Many of the young men become interpreters or clerks. As for toleration, it was more largely enjoyed in Egypt than in Turkey proper. Egypt was a hundred years in advance of Turkey. Several striking instances of steadfastness in converted Moslems were descried—one specially interesting of a captain of police, who has recently made a decided stand, and nobly testified for Christ.

Rev. Dr. Fraser, Mr. R. N. Cust, and Mr. Alfred Sutton, of Reading, spoke of the value of the information which had been conveyed, and the encouragement afforded to friends of mission work in the East, and especially the Turkish Missions Aid Society, to continue to labour in that cause.

For the Young.

ANNIE'S CHOICE.

"It is so hot indoors," said little Annie, "can't we go out for our Sunday lesson to-day, Auntie?" The voice of my little niece recalled me to my duty, for I had undertaken the Sunday's lesson of my nephew and niece while on a visit to their home in the country. I at once closed my book and suggested an afternoon in the wood, to which the children joyfully assented. "Is it not sweet out here?" they both exclaimed, when we at length passed through the tiny rustic gate which led into the wood. And so indeed it was. The grass and earth covered with a carpet of moss, the glints of sunlight on the ferns, the old lichened trunk on which we now sat down to rest; the nodding blue-bells, the trooping insects with their gauze-like wings, flitting up and down in airy sport, the soft breeze which scarcely stirred the leaves, the aromatic scent of the pines, all bespoke such a blissful rest that our spirits echoed back a response in unison with the scene around us.

My young nephew lay stretched at my feet, looking up between the bowery canopy of leaves at the blue sky, with its flecks of silver cloud, which appear more purely beautiful on a day like this. Affectionate little Annie sat close beside me. "What shall our subject be?" I asked; "you shall have your choice to-day, Annie." We usually have our lessons from the morning's texts," interrupted Will. "But I am not going by any rule to-day." "That will be nice! I know what I should like best, to read about the battles, and the glorious victories they fought and won, in the Old Testament." Annie shook her head. "It doesn't seem the place to talk about battle scenes," she said, looking beseechingly at me; "and I don't care for them half so much as about our Saviour, and how He went about healing all who were sick."

"Ah, Annie!" I said, "our Lord had battles to fight far harder than any of those of which we read in the Old Testament." "How?" asked Will. "The battles of our Lord were spiritual battles, Will, with the world, the flesh, and the devil; with men who were furious against Him and his followers; with the unbeliever, the self-righteous and the bigoted. But we are not going to speak to-day on sorrowful subjects, as I said before: Annie shall have her choice."

"May it be about my favourite Apostle, Auntie?" whispered my little niece at length. "Certainly. And who was he?" I asked. "The Apostle John: he was so gentle and good, that it seems more natural to talk about him in this quiet place."

"And why was he called the 'beloved' Apostle?" was my next question.

"I think I know," said Annie. "Was it not because the Lord saw in him his spirit and his likeness?"

"Right, my child; in guilelessness and childlike simplicity, in the yearning of his heart, in the tender appeals which breathe through his inspired words towards all, we see how nearly he approached the God-like character of his Divine Master. And, now, what is the theme which pervades the whole of his discourses from beginning to end, the word which we find ten times oftener than in any other Gospel or Epistle in the sacred Book?"

"Do you mean the word love, Auntie?" asked Will. "Yes, that is right."

"Oh, I know!" interrupted Annie, "one of his chapters begins with, 'Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God.'"

"Yes, as He penned that letter, we can almost fancy that we can see the gleam in his eyes, and how his countenance would beam and light up, and how his whole soul flowed over, as it were, in the words: 'Beloved, now are we the sons of God.' So powerful, so full of fervour, that the warmth and glow reaches us, even us, and inspires us with love and adoration as we catch their echo through the distant ages. And yet it is not always thus with us; we are saddened to feel that many of us who profess to be witnesses for Christ, as was the beloved John, should often read those very words which fired his soul in such a listless, half-hearted manner. So few of us seem to realise that it is all true—true that the Saviour came down to this world to be born, to live, to suffer for us. We have been taught about Him ever since we were babies; the whole Bible, perhaps, is familiar to us.

"But knowledge alone cannot make you Christians; it is not only to know these truths, and to feel them to be so, it is to look up to the Source from which we receive all Divine light, and that is Christ; to acknowledge Him as your guide through life, to make Him your friend in all your difficulties and troubles, to have Him in your heart helping and directing you, to feel Him to be the one who is incapable of change, and to whom you can go at all times, then you will have begun your Christian life in earnest."

"I mean to be a real right down Christian," said Will, half rising and looking into my face with a steadfast expression on his glowing countenance. I looked into his truthful earnest eyes and laid my hand on his head, "It is no more easy to be that than it was in the time of the martyrs, Will. They had to fight against visible enemies which kept them on the alert day and night, but our enemies are as cruel and in a sense stronger, because more subtle; when we are scarcely aware of their presence they creep into our hearts and impel us to sinful thoughts and actions. We are so framed that we are full of unbelief, doubting and fearing, when we might be calmly resting on our Saviour's care for us, choosing to trust in our own weakness and frailty rather than in his Almighty strength.

When I had finished speaking, we sat for a few moments in silence ere we rose from our mossy seat and turned homewards. Our road lay deep in the valley, and rocky banks of sand jutted out into the path; far above our heads grew the bushes of yellow gorse, and before us were the blue hills. A slender spire of a village church shone white in the sunbeams, and soft sounds of bells breathed their Sunday chimes in the passing wind. I thought how loudly and how eloquently the voice of nature spoke to us through the sweet pictures she spread before us, if we would but pray for guidance to read them aright. And in the thoughtful faces of the children as they walked beside me, I could see the influence was there. I felt that the quiet hour of that Sunday afternoon would be a potent power, the memory of a calm shade and restful background when the eyes were weary with the work which must come in the troublous weekday of their young lives.

REST FOR WEARY WORKERS.—When I see the applications for the Day in the Country Fund, I cannot help thinking of the many poor dressmakers, milliners, perhaps also daily governesses, who will now be without work at the end of the season, tired and worn with their hard work, and not able to procure a holiday. There is here at Ryde, the excellent sea-side home of the Y.W.C.A., where young women would find a kind welcome and motherly care. Could you not throw out the suggestion, that those who leave London now for the country or sea-side should think of the young women whom they have employed, and give them the means to spend a fortnight or more at Garfield House, Ryde.

SAVOY.—Mr. Bluett writes me again from Savoy, urging upon Christians visiting the Continent this summer, to include this lovely but dark land. He is endeavouring to gather together as many English and French Christians as possible, the latter end of July and August, at Chamounix. There is accommodation for about three thousand visitors in the various châlets or restaurants on the slopes of these magnificent mountains. He hopes also to organise English and French Bible-readings, with, perhaps, a Conference, on a small scale, regarding the Lord's work in Savoy. Mr. Bluett's address is Restaurant Mer de Glace, Aux Tines, près Chamounix. Accommodation can be had for board and lodging, at from 3s. 6d. to 6s. per day.

GLEANINGS FROM MISSION FIELDS.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

"In Bechuanaland," writes one of the missionaries, "large bodies of Europeans and natives are continually beseeching me either to minister to them or send someone. I have already far more work than I can do, and with deep grief I have to say, 'Our Missionary Society has not funds enough to help you.'"

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Chronicle contains a deeply-interesting paper on the revision of the Malagasy Bible, by the pen of the Chairman of that Committee.

In the country of Hui an (China), where the people are poor, the London Missionary Society has many self-supporting churches, the members of which, besides paying their pastors a liberal salary, care for their poorer brethren; and willingly contribute help to a neighbouring cause in difficulties.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND MISSION.

A large party for Lake Nyassa started with Dr. Laws on the 11th ult. One of the number was a "new missionary artisan and teacher, Mr. Hugh Mackintosh, who prepared for his five years' service for the Master on a week's notice."

Rev. J. Alexander Bain has sent home an interesting account of a tour taken over the territory situated between the Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika, with the purpose of reassuring Nymberi, the chief of Wuntali, whose people have suspected a feeling of animosity to exist in the "white men's" minds for the murder of Mr. Stewart's porters. On their first visit the Wuntali villages were all deserted, but on the return journey Mr Bain secured an interview with the chief, and accomplished the purpose of his visit.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The July Missionary Gleaner relates the following history:—Six years ago a learned Persian dervish, on looking over the books in a friend's house, happened to take up an Enjil (New Testament) which its owner said was about the prophet Jesus, a useless book which had been presented to him by an American goldsmith. Moved with curiosity, Agha Mirza Syed Khalech glanced inside, and forming a different estimate as to the value of its contents, asked for a loan of the New Testament, and when his friend offered to give it, thankfully accepted and took the precious book home. His private study of it convinced him of the truth of what he read, and he has accepted, and openly confessed, the Lord Jesus to be his Saviour. Having previously been dissatisfied with Mohammedanism he spent all his money in going from place to place seeking the true religion, and now, contending with poverty and proscription, he is successfully testifying for Christ in his own and an adjoining village.

It is now a year since Rev. E. A. Fitch and Mr. J. A. Wray settled in Chagga (the Switzerland of Africa); they have succeeded in establishing a footing for their mission. The king, Mandara, though apparently not cruel, is capricious and grasping. Yet since he is acknowledged head by all the neighbouring kings, it is felt desirable to cultivate his confidence and friendship; besides, the people's eagerness to learn is a strong incentive to persevere at their post.

In passing, we should like to call attention to an article in The Intelligencer, exposing the real character of Jesuit missionary teaching, hoping that it may, in some measure, serve to dispel the glamour created by the names of a few consecrated men.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC.—If the Government does not appoint a Commission to look into the drink traffic, it is high time the people did. The people of Liverpool spend every day on strong drink more than the United Methodist Free Churches raise for foreign missions in a year.—Rev. Charles Garrett.

REST IN THE LAND.

Address by Rev. C. A. FOX,

At Mildmay Conference, on Thursday Afternoon, June 24.

"Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it."—Heb. iv. 1.

I WOULD ask, Where are we, as Christians, dwelling? Are we in God's rest, or are we not? Have we individually entered into his rest? If we have not—if it be not with us an experience, as well as a theory—how is it that we have not? It is the privilege of every Christian to enter fully into the rest of Christ. It is this rest that I want briefly to put before you.

The Church of Christ wants one thing beyond everything else, and that one thing is REST—rest in the Lord Jesus, conscious rest between heaven and earth, between the conscience and God, rest in our common action, gesture, behaviour and everyday reality, within and without. This is the land in which the Lord would have us dwell, and which is spoken of as "a land flowing with milk and honey." Do we know anything of that land?

Turn with me to Deuteronomy xi., where we have a description of the rest which has been promised, and which may be ours. First of all you will observe (ver. 9) it is a land flowing with milk and honey, "which the Lord sware unto your fathers to give unto them and to their seed." The Christian, then, dwells in the land of the oath. He is, indeed, under the definite assurance of the Lord. He is far from any shadow as to his personal salvation; he knows, on the authority of God, that his sins have been blotted out. God has declared, "I will remember your sins no more." It is, moreover, a land in which everybody who dwells there is under the covenant keeping of the Lord, day by day and hour by hour. "Thou shalt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because He trusteth in Thee." Do we know and realise this perfect peace? Is our peace an unbroken peace—a peace which can properly be called perfect? Have we the blessed assurance that God in Jesus Christ and by the power of the Holy Ghost is keeping us? In Jeremiah xxxii., we have an account of the keeping which we ought each one to realise. This is one of the passages where the "I wills" of God throng. "Behold, I will gather them out of all countries . . . and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely" (ver. 37). Safely—what a blessed word! "And they shall be my people, and I will be their God: and I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear Me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them; and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good." My Lord is always for me. He may chasten me, but it is only to do me good; He is always endeavouring to do me good: let us realise it. "I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from Me." Oh! Christians, do you believe that God will keep you for Himself, and to Himself? We have been speaking of separation. Let us remember that we cannot separate ourselves; and we cannot keep ourselves separated unto God. He must separate us, and He must keep us separated by his own Blessed Spirit. "I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul." Here is the sevenfold "I will," the sevenfold promise. This is a land which flows indeed with milk and honey, and where God has covenanted to keep us to Himself, and to keep Himself for us.

Now we pass on to what we read in Deut. xi. 10, "For the land, whither thou goest in to possess it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou sowedst thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs." That was the land of artificial restraint. We may replace the word "land," and use the word "life." This Christian life is not a life of artificial restraint. It is not as Egypt, where they had to practise artificial irrigation, watering it entirely by their own laborious efforts. The land we are brought to enter, by the grace of God, is a free land, where there is no artificial restraint, where souls are at rest and at ease, where the service of God is free and unconstrained. Christians, do you know it? Is it your daily experience, this unconstrained life? Can you in your souls say, I have the rest of God in me, and God rests within me by his infinite grace; He has chosen me to be a resting-place even for Himself? Can we say also that we find rest in service? How much there is of artificial restraint in God's service—in the ministry, and in other work. What forcing work it is; how much it is without the freedom of the Spirit, without the power of the Holy Ghost. But this land that God would call us to enter is the land of ease, of rest, of power, of freedom. This is the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free. Do we realise it? Is it ours?

Then we learn in the next verse that it is a land of perpetual dependence; of the glorious vicissitudes of hill and valley. "But the land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven." What a blessed land is this. There are heights in it; it is not a monotonous land, a great endless flat; it is up and down. Thank God, there are hills in it that reach to heaven, as it were, where you commune with God, and are transfigured on these heights of glory. There are also valleys of humiliation, deep places of perpetual humility. Always in the valley and yet always on the mountain-top—both together—that is the Christian's position. Do not be afraid of the life God has for you; it is a blessed life He has prepared for you and me; it is worth living. It may have many a deep valley and many a shadowy path, but on its mountain heights are some of the most wonderful scenes. Therefore let us go boldly, fearlessly into this glorious land of perpetual dependence. "It drinketh water of the rain of heaven." You do not need to water it with your foot: that is the hard life so many Christians live. No; the clouds from heaven break over it. I believe that what the Church wants to-day is the Holy Ghost poured out in his fulness. "There shall be showers of blessing." Surely from this meeting, and from this Conference, the windows of heaven shall be opened and the showers shall descend.

We want this power; it is the fulness of the Holy Ghost that does everything. You remember how, when the disciples were filled with the Holy Ghost, they began to speak; they did not try to speak, they could not help speaking. So many Christians cannot speak; they have all kinds of hindrances and hesitations. But when we drink deep of this water of the rain of heaven we begin to speak; we can no longer keep silent. You remember, too, how, being filled with the Holy Ghost, Stephen lifted up his eyes in the very midst of his martyrdom and saw the opened heaven with Jesus standing on the right hand of power. So, when you are filled with the Spirit, you begin to see. This is what we want. When the Holy Ghost finds his way through the whole man and breaks him down, He makes him speak blessedly and freely, and enables him to see an opened heaven, with the living Christ there, helping every servant of his witnessing for his name.

In another place, we are told to be filled with the Spirit, and immediately afterwards the Apostle says, "Speaking to yourselves in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs." So you begin to sing; and nobody can sing true praises till he is full of the Holy Ghost. That is the sweetest music. It may not be according to the rules of earthly music always; but it is that which pleases God. It alone hushes the hosannas of heaven—to hear the Holy Ghost music on the earth from lips constrained by the Spirit of the living God. Do we know anything of this fulness of the Holy Ghost—this rain that cometh down from heaven, keeping us in perpetual dependence?

Read again: "A land which the Lord thy God careth for: the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year." We have here the perpetual presence of the Lord. Do you dwell continually in his presence? People say, How are we to be separated, living in a world like this, in a great teeming city? Can we not be separated, seeing that God lives perpetually with us? It is his presence that separates us. It is this that keeps a man apart from sin: God is between him and the sin. It is this that keeps a man free from temptation: God is between him and temptation; between him and the evil one. "I am with you always. Go ye therefore into any part of the world, the most unholy place, and among the vilest people, and I will keep you and preserve you; I will create the atmosphere of heaven about you, wherever you go. Only go for Me, and you will go with Me wherever you go."

Again: "If ye shall hearken diligently unto my commandments . . . to love the Lord your God, and to serve Him with all your heart and with all your soul, I will give you the rain of your land in his due season." Love service is the mark of this land. It is no constrained, forced service, but free love service. How blessed and how easy is love service. Oh, dear friends, do you really love God? Are you in love with God? If so, love one another. "Little children, love one another." If you love God, how can you hate your brother? Oh, Christians, gathered here, if there is one thing that the Church needs, it is this love, to bind the brethren together in one loving whole, with open heart, and open hand. To bind them together so that they shall feel they are all in the same Church together—the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. The Church is dying for love. "Everybody hating one another"—that is the description of the Church too often. My brethren, if we are to have any good from this Conference, it must be in this direction. Love must go forth. There must be no suspicions between us, no turning aside the one from the other, no cold shoulder, no closed hands. There must be heart and hand open—love all round, love in heaven, and love on earth. There can be no Pentecost without it.

Notice again, in this land we have a blessed reward. "I will give you the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil." How many Christians there are who had the first rain, but no latter rain! O for the latter rain that swells and ripens the grain! There are many who look back to the early rain they had at conversion, but they have never had a drop of rain since. We want the latter rain that ripens the grain and brings it forward. How much unripened grain there is in the Church of God to-day!—grain that won't grow or ripen any more, because there has been no latter rain. God give us this blessed latter rain!

There is something more; there is a blessed promise. "Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours" (ver. 24). It is a land of progress and of victory. People don't put down the soles of their feet; they only put their toes down, and so they cannot claim it. My brethren, put the soles of both your feet down; it does not do to stand on one foot in this blessed land of promise; move forward and claim it. Too many Christians stand still, and that is why they cannot possess the promised land. March on, and it shall be given you; it is all for you.

What more? "There shall no man be able to stand before you" (ver. 25). Because the Lord is standing in you. Oh, can we say with the Apostle, in deep humility, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." In the Greek the word means, "I can do all things through Christ who dynamites me." We want more of this spiritual dynamite, more of this empowering of the Holy Ghost, by which we shall advance onward and onward, until we bring the whole of God's promise within our own experience.

Here is a closing word. "That your days may be multiplied . . . as the days of heaven upon the earth" (ver. 21). What are your days like? "Days of hell upon the earth" might be said of many in the world. Oh, this teeming sin-stained city; it is as a hell upon the earth. But, my brethren, what are your days like? Do you shed the air of heaven about you wherever you go? Where are the Christians whose days are as the days of heaven upon the earth? They are very few, and far between. Thank God, they are increasing in these times. There are men and women who know what it is to spend a whole day in heaven every day upon the earth. It is a wonderful thing to live that life. "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." My Lord came down and did it; and since then anybody dwelling and abiding in Christ may do that will of the Father.

Do you know anything of this land? Do you go in and possess it. Why are so many slack to go in and possess it? It is yours. What is the key to its possession? There are two keys to the possession of it. Of course they both imply faith. The Israelites of old could not enter in because of unbelief. But there it is, and if you have the faith to go in, the two keys are Jordan and Joshua. The children of Israel could not get into the promised land until they passed through Jordan. What does Jordan mean? It means judgment. What does judgment mean? There were those stones in the bottom of the river erected by the command of God. What do they mean? A stone for every tribe, representing all the people, was placed in the bed of Jordan, so that; when the waters returned, self was buried. The man was buried there, and he goes on without himself, so to speak, into the promised land. That is the only way to get in. Are you buried in the Jordan of judgment, so that self is gone, and do you realise it? Oh, that we might all be buried there, and remain there in the depths of Jordan!

What is Joshua? That is the new ego—the new self. The old self is buried, and we must have a new self. Joshua comes to me to lead me into the promised land; my Joshua is my Jesus. "The Lord, He shall conquer"—that is his name. This is the new man. It is not I that live, but Christ that liveth in me. He is the conquering Jesus. He is the Captain of our Salvation. Self buried in Jordan. Now go on with Jesus into the promised land, the land free from artificial restraint, the land of perpetual dependence, the land of perpetual presence, the land of progress and of victory, the land of the days of heaven upon the earth. May God Himself give it to us. Amen.

Y.M.C.A.—WHERE TO DRAW THE LINE.

Sir,—With regard to the letter of "C." in your last issue, may I quote the well-known words of Paul: "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient." There is such a thing as Christian expediency as well as worldly expediency, and if we can establish that any given agency is lawful, what we have then to decide is, "Is it expedient?"

It will, I presume, be conceded that it is perfectly lawful for Christian men to engage in cricket, football, and athletics generally; and if it is lawful for individual Christians, surely it is equally lawful for associated Christians. Bearing in mind then the special work of the Y.M.C.A., the question that arises is, "Is it expedient to adopt such agencies in connection with the Association? Will they benefit and help forward the particular work of the Y.M.C.A., which is, as we all know, 'Young men for Christ, and Christ for young men?'" I think they will, and from my experience I think I can prove that they do.

Man is a four-sided animal. Some of the Y.M.C.A.'s announce their object to be the benefit of young men, spiritually, socially, intellectually and physically, and we must bear in mind that the physical part of a man's constitution can no more be neglected with impunity than the spiritual. There are those who neglect their souls, and there are those who neglect their bodies, the result being one and the same, viz., decay and death. The aim of every Christian man, for himself, should be to possess a sound mind in a sound body, and to use every legitimate means to this end.

For several reasons I would advocate athletic clubs and gymnasia in connection with every Y.M.C.A., not only to keep our members in good trim physically, but also because the Association's sphere of usefulness may thereby be largely extended. Let every club be known as the Y.M.C.A. club, not as the "Shaftesbury," the "Grasshoppers," &c. This title in itself will be a witness for the Master in the cricket-field. Let not the members be ashamed to wear the letters "Y.M.C.A." on their caps. Then, by the behaviour, kindness, courtesy, and unwillingness to take offence of the Y.M.C.A. men, a useful example might be offered. I have several times myself given our programmes, and an invitation to our rooms, to members of clubs we have met in the field. Meeting so many widens considerably our acquaintance with the young men of the neighbourhood, and also advertises the Association.

One great end served by cricket and boating clubs is that it keeps our young men together during the summer, which is always a critical time for such institutions as ours. Then, again, some who will come to us for the clubs, gymnasium, &c., will afterwards join us as associates (I have such on my books now), and thus come under the Association's influence, who can tell with what blessed results? Remembering that young men will have recreation, how much better it is to provide it for them where every effort is made to exclude evil influences, and to bring a good influence to bear, than to let them seek it in quarters where they may be lost to all that is pure, and lovely, and of good report.—

Yours truly, Edwin W. Stringer,
Gen. Sec. Kingston & Surbiton Y.M.C.A.

Dear Sir,—I would remark that the Y.M.C.A. contains four elementary ideas—"Men," "Young Men," an "Association," and its Christian character.

First, men are contemplated, not children, not lads, not youths, though the latter may be linked in. Second, young men. As such they need ample bodily exercise. In cities and large towns indoor modes are more requisite than in the country. It should be severe enough to produce fatigue, but not exhaustion. It is directly beneficial to the body; and indirectly it tends to save from many a snare. Duly used, it also strengthens and refreshes the powers of the mind. The need of exercise is not extinguished by conversion.

Third, Christian. The Lord Jesus became Christ through the anointing of the Holy Ghost, and He baptizes his followers. A Christian association is one which has primarily in view as its objects the purposes for which the Holy Ghost is given by the risen Saviour.

Fourth, the Association. The objects, as expressed originally, and for many years, were twofold—the improvement of the spiritual and mental condition of young men. Lately, I think (I never knew when exactly, nor by whose authority), two other objects were added, the physical and social welfare. I quite approve of these additions; only, perhaps in common with many others, I am anxious that the natural, valuable as it is, should not gain too much prominence or be put out of its justifiable place, which seemed probable when athletics were put forward as "a means of winning young men to Christ."

The question is now raised by "C."—Where shall the line be drawn? Is not the common sense of the matter to put each in its proper place, and not to put the two in antagonism one to the other? Let us seek to preserve the Christian element as the primary one in our own hearts, and in the associated body; and so to conduct the Association as to keep it full in view, unmistakably the leading idea. This being predominant, then also admit bodily exercise as a subordinate advantage (I will not say object) of the Association; and so conduct ourselves and our Associations as to keep the natural in a subordinate place and within the bounds of innocence.

I do not think one can define or dictate to another about details. The New Testament does not so teach us, but rather by principles. One might say, generally, Let the heads of each local Association show that, though older and more mature, they thoroughly sympathise in the need of the younger life, by their arrangements and their occasional presence, and, if so inclined, by just occasional participation. Nevertheless, let the leaders make it evident that they have substantially let go the things inferior, and are pressing on in their Master's work, caring for the things superior, thorough followers of Him who said, "Wist ye not that I must be in the things of my Father."

Wimbledon. J. van Sommer.

BRIGHTON.—On July 7 a deeply interesting meeting of Congregational and Baptist ministers and office-bearers was held at Clifton-road Congregational Church, Brighton, for prayer and conference on the spiritual condition of the Churches. The meeting, which was well attended, was presided over by Rev. W. Crosbie. A very hallowed feeling prevailed, and it was unanimously resolved to hold gatherings of a similar character at stated periods. A committee was appointed to take charge of the arrangements.

COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION.—The Secretary has recently visited several of the stations of the Mission and testifies to the rich blessing attending the quiet labours of the missionaries. In Northampton, where, through the liberality of Mr. George Williams, the committee have been enabled to appoint a missionary to visit the factories, workshops and public-houses, great good is being done. From Sidcup, Hull, Hitchin, Monmouth, Ongar, Burton-on-Trent, Torquay, Cheltenham, and Ipswich, most encouraging reports have been received.

EVANGELISING THE MASSES.

THIS question, so often considered at Christian conferences and clerical meetings, has sometimes had a rather irritating effect on my own mind, for one has felt that, after hours of heated debate, the simple answer must ever be, "Let us take it to them."

Mr. Chapman, of Wambrook, and myself, were beginning a mission at Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent. We had very fair congregations, but both the vicar and ourselves were rather disappointed to find that the greater part of those present were those who had already received the Gospel, and though, of course, we rejoiced to meet with so many brethren and sisters in Jesus, we wanted rather to welcome to the church those who as yet were unsaved, if happily the Master should use us in bringing them also to a saving knowledge of the truth. "We must go into the streets with that cornet of yours," said the vicar. "I will take the harmonium," said my fellow-missioner. "I the euphonium," added a young lay helper; nor was it long before a converted engine-driver appeared on the scene, bringing his tenor trombone. There would have been no novelty in the matter had we waited till evening; but we determined to go out in the early afternoon, and after prayerfully committing the matter to the Lord, we went away with the consciousness that his smile would be upon us. Our plan was to, first of all, play one of Sankey's tunes; then to sing the chorus, and afterwards give a very short address.

The result was most cheering. Men and women came out and stood in their doorways, listening most attentively to what was said, some of them thanking us, and giving a promise to come up to the mission services in the church at night. Sometimes we based our addresses on a text of Scripture, sometimes we gave a few thoughts suggested by the hymn we had been singing, and occasionally took hints that were furnished by the signs of the public-houses near us. One of these was styled the "Who would have thought it?" and it was really a valuable address that our young friend, Charlie Cox, the euphonium player, gave on the words to which our attention was turned. He had no doubt, he said, but that many a young man who had been a promising lad in the Sabbath-school was now a frequenter of the public-house "Who would have thought it?" Friends still left on earth were surprised, and dear ones taken to heaven would never have thought it. By and by he imagined it likely that a voice would be heard in hell, from some poor lost soul addressing itself in the same suggestive words—"Who would ever have thought it?" And yet God, by his grace, could save a drunkard as easily as anyone else. He had often saved the most debased, and could still make wondering people ask—"Who would ever have thought it?" as they should be led to see a dear soul snatched as a brand from the eternal burning, and made a child of God in Christ.

This kind of work we carried on through all the afternoons of the mission, without meeting the semblance of opposition. At one point we came across the foundrymen who were hurrying home, with their day's work done; but numbers of them stopped to listen to us, and afterwards joined us in a parting hymn. On the Saturday afternoon, we had quite a band of instrumentalists with us, our musical co-workers being found as apt at preaching the Gospel as in handling cornet, baritone, and euphonium.

While we were standing in one place a poor old man, with tears in his eyes, came out of a house and took his stand by us, evidently anxious to lay hold of the salvation some of our party had preached. We prayed for him, where we stood, and then noticing a neatly dressed young woman who had scarcely moved from where she first halted in her journey to listen to the music, I went and asked her if she had found a saving interest in Christ? "I have been to chapel most regularly," said she. "But that will not do," I replied. "Now, I have not much time to talk, but you have doubtless heard about Rowland Hill and Lady Anne Erskine. What he told her, I tell you; and what he asked her, I ask you. "My Master, the Lord Jesus, has given his own heart's blood for your soul. Shall He have it?" "He shall," she replied, in a manner that told me the words came from her very heart. One old woman who appeared to have been impressed by the word spoken, gave me her hand as a mark that she wished us to pray for her; and later on in the day a man went up to Mr. Guest asking him to pray for him. "I have had some drink," said he, "but what that man has been saying (one of the bandsmen) has touched my heart. I wish you would pray for me, sir, and ask him who has been speaking to pray for me too." Altogether, we had every reason to thank God for the services both in the church and in the street. Several, and I both hope and believe it was in all sincerity and truth, professed to have been brought to Christ.

Nothing gave us more pleasure during our visit then to find how the Y.W.C.A. had grown since we had been in Burton before. The members of the Burton branch turned up in such numbers, on the Thursday night of the mission when a special address was given to young women on "Orpah's Return," that of themselves they went a good way towards forming a congregation. I thought to myself when I saw so many of them, "What a boon it would be if some rich servant of Christ would give £1000 to buy for them a central Home with a nice little private garden around it!" Possibly someone who has pondered the needs of young women in a place like Burton-on-Trent may yet be led of the Lord to offer even more than the sum mentioned. JOHN E. LINNELL.

Pavenham Vicarage, Bedford.

"Why do you not come to church?" said a Christian to a working-man.

"Why don't the church come to me?" was the blunt reply.

It is related that the saintly John Fletcher of Madeley was accustomed to take a bell and go about the streets in the early dawn, ringing the bell and inviting the people to come to morning service. You may be sure they came. It is not so difficult to gather people in to hear the Gospel, if men are only willing to go after them.

Near the close of 1885 Mr. Moody was requested to open a down-town church in New York. He said:

"I will go down and open that church on one condition: that is, that you get the people around that building—not the people from Brooklyn, Jersey City, and up town—people that have been going to meeting for twenty-five years. Do not advertise in the papers. Take invitations, and have those families visited, and find out what is around your church."

"They found," says Mr. Moody, "there were seventy-six thousand people in that district. There were thirty-four thousand Protestants, and only one German church. I set to work on the thirty-four thousand Protestants. They had put up a building costing $175,000. When we commenced, the building was not full—could not get a crowd; so I said, 'This will not do; we must go out for the people.' I appointed a committee to meet me before the advertised time, and we started out. I went up the Bowery. Years ago, when I preached in Farwell Hall, we had a man on every corner. A man could not go by but he got from one to a dozen invitations. The first invitation he probably threw to the winds; the second invitation he noticed; going on a little further he met another man, and so on, until he got waked up. It carried me back to those days. But I went up the Bowery. I met a man, and I said, 'Won't you go round and hear Moody and Sankey? They are right around the corner!'

"'No,' he said, he would not go. He said they were humbugs; he said they were mountebanks.

"'How do you know they are? Did you ever hear them?'

"'No,' he said, and did not want to.

"'But won't you go with me?'

"'No; I won't. I am a Roman Catholic.'

"'Never mind,' said I. 'I tell you I have heard Moody, and I never heard him say a word against a Roman Catholic priest. I never heard him say a Roman Catholic was a mountebank. I believe you are doing him wrong.'

"'Well,' said he, 'perhaps I was a little hasty.'

"And I had a chance to talk to him about the kingdom of God.

"I walked up the Bowery awhile, and came back and passed some men, and tapped one of them on the shoulder.

"'Won't you come round and hear Moody and Sankey?'

"'No; I have got to see my sweetheart.'

"'Never mind your sweetheart; bring her along with you.'

"I tapped another on the shoulder, and he said, 'This is the second time you have asked me.' Afterward he tapped me on the shoulder, and said, 'I think I will go around and hear those chaps.'

"I got him around, brought him up in front, and gave him a seat before me. I never saw a man more astonished in my life! The man was wide awake. He was not drowsy a bit.

"What was the result? From that time we had to shut the doors afternoon and evening half an hour before the advertised time, on account of the crowd of people. It is no trouble to reach the people if you go after them."—Chicago Watchman.

OUR COUNTRYMEN IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—I hope you will allow me to follow up the statements in recent numbers regarding our countrymen in India, many of whom are scattered as sheep without a shepherd, by a few practical sentences. Volunteer evangelists, it appears, are going to India next cold season to visit various parts of the land. Such work has been owned of God, as when Dr. Somerville and Rev. Melville Pym went in connection with our Winter Mission; and when, quite apart from any society, Rev. Sholto Douglas, Lord Radstock, and the venerable Mr. Müller, went to India.

But such visitors can only reach the great centres of population. India greatly needs for railways, tea and coffee plantations, and small stations with or without troops, men like Charles Studd and Stanley Smith, who would stay all the year round, and work in the plains, except when they find fresh work and a refuge from the heat among the mountains.

Rev. H. G. E. De St. Dalmas will return to India in November for his twofold work of evangelist and secretary of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society. He would be ready to give aid to volunteers in marking out districts and arranging plans of action. I shall be glad to have communications from any who feel called to go on their own resources. Ample spheres could be marked out for seven men or more.

Besides such volunteers, it is most desirable that we should have more than now of evangelists partly supported from home and partly in India. Some hearts are already touched; but in these days supplies come in too slowly to send them. If means were available, some might go with Mr. De St. Dalmas, or follow him in good time for winter work.—Yours truly,

JOHN FORDYCE, General Secretary.

33, Sutherland-place, Bayswater, W.

P.S. In your report of our Mildmay meeting it was stated that I had been forbidden to return to India." The doctors only advised that I should not return; but my heart is very much there, and I would gladly go again, if the Master send me. Meanwhile, "my given work" is to enlist others, and secure means for this branch of the King's service. J. F.

LEYTONSTONE.—Success continues to attend the services held in the large tent erected at the corner of Davis'-lane, Leytonstone-road, by Mr. John Wooldridge. This is now the fifth week of the mission, and it is intended to continue the meetings for some weeks longer.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

ISRAEL A SEPARATE PEOPLE.

In Room No. 4 there was a large gathering on the first afternoon to consider this subject, one that is awakening growing interest. Earl Cavan (Chairman) said God's dealings with Israel as a separate people were a type of the spiritual Israel, whom God will separate and make a praise and glory unto Himself. Rev. Dr. Rosedale pointed out that the Jews were chosen by God from all other nations, and served the Lord after their return from the Babylonish captivity. They were very anxious to follow God's law. Pliny and Gibbon alike bear witness to this fact. They had been taught this lesson—that it was a very serious thing to depart from serving the living God. Next, he showed how complete was the separation God ordained for his ancient people, in reference to the land, which (Lev. xxv. 23) could not be sold for ever, to marriage, to food, to uncleanness, and other matters. Reference had been made to failure in separation, and the failure of the Jews was terrible indeed. They forsook all that distinguished them from other peoples, and then the Word of God itself, even introducing into their synagogues the Talmud and other broken pitchers, which would hold no water. The results of all this were known to all, and were plainly visible at the present hour. But the cry has gone up, "Lord, how long?" and events now transpiring seemed to show that great events were about to happen; then, according to God's own Word, his people will again arise and be a wonder, a praise, and the admiration of the whole earth.

Rev. J. Wilkinson, in tracing the history of the Jews from the call of Abraham to the present time, said it displayed such wonders of Divine interposition as the world had never else beheld, and the only satisfactory answer to the question why the nation was not utterly destroyed was that it exists for God. His quarrel with his people would be settled in the place where it originated. When the Lord returns they shall mourn for Him whom their fathers crucified. Jesus will then speak to them in such accents of love as will set them on fire to spread his name all over the world. At present there is such a movement amongst the Jews as has never been known since Pentecost. When he was laid on a bed of sickness at Hastings, a gentleman whom he had never seen sent him £3000 for the purchase of Bibles to be distributed amongst the Jews in every land.

FOREIGN MISSIONS—AFRICA.

This subject attracted a large attendance in Room No. 4 on Thursday. Mr. R. C. L. Bevan presided. Dr. Dalzell described the condition of Zululand and his connection with the Gordon Memorial Mission, established fifteen years ago. He pleaded earnestly for the eighty millions of inhabitants in that country, not one million of whom had ever so much as heard a whisper of the name of Jesus or of God. The difficulties in dealing with the adult population were immense, by reason of their superstition and ignorance, and the practice of polygamy. Though Christianity had as yet obtained no hold on the men, it was otherwise with the wives. A real work was being done in training the children, and many who had been brought up in the Mission Home had gone forth and formed bright and pleasant homes, a wonderful contrast with the wretched hovels in which their unconverted brethren live in darkness and misery.

Mr. Edward H. Glenny spoke of openings for Gospel work in North Africa, Morocco, Algiers, and Tunis. North Africa is peopled by the Berber races, for whom he wanted to gain their interest. At Tunis, within a few days' journey of this country, there were multitudes of people without the Gospel, though prepared to listen to it. He solemnly asked, "Are we prepared to give them the Gospel, or are they to go down to the grave in darkness?" There was no danger of race fanaticism; indeed, in all places they found the people willing to listen. The work of the Medical Mission in Tangiers and Morocco has been greatly blessed, and in this way a hold was being gained on the people. There were open doors everywhere. Miss Herdman and Miss Caley settled some time since in a place where there was no other European—a town with a population of 1500 Mohammedans and 500 Jews. Many of the people gathered regularly in the courtyard of their house to hear the Scriptures read, this being followed by an explanation in Spanish for the Jews, and in Arabic for the Mohammedans. After a time, however, these had to come on separate days, as the Mohammedans were very angry with the Jews for having crucified the Lord Jesus. Often, too, the people invite these ladies to their houses and gardens, where the Scriptures are circulated and the Word of God spoken. Mr. Glenny described a visit of one of their missionaries to a town of 20,000 inhabitants, in which was the holy place, to which strangers would not have been admitted a few years ago. Now this missionary, with a French brother, was able to distribute tracts there. Tunis, a city with 140,000 inhabitants, had the reputation of being a very fanatical place, but nowhere had the Gospel been more readily received than there. He concluded an earnest address by inviting some of those present to go and live in North Africa, and so to help in making known the Gospel.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN RUSSIA.

A correspondent of The Daily News writes:—The deplorable intolerance in religious matters which distinguishes Russian rule has just obtained fresh victims—one named Tikhanoff, an inferior functionary of the telegraphs; the other, Veksdine, a countryman. These were a few days ago summoned before the court at Novgorod for an offence against Orthodoxy. Tikhanoff, it was alleged, had assembled various persons and had told them that he could not find the Orthodox Church to be right in recommending the worship of holy images. "The Saviour," he said, "never spoke one word about such images. We ought to worship God alone, and when praying we should do well if we did as the Saviour told us to do, to go into our chamber instead of praying in the streets as the Pharisees did in old time, and as the Orthodox do now." Many of the hearers sympathised with the views of Tikhanoff; and the other offender, Veksdine, seems to have carried on an energetic agitation for "the new truth." The two men charged with this offence were sentenced to hard labour. A great crowd attended the trial, consisting, for the most part, of sympathisers with the defendants.

As far as I know, only one of all the Russian papers and reviews has had the courage—and courage it is—to make any remarks about this sentence. That organ, a review, called the Viestrik Tevropi (the European Messenger), asks what the adherents of Tikhanoff and Veksdine, who attended the trial, can think of the case. It can scarcely be supposed, the writer says, that this sentence will, in their eyes, be judged a sufficient proof that Tikhanoff and Veksdine are wrong, and the Orthodox Church right. It is much more probable that the condemned men will be considered martyrs to the truth, and that the number of their secret adherents will increase. All that the Orthodox Church can gain by its severity is to increase the number of religious hypocrites.

DEAF AND DUMB.—The Association for Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb owes its origin to the benevolence of the Baroness Mayer de Rothschild, who was so struck with the success that attended the system of lip-reading in the Jews' Deaf and Dumb Home that she determined to extend its blessings to the afflicted of every race and creed. This was in 1871, and on July 15, 1872, the Normal School of the Association was opened at 11, Fitzroy-square, and last year there were sixty-two pupils in attendance. The oral system of instruction is likely soon to be generally adopted, and is finding favour in Board and other schools.

BIBLE STUDIES.—22.

"A GOOD SOLDIER OF JESUS CHRIST."

(1) The enrolment. "My son, give me thine heart" (Prov. xxiii. 26). "Come unto Me" (Matt. xi. 28). "Follow me . . . They straightway left their nets and followed Him" (Matt. iv. 19, 20).

(2) Putting on the uniform. "The disciples were called Christians" (Acts xi. 26). "They first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God" (2 Cor. viii. 5). "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls" (Acts ii. 41).

(3) There must be obedience to the Captain. "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts v. 29). "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak . . Thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak" (Jer. i. 6, 7). "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it" (John ii. 5). "Thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall appoint" (2 Sam. xv. 15). "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven" (Matt. vi. 10).

(4) The servcie always first. "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier" (2 Tim. ii. 4). "Love not the world" (1 John ii. 15). "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world" (2 Tim. iv. 10). "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me, is not worthy of Me" (Matt. x. 37).

(5) Fighting and hardships expected. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places" (Eph. vi. 12). "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ" (2 Tim. ii. 3). "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. iii. 12). "When they had called the apostles and beaten them, they . . . let them go. And they departed . . . rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name" (Acts v. 40, 41).

(6) Life risked. "Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts xv. 26). "Neither count I my life dear unto myself" (Acts xx. 24). "They stoned Stephen" (Acts vii. 59). "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, and the Gospel's, the same shall save it" (Mark viii. 35).

(7) Necessaries are supplied. "Take (not make) unto you the whole armour of God" (Eph. vi. 13). "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness" (2 Cor. xii. 9). "He careth for you" (1 Peter v. 7). "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. iv. 13). "All power is given unto Me. . . . Lo, I am with you alway" (Matt. xxviii. 18, 20).

(8) For love of the Captain. "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death" (Phil. i. 20). "That he may please Him" (2 Tim. ii. 4). "The love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Cor. v. 14).

(9) The sure reward. "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus' Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 57). "I have fought a good fight. . . . Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. iv. 7, 8).

I have a Captain, and the heart
  Of every private man
Has drunk in valour from his eyes
  Since first the war began:
He is most merciful in fight,
And of his scars a single sight
The embers of our failing might
  Into a flame can fan.—Lynch.

YOUNG WOMEN IN RICHMOND.—Dear Sir,—We are hoping to start an institute here, in connection with our Y.W.C.A., and wish to ask the prayers of your readers—that the Lord will provide suitable workers, the necessary funds, and, above all, give a rich blessing to all who shall attend the classes or come under our influence.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait and sketch of Mrs. Reaney, of Stepney.

A correspondent proposes a petition or memorial to the Queen, numerously signed by all classes in the country, praying that, in view of depression in trade and agriculture, and the difficult questions relating to Ireland, Her Majesty would appoint a day of humiliation and prayer. "What the country wants most now is national humiliation, and an appeal to our covenant-keeping God to give us repentance and wisdom. I have but little faith in a change of Ministers, but I have in the nation looking up. Surely, with all our present organisation throughout the country, such a petition would be largely signed by Christians of all denominations." Doubtless one of the surest signs of our national disregard of God is that many years have elapsed since as a nation we have acknowledged our offences to Him, or asked his guidance of our affairs. We firmly believe that, if now England would turn to God and in all her ways acknowledge Him, He would direct her paths. His promise, "Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you," is as true to a nation as to a man only.

A correspondent writes thus on the present opportunity :—"At the present time men's minds are directed to seek the good of our kingdom. All good is of God: should He not be acknowledged at this time? It seems a fitting opportunity to say a few wise words for Christ and his kingdom. Let private Christians watch for the right moment to say the right word. And let no true Christian stand up at any political meeting, on either side, without first looking to the Lord to give an appropriate word to speak for Him and his kingdom, that ruleth over all (Psalm cxlv.). Let us pray that Christians may be led of the Spirit, and constrained to speak for Christ during the next few weeks of very special opportunity."

Mr. E. Rider Cook, the representative for West Ham in the late Parliament, uttered some wise words at the late annual meeting of Hackney (Independent) College. He did not believe that parents were right in saying, "We intend our sons to be ministers." Ministers must hear the Divine call in their own hearts. He would like to see young men in business not going into the ministry for money, but giving up money to go into it. To a man with experience of life, classics and mathematics were not wanted in the same way they were needed by others. He preferred a training-place for ministers where a Principal guided their daily life; and held that this was better than the candidate for the ministry entering an English university. He thought Independents should stick to that principle.

Presuming that Mr. E. G. Salmon, whose article on "What the working classes read" appears in the current Nineteenth Century, is well informed on the subject, the statements he makes are very serious. He says of the instruction imparted through Board Schools that it has not to any extent advanced instructive reading, but that which is worthless: that the Bible is, in consequence of Sunday newspapers, less read by the working classes than formerly: that these Sunday papers with their enormous circulation stimulate Republican sentiments: and that the penny novelettes, with their nasty matter, and key-note of high-born scoundrelism, circulate beyond all estimation among shop girls, seamstresses, and domestic servants, and deplorably foster an aversion to the classes above them. The problem of adequately counteracting this state of things is a very grave one.

The attempt to deal with this social condition of the people by the follies of a Romanised Ritualism may well excite the indignation of Churchmen. One of them tells in The Record of a seminary where young men are trained for the office of English incumbents. Confession is allowed, prayers for the dead encouraged, the Roman view of the immaculate conception and assumption of the Virgin is held, and prayers are made to the saints before pictures. No wonder that the Bishops should warn against forsaking the principles of the Reformation. Would that their warnings availed.

A correspondent sends a letter based on the text, "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn," in which he makes a strong plea that greater consideration should be shown to evangelistic workers than is often the case. He cites instances where evangelists have been invited to conduct gospel meetings at a distance from their homes, which involved much time, trouble, and, in some cases, expense, yet no suitable provision was made for the bodily refreshment of the preacher, or for his direction and general comfort. As our correspondent remarks, these errors are probably caused more by want of thought than want of heart; but such things ought not to be, and we would fain hope that they are not of frequent occurrence.

One of the evils of our day is a false idea with regard to labour. Manual toil is counted ungentlemanly, and, therefore, a thing to be avoided as much as possible. The ambition of clever young men among the working classes is, as Mr. Gladstone once put it, "to escape from a handicraft into the supposed paradise of pen and ink." This is a great mistake. Britain has in the past been prosperous on account of the attention paid to manufactures, agriculture, and commerce; these pursuits necessitated hard work with the hands as well as with the brain. The spread of education threatens to undermine this prosperity by giving boys the idea that a seat on an office-stool is better than a place at the bench, and that white hands are a greater honour than hands black and horny with toil.

The old lesson of the dignity of labour has to be taught again. A man can be as truly a gentleman in following the plough as in driving a quill. He can, in fact, be one more easily in the former than in the latter occupation, for he has less temptation to do unmanly deeds. A gentleman in the good old sense was not a creature with a long hat, an eye-glass, and a faultless suit of clothes, but a man who did gentle or manly deeds. In the quiet discharge of daily duties, and in the feeling of pleasure in hard work with the hands, a manhood is developed which puts to the blush the counterfeit of manhood often found in those who follow the so-called "genteel" avocations.

It must also be remembered that production is higher in the scale of reality than consumption. Workers with the hand produce; workers with the brain, so far as food, clothing, and shelter are concerned, consume. All work, of whatever kind, is honourable, and, if done in the sight of God, is devout. Without disparaging the value of mental effort, we say that he who toils in the fields, at the forge, or in the factory, is doing a grand work, and has the fullest right, if honest in heart and pure in life, to the title of gentleman.

The Church Times in a recent issue has the following remarkable comment :—

> It is a curious circumstance that when a man once becomes a thorough-going total abstainer, there is hardly any craze of which he may not be capable. The fact is, however, that no mental constitution can stand the strain which is put upon it by the teetotal exegesis. Canon Wilberforce, for instance, has just published in his Parochial Magazine a letter urging the destruction of all the bulwarks which the Church has set up against the inroads of heresy and schism! By-the-bye, there are some people down in Essex who, if they are not teetotalers, ought to be; for they have actually started a church as a memorial of Elizabeth Fry! We have no word to say in disparagement of that excellent Quakeress, but still to dedicate a Christian church to a woman who, strictly speaking, was not a Christian, is a strange proceeding.

We are requested to publish the following, which was not admitted into the columns of our High Church contemporary :—

To the Editor of "The Church Times."

SIR,—Although not a general reader of your paper, I beg you will permit me to express my dissent from the statement made in your last week's summary in reference to the new church to be erected at Upton-park to the memory of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Fry—viz., that she to whose name the church is to be dedicated, "strictly speaking, was not a Christian."

I take it that anyone who is a believer in and a follower of Christ is a Christian. A man or woman is either a Christian or not a Christian, and I submit that, given two followers of Christ, one is no more strictly speaking a Christian than the other, whether they be members of the Church of England or of the Society of Friends.

Mrs. Fry, it is true, was not a member of the Church of England, but she was, beyond doubt, that which was of far more advantage to her—viz., a member of the Church of Christ.

It seems to me that in these times effort should be made to prevent any sort of unhappy feeling between the Established Church and Nonconformists, and that a statement so misleading is not only unlikely to bring about a more harmonious state of things than already exists, but is unjust to the memory of one who, in her Master's name, did so much to point fallen humanity to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

Yours faithfully, W. H. J. H.
Plashet-road, Upton-park, E.

It is to be regretted that so many people who take holidays at this time of the year miss a pleasure which is at their hands, by neglecting to open their eyes to some of the details of God's handiwork. They can admire a great landscape, a stormy, restless sea, or a towering mountain, lifting up its weather-beaten top to the mists; but they are impatient where these are not, and forget that the Creator's power and love are manifested in the moss as in the mountain, and in the tiny flower as in the swelling sweep of wood and field. A square yard of moorland may well give thoughts "too deep for tears," and a little study of the wild flowers, followed not very scientifically, but merely with the aid of one of the many useful little manuals which have been issued of late years, would afford relief and pleasure to many wearied men and women who are resting from the worry of business or toil, and who frequently find the round of amusement in a seaside or inland resort not much less fatiguing than the work which they have left for a time.

At any period of the year God has a witness in his own garden of the fields and lanes, but in July and August the road-sides and meadows and thickets are aglow with the testimony of the lilies of the field. Christ's injunction to consider them, how they grow, without toiling or spinning, and are clad in a glory compared with which that of Solomon was but as tinsel, may be followed with great and lasting advantage even by those who have to descend to their study from what would appear to be greater and higher things. If the mountain shows God's hands, the tiny flower shows God's fingers, and it is helpful to remember that the Divine Creator cares for the wayside weed.

To those who take children for a holiday, we would especially commend such methods of spending time. As the young people grow up they will be confronted by much sceptical pseudo-science, and the foundation of a loving recognition of God's handiwork in small and so-called common things, is by no means a poor basis from which to resist the attacks of those who profess to know the secrets which the Creator has successfully and wisely concealed. Approached in such a spirit, the many-coloured lilies of the field will indeed plead eloquently for God, and the wise parent who introduces his children to a reverent study of them in their native haunts will not only have given a new pleasure, but he will have added another link to that chain of love which binds the throbbing heart of the child to the Source of all love and life and light.

Those bitterly mistaken persons who, directly or indirectly, are labouring for the secularisation of the Sabbath by extending Sabbath-day amusements, may deny, or be unaware of, the fact that they are in reality enemies to the best interests of the working man whose welfare they profess to be looking after; but the fact remains that their success would only widen the already too deep gulf between capital and labour. Such a result has followed closely upon the secularisation of the Sabbath in Paris, where selfish capitalists and employers of labour have not been slow in asking themselves why the week's wages should be increased if the Sunday, not wanted by the workmen for rest, were thrown in; and in thousands of instances in Paris alone the Sabbath has been lost by the labourer, and only the employer has gained in any way. That such a state of things would follow any wide-spread secularisation of the Sabbath in England goes without saying, and the working man who throws in his influence with those who are opposed to the sanctity of the Sabbath is fighting against his own temporal as well as spiritual interests.

In France, too, on the part of those who continue to be paid by the day, there has been developed a growing tendency to work on the Sunday, and to take a "rest" on the Monday, there being more possibilities of dissipation on that day, even in Paris. The custom is one destructive to the labourer, for the needed rest which the Sabbath was intended to afford is not taken, and body and soul alike are injured. Apart from all higher and nobler views of the subject, and they are so evident we do not need to state them, the secularisation of the Sabbath would be a grave injury to working men, and if they are wise, they will, even from purely selfish motives, strongly oppose anything likely to interfere with the Divinely-ordained rest given to labour.

In Father Anderdon, a defender of the abominable Inquisition has been found; but we venture to hope that the Jesuitical third sermon upon "Points of History" which the accomplished Casuist recently preached in Manchester, will be studied in its published form by those who heard it, and who possibly forgot that the Jesuit stood behind the orator. It is only in keeping with Rome that even in this nineteenth century she should defend the cruelties and lust which disgraced former ages, and the sermon bears out the opinion frequently expressed in these columns, that if Rome had it in her power she would to-day be as bitterly relentless in her persecution as ever.

It will be new to readers of history to learn that "the Inquisition passed no secular sentence, nor executed one; it did but perform the office of a jury, and always recommended to mercy." If the martyrs' dust in Spain and Italy could speak, it would be testified that the juror's office was that of a butcher, and that the mercy was the mercy of rack and flame. Students of Romish history will, however, go with Father Anderdon in his coupling together, perhaps somewhat thoughtlessly, Philip of Spain and others with Nero. "If they came to the New Testament," said the Jesuit preacher, "they found St. Paul declaring that 'the existing power ordained by God beareth not the sword in vain;'" and he went on to ask, "If this was true when a monster like Nero sat upon the throne, how much more of a Christian prince who recognised in himself the privilege of being the Church's nursing father."

As Father Anderdon's opinions as to Christian princes are somewhat peculiar, if any of his hearers in Manchester care to become acquainted with one of them as depicted in an impartial history, we would commend to them the perusal of "Motley's History of the Dutch Republic." Father Anderdon, of course, would not refer to such a volume, based as it is upon documentary evidence, but he has admitted the perusal of the New Testament, the reading of which, without priestly interpretation, is denied to his flock, and we can only regret that he would seem to have imbibed so little of its spirit, and of the spirit of Jesus, as yet to be able to stand up and defend the rack and the martyr fires.

WEST MARYLEBONE MISSION.—The services conducted by Mr. J. Sprunt at Grove Hall, 130, Lisson-grove, have been removed to St. James's Hall, George-street, Lisson-grove.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—July 18, Acts xix. 1—12; July 19, xix. 13—27; July 20, xix. 28—41; July 21, xx. 1—22; July 22, xx. 13—24; July 23, xx. 25—38; July 24, xxi. 1—14.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF-HIGHWAY.—At the last monthly meeting of workers and their friends, on Friday, July 2, Mr. C. V. T. Onslow gave a profitable address on "The love of God." Mr. Merry, recently from Canada, spoke a few earnest words on the same subject. Several sailors gave testimony to blessing received at the Rest. Mr. Burrows spoke of the work among sailors at Naples, and introduced to the meeting Mr. Martin, just starting for that city. Mr. Hastings, from America, graphically described the difference between God's army and the devil's army. Mr. Bergmann (himself a converted Jew) related a most interesting and encouraging incident of a Jew converted at the Rest, and now a missionary to his own people. The Secretary stated the urgent need there is for extra helpers (both ladies and gentlemen) for the next two months, when so many of the regular workers will be away for their summer holiday.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY.

The recent afternoon annual gathering of this Society, in Willis's Rooms, says The Record, can hardly be said to have been a success. The Council will do well next year to arrange their meeting for at least a couple of months earlier, and at a time of day when it is possible for lay-men to attend. The annual report was of much interest, particularly those portions of it relating to the work that has been done by missioners of the Society in America and Canada, and on the West Coast of Africa. The work of Mr. Aitken and others of the Society's missioners during the mission in the United States seems to have been much appreciated by the brethren across the water, one rector congratulating a Society which can send forth to do its work men "of such sanctified common sense and such capacity for usefulness." The report of Rev. W. Haslam's work in Canada is also encouraging. Many a clergyman in the Dominion has made a fresh start in his work, strengthened in his own soul and riveted more closely to his people. The visit of Mr. Darwin Fox and Mr. Dodd to the native churches of Sierra Leone and Lagos was referred to. With all this foreign and colonial work on hand the list of home missions is somewhat less than the previous year, but nevertheless 237 missions represent a very fair twelve months' work.

The Bishop of Oxford said this Society admirably stepped in to supply deficiencies, and to give support to weak parishes. Many of them had seen what an amount of good could be accomplished by the missioner in a parish where perhaps the clergymen had become a little torpid, or a little overworked. A new voice awakened new echoes, and they desired to lose no opportunity of awakening those echoes, and of calling out souls which were not dead but only slumbering, to renewed energy in God's service.

Rev. C. J. Ridgeway gave a sketch of the work of the Society. Before a mission there must be careful preparation, and the after-work must not cease until all the souls have been gathered into God's great harvest. He bore his testimony to the practical work this Society is doing in bringing out good men. He expressed his pleasure, too, that the Society was wide awake, for whatever they might think of drowsy parsons, they could not look with any sympathy upon a drowsy Society. There was still much work remaining to be done.

Rev. F. Nevill, Principal of Fourah Bay College, Sierra Leone, testified, as an independent witness, that he believed the work done by Messrs. Fox and Dodd amongst the native Christians on the West Coast of Africa was of real vitality and likely to last. His description of the "after-work" that is going on was extremely interesting, and he drew forth much sympathy when he detailed the difficulties that beset the native Christians in heathen lands.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken, as was natural, principally devoted his remarks to an account of the work in America. How much had been effected God only knew. Certainly, a keynote had been struck, which was vibrating throughout all the States of America. The foreign and colonial work that had been accomplished showed the enormous responsibility that rested upon them as a Society, not only to do the work at home, but to set the tone for such work in the different colonies and dependencies of the British Empire. He pleaded for renewed funds and help to enable them to extend the work all the wide world over, even in the remotest parts of this earth of ours.

LAFORCE ASYLUMS.—The annual fête of the "John Bost Homes" took place on June 21. In the morning Pastor Couve, of Paris, preached from "Bear ye one another's burdens," &c. The visitors went through the nine different establishments which accommodate 490 persons—poor governesses, destitute servants, orphans, idiots, epileptics, &c. The deaths are only 4·25 per cent. The Hon. Arthur Kinnaird was the president for the day; "his address charmed the audience by its simplicity, practical sense, and rich Christian experience, all seasoned with that humour which characterises the English." It was translated by Professor John Monod.—Christianisme.

YOUNG WOMEN AT THE EXHIBITION.

We are now and then reminded of the heavy cost to others at which our enjoyments are provided for us. The following extracts from a weekly contemporary, The Tribune, ought to receive the earnest attention of all who have any influence or authority in connection with the Colonial Exhibition. We have received from an undoubted source full confirmation of the truth of the statements made. Indeed, we may say that the whole truth is far from being told. These poor girls, we are informed, are hard at work from nine in the morning till ten at night—till eleven on two evenings of the week—with very brief and uncertain intervals for meals. There is little doubt that the most inadequate arrangements for eating and enjoying their food induces in many cases the fatal habit of drinking. The very late hours, too, at which they are dismissed from this daily drudgery is from a moral point of view a serious element of danger. One can readily understand the wish on the part of these young women to accept such employment, but it is a crying disgrace that so little regard is paid to their comfort and welfare :—

"It may not be generally known that certain of the apartments in the Albert Hall are used by Messrs. Spiers & Pond for the accommodation of some of their employés at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition. We believe it was represented to the firm that the practice of turning out a large number of young girls at ten o'clock, and twice a week at eleven o'clock, to journey home as best they could, was far from a desirable one. In consequence, an effort was made to form a scheme by which they could all be housed for the night; but it was quickly abandoned as impracticable. The firm, however, utilised the suggestion so far as to provide sleeping accommodation for the manageresses of the various departments, private objects taking the place of the public considerations intended by the original mooters of the question. Thus it came about that the Albert Hall lends its sheltering roof to several attendants, although perhaps not to those who stand most in need of it.

"We wonder how many of the visitors to the exhibition have a thought for the enormous staff of employés, male and female, that administer to their requirements. It is no doubt a fine thing to carry out an undertaking that gives employment to so much labour, but surely it is incumbent upon its promoters to take care that their servants are fairly well cared for. They require refreshment quite as much as, and probably more than, the visitors. They also require time in which to eat it. Do they get it? The commonest workman has his fixed dinner hour, and can enjoy his meal, however humble, in comfort. Then why should any exception be made to so invaluable a rule at the Colonies? A large proportion of those employed are women of all ages. On busy days their strength and powers of endurance are enormously overtaxed. Surely they should be relieved at stated periods, during which they could enjoy complete rest in a comfortable room provided for the purpose. Are they? We are sorry to think that every one of these queries must be answered in the negative.

"During the 'Healtheries' it was a common complaint that the torture, for we can call it nothing else, inflicted upon the attendants belied the name given to the show. The staff was not nearly adequate to the work; there was no system of proper relief; no time was allowed for meals; no attention was paid to comfort; the food was frequently bad; and many parts of the buildings were pervaded by horrible emanations from the drainage, notoriously in the Duval dining rooms, where the fish refuse of the previous season had been swept into the drains, and left there to sicken the casual visitor, and slay the regular attendant

"We are afraid affairs are not much better now. Complaints are heard of food unfit to eat; of reasonable time being denied; of unaccountable petty tyrannies that are as purposeless as they are irksome; and of a tendency to regard servants simply as so many machines without feeling. Messers. Spiers & Pond should remember that to cater for a hungry public is not the only privilege they enjoy. It is theirs to make the lives of their attendants tolerable if they will, and to bring the colour of health to the cheeks that at present rely upon the toilette-table for their bloom. Meanwhile the practice continues of turning a crowd of girls into the streets at midnight. Surely it is high time that this matter was inquired into."

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

Having had the pleasure of seeing something of Dr. Chambers's labours, in the back streets of Lisson-grove and Marylebone, I venture to remind your readers of that excellent work. The Marylebone Medical Mission is doing real and effective service from house to house, ministering to the sick and afflicted, and bringing the power of practical Christian love to bear on the sorrows and sufferings of those who, too often, regard themselves as forsaken alike of God and man. The value of a good nurse in such service is pretty generally recognised. A lady who has had six years' experience as a deaconess at Mildmay has now thrown herself into the work of the Mission in Marylebone, and is finding a welcome in the poorest homes.

Besides the large number of patients seen at the dispensary (12,884 last year), Dr. Chambers and his helper are incessantly visiting from house to house, wherever sickness and poverty are found, carrying with them the help of medical skill, and the story of the Cross; and their efforts God has been pleased remarkably to bless. Many in the district are now serving and honouring God who first heard his name from the medical missionary in the hour of sickness. Several such instances I have just met with, exceedingly interesting, but too long to be here detailed.

Working quietly as this Mission has so long done, it is, perhaps, sometimes overlooked by those who give largely further afield. Surely a word to the wise is sufficient. Will not these earnest workers, doing at our own doors most useful and efficient service, be cheered by liberal gifts? May I add that besides the general fund, for direct medical mission work, the special fund for supplying nourishment and relief in cases where destitution is combined with sickness, needs replenishing. Gifts of second-hand and other cast-off warm clothing are also exceedingly serviceable. Communications should be made to Dr. Robert Chambers, 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, N.W. V.

MR. J. J. BROWNE, of the City Mission, South Norwood, has lately returned from Burslem, in North Staffordshire, where he has been conducting mission work amongst the pottery people during their "Annual Fair" or "Wakes." His labours met with much acceptance.

COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND, NORWOOD.—The annual prize festival at the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, Upper Norwood, took place on Saturday afternoon, and was attended by 200 or 300 visitors. The Duke of Westminster, president, took the chair, and the Duchess distributed the prizes. His Grace was glad to say that 100 old pupils were now earning their living. Having alluded to the invaluable services of Dr. Campbell, director of the Institution, his Grace remarked, in conclusion, that the College was in a most prosperous condition, with premises admirably suited to the work, and containing at present 176 pupils.

TRUST.

By the late Thomas Edmund Reynolds.

Be not anxious for the morrow!
He who portions joy and sorrow
Knoweth what for thee is best;
And whate'er its skies may bring
Thee of joy or sorrowing,
Comes at his behest.

Anxious thought can never yield thee
Grace to bear nor faith to shield thee,
Should the morrow trials bring;
But, if thou in patience wait,
He will help thee in thy strait,
Give thee song to sing.

His is love that lasts for ever,
Faithfulness that faileth never!
From thy mind forebodings cast;
And, to know what He will be,
Should a morrow rise on thee,
Read it from the past.

When at last thy home thou nearest,
And the gloom of death thou fearest,
May be then to-morrow's light,
Given thee for faithful trust,
Shall upon thy memory burst,
Pluming thee for flight.

When hath ceased all sin and sorrow,
Where thy life hath no to-morrow,
Sun, nor threatening cloud nor moon;
To the love thy past that planned,
Mid the harps of heaven's band,
Thine shall find a tune.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

THE BABIES' CASTLE.

H.R.H. Princess Mary Adelaide (Duchess of Teck) has kindly consented to publicly open Dr. Barnardo's enlarged Home for Infants at Hawkhurst, Kent ("Babies' Castle"), and has fixed August 9 for the ceremony. The new Home will be able to accommodate 100 infants.

LITTLE EMIGRANTS.

At the noonday prayer-meeting, at Aldersgate-street, on Monday last, 175 little girls from Dr. Barnardo's Homes were commended to God in prayer prior to their leaving England this day (Thursday) as an emigrant party for Canada. Mr. Robert Paton presided, and earnest prayer was offered by various friends.

In an interesting address, Dr. Barnardo supplied some details of the emigration work from his Home, and of the girls who were on the point of beginning life in a new country. Three hundred and eighty-four boys have already this year been emigrated to Canada, and the present party will make a total of 2299 boys and girls sent out from the Homes; 153 of the girls came directly from the Village Home at Ilford, 60 of these being, at their admission, cases of rescue from immediate and urgent moral peril; 11 of the party were under seven years of age, one little mite being only 3½. These younger children would, it was stated, be adopted into the families of Canadian settlers. The average time of residence of all the girls in the Homes was two years and eight months. From statistics supplied it appeared that not a few had disreputable relatives alive from whose influence it was most desirable that the children should be saved. Many of the girls had yielded their hearts to Christ under the influences which had surrounded them since entering the Homes.

Dr. Barnardo mentioned in conclusion that over 4000 acres of land had been recently secured on behalf of the Homes in the North-West of Canada, and it was intended to establish an industrial farm there, which would be worked by the bigger lads who entered the Institution. The children in the course of the proceedings sang several hymns very sweetly.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIAN CHARITY.

DEAR SIR,—Having read with much interest the communication of Rev. J. E. Linnell, on "False Charity and True," in your number of June 24, will you permit me to supplement a few remarks? There is, happily, a feeling of true charity among the members of many sections of the Christian Church, but it has often struck me it is greatly deficient in public display. Differences exist, and probably will exist, till the whole Church is made to shine in its risen glory. This, however, is no reason why sectional differences should not occasionally be laid aside, and Christians of various denominations should not, at stated periods in the same locality, meet around the Lord's table to show their oneness in Christ their common Head.

Charity, or rather love, is of small value if it does not unite us manifestly together, and draw out our sympathies to each other. There are many Christians who differ greatly in judgment on Church fellowship, and other kindred subjects, who can cordially embrace as brethren all who are the true disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ, and gladly have intercourse with them as far as they are in accord, and merge at least for a time all subjects of dissension. Would it not be a deed of "true charity" if opportunities were afforded them of showing their oneness in our beloved Lord?—Yours,

St. Mary Church, Devon. JAS. HARRISON.

THE PARIS MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Heath's letter in your issue of the 24th ult., represents the author of the verses, "Blotting out God," as having calumniated the Municipal Council of Paris, and censures you for not seeing the absurdity of the making the Municipality of Paris vote a measure for the whole of France. Mr. Heath says, "he has studied the matter more than most;" how strange then that he should ignore the most ordinary matters of fact.

There is scarcely a week passes but the said Council votes legislative measures treating matters of the gravest national importance, as though it were what it claims with ever-increasing arrogance to be, viz., the Government of France. Take for example the expulsion of the Orleans Princes voted by it on its own authority, and more, the confiscation of their goods, the separation of the Church and State; and again, its vote a short time since of 10,000 francs of the money of the Paris ratepayers for the strikes at Décazeville which was carried out in defiance of the Government.

There is something grotesque in the fact of a body of men persisting in discussing and voting the most extravagant and revolutionary measures, which the President as persistently annuls, and what a Swiss paper I have just been reading terms "the free-thinking insanities of the Municipal Council of Paris" would be only ridiculous were there not a method in their madness.

When we remember that the majority of the Municipal Councils in France take their cue from that of Paris, and that the communistic and atheistic tendencies of the latter, with its attitude of aggressive hostility to the "république bourgeoise," have powerful representatives in both chambers and in every Commune in France, it is not difficult to understand why the Temps should call it "the Irish question of the French Government."

Mr. Heath is in error when he attributes the authorisation of Mr. McAll's meetings to the Paris Municipality; that is due to the Government. As to the future of religious liberty in France, I would commend to him the words of the eminent Paris preacher, M. Bersier; he says, "Blind indeed is the man who does not see that the brutal and unjust proceedings now employed against the Catholics will soon be directed by a logic, constant and fatal, against every form of religious belief."

Let us not presume. God has set before us an open door. He alone can and will keep it open until his purposes are fulfilled; but depend upon it, the spirit which interdicted all reference to the Supreme Being at the inauguration of the new Hôtel de Ville; which excludes books like "Robinson Crusoe," and the Life of Jeanne d'Arc from the public libraries, because the former contains the name of God, and the latter, written by the republican and national historian, Henri Martin, because he speaks of what she considered the Divine nature of her mission; which has banished the name of God from the schools and the hospitals, so that the young, the aged, and the dying are left without God and without hope—will not stop short of persecution, and that in its most malignant form, when the time for it arrives.

Mr. Heath's assertion that it is not the true God, but only the Dieu of the Romish Apostasy against whom this blind rage vents itself, has no foundation in fact. The cry of "Le clericalisme c'est l'ennemi" was soon changed into "Dieu c'est l'ennemi," and the leaders of the movement declare themselves ready to go "to London, to Rome, or to Jerusalem to root up the baneful tradition of Jehovah." We may plead, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do;" but why plead thus if the cry, "Away with Him," be only directed against the God of the Ludovican tyranny?

The great and sinister dates of the French Revolution are nearing; God alone knows what they may bring with them, but many fear, and the signs of the times are ominous. Let the Christians of England make every effort and every sacrifice which the present condition of France demands; let them come to the help of the noble few who are labouring in the fires for the cause of God and of Christ against overwhelming forces of evil, and are seeking to make known to fair France that this is her day of visitation.

Paris. H. WEBBER.

"UNTEMPERED MORTAR."

DEAR SIR,—Many a child of God can sadly echo the words of "Watchman" on the above subject in your issue of July 1.

A little fact I lately heard speaks for itself, on the danger of "the Church walking with the world." After a kind of amateur theatrical entertainment, given by the choir and district visitors, connected with a large place of worship, a poor woman said to the minister, as she left the room, "Oh! sir, it was real beautiful; I've never been to the theayter, but the very next time I have a chance I will, for they say it's something like this, and this is grand. Thank you kindly, sir."

(N B.—It was to the theatre, not even a place of worship, much less to God, that she was attracted!)

May I take this opportunity of pressing upon Christian parents the importance of not having their children even taught to dance. Under the plea that it is essential to their deportment, &c., so many children of really Christian parents receive dancing lessons. I know from experience that it is a great help to young people to be able to say, "I do not dance, I never even learnt." When pressed to join "just a carpet dance," &c. And no wonder that young heads fail to see the wise distinction that some of their elders profess to do between the dancing school, carpet dances, &c., and what a lady termed, "dancing as a whole," and adding, "that I think very wrong for Christians, but just home dancing seems a necessity nowadays."

In happy contrast to this, we have a mother who was asked by a lady if her pretty daughter did not dance.

"No," was the reply.

"But how ever will she get on in the world?" said her questioner.

"I am not bringing her up for the world," was the quiet answer.—Yours truly, F. E. T.

REBECCA JARRETT.

DEAR SIR,—The kind friends who subscribed so readily towards the sum of money which was collected for Rebecca Jarrett while she was in prison, will, I am sure, be glad to learn through your pages that she is now thoroughly started in rescue work. She has got a little Home at Northampton to begin with, and it appears likely to be at once quite crowded. She has been staying with me for a short time, and I am happy to observe the effect that her prison discipline has had upon her. She speaks of her prison cell almost with affection, as a place in which she had such happy communion with God. She met with great kindness from the chaplain, the governess, and the other authorities of the prison, although of course the fare, and the accommodation, &c., of the prison were a very considerable hardship to her, physically speaking.

If through my absence on the Continent and subsequent anxiety at home any donors failed to receive an acknowledgment of their gifts, I regret it much. I believe that every farthing sent to me has been received; many small sums were anonymous, and, therefore, it was difficult for me to acknowledge them. These small sums were as much valued by Rebecca as the larger ones, as showing the sympathy of her friends of the humbler classes. Rebecca has desired that I should continue, for a time at least, to be her treasurer, and if anyone should feel inclined to continue to assist her work, I shall be glad to be responsible for such money. But at the same time I would be much obliged if friends would enclose their gifts to Mrs. Deane, 88, Cheesehill-street, Winchester, who works with me. I ask this because I may have to go abroad again.—Yours truly, JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

DEAR SIR,—I take up my pen with avidity to second much that is proposed in Mr. Meyer's letter, which appeared in your issue of the 24th. Mr. Meyer suggests that men and women emigrating should be heralds of the Gospel in all the places they settle in. Perhaps the most pertinent question to ask would be, not so much "how they can be made so," but "how is it that all who call themselves Christians are not so?" May not the answer to this latter question be found in the fact that men are first of all men of business, and then Christians? If the usual order were reversed, and men were first Christians and then men of business, the question of the evangelisation of the world would be solved. How could a man, be he what he may, go and settle in any place under the sun, and fail to take up Gospel work of some kind, if he is "filled with the Spirit?" It is impossible. The great majority of those who emigrate, do so with the definite object of improving their temporal circumstances, without any reference to their spiritual privileges or responsibilities. If some one would make it a special object to point out the vital difference there is between emigrating for self and emigrating for God, no doubt there are many who would be willing to do the latter, and then no doubt they would be made instruments for good; but this can only be if they make their arrangements fit in with God's call, instead of trying to make work for God fit in with their temporal arrangements.

It would be a grand thing to have a sort of board of advice to help those who were willing to be used in this way, to disseminate knowledge, not only of open fields ready to be occupied, but of the way by which they must, on their own responsibility, choose their location, and their date of departure, &c., guided by the Spirit, and not by temporal affairs. I would very much like to assist in the setting on foot "a confederation of self-supporting missionaries," as Mr. Meyer suggests. In order to set the ball rolling, I ask any others who would like to take up this, or some similar scheme and work it, to communicate with me; if it seems advisable we could meet, and see what is best to be done. The first thing is the suggestion: that has been made. The next is to act. Who is going to do that?—Yours faithfully,

Dashwood House, H. W. FRY.

TENT WORK IN HAMPSHIRE.

THE Evangelistic Mission erected a tent at Christchurch on June 14. The report of one of the two evangelists, at the end of the first week's services, speaks of meetings well attended, and manifest tokens of blessing vouchsafed. A letter written a week later, mentions several striking and interesting cases of conversion. On the "fair" days a good work was done amongst the gipsies and visitors.

It was intended to remove the tent to Bournemouth about the beginning of July. The director of the Mission, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, 174, Alexandra-road, St. John's-wood, N.W., will be glad of the practical fellowship of our readers.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—The following paragraph appears in Toilers of the Deep for this month:—"A most kind and valuable offer comes from Brighton. In the course of a deeply pathetic letter the writer remarks: 'My heart goes out so completely to this Mission to the fishermen, that in my little way perhaps I may instrumental in substantial help being given. I have no independent income at present, but have to work for my living. My offer is to give £10, if fifty others will give the same amount by the end of July, towards helping to clear the existing vessels from their mortgage liabilities. I have a horror of debt, and a glorious work like this Mission ought to be freed.' What do our readers say to this?" The office of the Mission is Bridge House, Queen Victoria-street, E C.

The Book World.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s half-yearly vol. of Little Folks (3s. 6d.) is a perfect storehouse of good reading and beautiful pictures. It seems to get more and more attractive and entertaining every six months.

The Contemporary Pulpit. Vol. v. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. Preachers should find a place on their shelves for this handsome volume. It contains sermons by leading pulpit lights, and valuable homiletical hints. The editing is very carefully done.

Sermons Preached in his Parish Church. By A City Curate. London Literary Society. These sermons are thoughtful and evangelical. Their principal merit is a fresh way of putting familiar truths. They are specially good when they touch practical questions.

Great Thoughts from Master Minds. Vol. v. 4s. 6d. Woodford, Fawcett & Co. Like its predecessors, it well deserves its title. The present volume is heartily commended as a good holiday companion, from which many a half-hour's instruction and entertainment may be derived.

Mr. Fisher Unwin has issued a third edition of How to be Happy, though Married (6s.), a fact which shows that it has met with general acceptance from an important section of the reading public. With a renewed demurrer to its misleading and equivocal title, we heartily commend the wise and weighty teaching it contains to all graduates or undergraduates in the most ancient school of holy matrimony.

In a recent issue we noticed a work published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., entitled "Choice Dishes at Small Cost;" by an oversight the book was referred to as "Tasty Dishes at Small Cost."

JULY MAGAZINES.

Footsteps of Truth (3d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) is a storehouse of Christian instruction and experience.

Home Evangel (1d. Alabaster, Passmore & Sons) is one of the brightest and best of our monthly visitors.

The Anti-Infidel (1d. John Snow & Co.), conducted by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, defends the truth, and attacks error.

Sunday Talk (3d. Jas. Nisbet & Co.) has a charming article on "Our Insect Enemies," and a helpful meditation on Psalm xxxvi.

The Contemporary Pulpit. 6d. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. Contains notable sermons by Dr. Vaughan and the Bishop of Derry.

The Sentinel (1d. Dyer Bros.) advocates with courage and tact the principles, and records the progress of the Social Purity movement

Young men will find much helpful counsel in The Young Men's Christian Magazine (1d. J. Menzies & Co.) and The Monthly Review (1d. Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall).

Illustrations (3d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) is admirably suited to the requirements of the age. Its letterpress is interesting, and its illustrations are numerous and choice.

The Welcome (6d. Partridge) has portraits of Oliver Wendell Holmes, Longfellow and the late Leopold von Ranke, and brief but very readable sketch of leaders of "the Irish party."

In The Quiver (6d. Cassell & Co.) the practical and the devotional are well mixed; under the former head there are excellent papers on "Work among the Highways and Hedges," and "The making of a Sunday-school teacher."

Sunday-school teachers should read carefully the notes bearing on their lessons given in The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Magazine (2d. W. M. S. S. Union) and The Sabbath-School Magazine (1d. J. McCallum & Co., Glasgow).

The Monthly Interpreter. 1s. T. & T. Clark. This magazine continues to be worthy of the name it bears; it opens up Scripture with great expository power. The article on the significance of the death of Jesus, by Professor Bruce, deserves special attention.

Cassell & Co.—Bishop Ellicott's Old Testament Commentary (7d.) carries its readers to Deut. xxxiv. Many knotty points are profitably explained. The Magazine of Art (1s.) contains engravings of Raphael's pictures of Christ on his way to Calvary. The Peoples of the World and The Countries of the World (7d. each) are as full of interest as ever, giving, both by pen and pencil, a good idea of life and scenery abroad.

In The Sunday at Home Dr. Monro Gibson writes on "Cross-bearing;" Dr. Murray Mitchell sketches the tenets of the Parsees; Mr. Benjamin Clarke has a timely notice of the "Day in the Country" movement, and Mr. Gribble tells a deplorable tale of "Slavery in the Australian Bush" The contents of The Leisure Hour are varied and pleasant reading. We are specially attracted by the first and last articles—"The every-day life of a Soldier," and "Summer Rambles in my Caravan" (Religious Tract Society. 6d. each).

We can heartily commend the following periodicals to parents anxious to get reading, both entertaining and instructive, for their children: The Child's Pictorial (2d. S. P. C. K.), The Christian Worker (1d. Cassell & Co.), The Day of Days and Home Words (1d. each. "Home Words" Office), The Boys' and Girls' Companion (1d. Church of England Sunday-school Institute), and The Child's Own Magazine (½d. Sunday-school Union).

Isbister & Co. 6d. each—Good Words has an interesting account of the great Forth Bridge now in process of erection; an illustrated paper on "The infirm children of our great cities," and a practical paper by Mr. Arnold White, on Emigration. The Sunday Magazine is an exceptionally interesting number. Miss Hopkins tells the story of the Greeley Expedition; Miss Anne Beale describes Dr. Barnardo's emigration work, and, among other good things, is a short sermon by the late Dr. Raleigh.

DEATH OF REV. J. P. CHOWN.

We regret to record the death last week, in London, of this well-known and much-esteemed Baptist pastor. For some time he has been in feeble health, having lately been compelled to resign his pastorate in Bloomsbury. He had so far recovered, however, as to be able to preach in Bloomsbury Chapel, and his death, which occurred suddenly, and during sleep, was unexpected.

Last Sunday morning there was a large congregation present at Bloomsbury Chapel, where a special sermon was preached by Rev. W. Brock, of Hampstead, commemorative of the late pastor. The preacher referred in touching language to the kindly relations that had so long existed between Mr. Chown and that congregation. His open, kindly countenance, his generous, genial disposition, cheerful and encouraging voice, ever ready counsel and unfailing sunshine of presence and manner, would be missed for many a long day. The influence for good which he wielded, not only amongst the members of his immediate pastoral charge, but throughout the entire denomination, was widespread and powerful, and it was ever his object to do good to as many as were brought within that influence, and thus to carry out the teaching and practice of his Great Master and Exemplar.

The interment took place on Monday afternoon at West Hampstead Cemetery, when a funeral service was conducted in the chapel by Rev. Samuel Green, D.D.

MESSRS. SAM JONES AND SAM SMALL have commenced an evangelistic campaign in Indianapolis.

DESICCATED SOUP.—Mr. J. Goodspeed, Provision Merchant, George-lane, Folkestone, writes to us that he has received many applications from our readers for samples of the soup slabs lately referred to in our columns; but he cannot send such samples without pre-payment, nor can he answer inquiries without stamped envelope for reply. The soup, he says, is known as "The People's Food," and it can be got in nearly every large town in England. He will send one slab post-free for 5½d.; three samples for 1s.; and an assorted packet of all the kinds for 2s. 10d.

SUNDAY LAWS IN BOSTON, U.S.—Under the Metropolitan Police Commission, says the correspondent of The Christian Standard, things are taking on the appearance of order. One week ago the barber-shops were closed. The bake-shops are ordered closed. The Hebrews of the North End are to be notified that they must close their places of business. They propose to resist on the ground that their religion does not recognise the Christian Sabbath. It is to be hoped that this effort for the suppression of Sunday traffic will result in great good to the moral, religious, and social welfare of the city.

LITTLE WOMEN.—The little quarterly paper with this title, published by Miss Headdon, in connection with her English Girls' Garten, is full of interest. Her great aim, as our readers may recollect, is to train young girls in all the arts of daily domestic life, so that they may be fitted for the positions which await them in future years. Anything that tends to improve and lend attraction to the home life of the people is a great boon to society, and Miss Headdon's scheme is worthy of all encouragement. A copy of her quarterly is sent to all subscribers of one shilling and upwards. Her address is The Villa, Bullo, Newnham-on-Severn.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH AT GRINDELWALD.—Sir,—Owing to the prolonged illness of Canon Butler, he thinks it better that the subscriptions towards defraying the debt on the church at Grindelwald should not be sent to him, but to the treasurer, Mr. F. Morshead, Southgate-street, Winchester. Rev. W. Crowdy, of Winchester, who assisted on Whitsunday the Bishop of Ripon at the opening of the church, has returned to England, and reports that there have been excellent services, a tolerably full number of communicants and good offertories each Sunday. Canon Butler hopes to be able, if not this year at some later time, to visit the church in which he has taken so deep an interest, and act as chaplain during a few weeks. George G. Butler.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on an open-air village Gospel mission in Amesbury, Derrington, Figheldean, Netheravon, Enford, Upavon, Rushall, and Woodboro', Wiltshire, from July 16 to 23.—— An aged mother asks prayer that all the members of her family may be truly converted to God.——For one who, after many deliverances and experiences of God's great mercy, is now in the "evil day," tempted to deny and doubt; that trust and peace may be restored and deliverance come.——For tent services in three villages, July 7 to August 7.

MR. JOSEPH HANNINGTON writes from Amberley, Sidcup, Kent:—I am not going, as announced in your last issue, to "the same place" where my brother, Bishop Hannington, lost his life, but to the same continent—namely, to Cape Town, South Africa, where Mrs. Osborne has carried on a very successful mission amongst soldiers, sailors, and civilians for some time past. May I ask the earnest prayers of your readers that there may be a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon these parts of the world? I should be glad if friends will send me some tracts and little books suitable for distribution among the unsaved.

BACKSLIDING.—Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, has written a booklet on this subject, entitled, "The Lost Chord Found; or, Seven Steps Back for Backsliders" (Marshall Bros. ½d., or 3s. 6d. per 100). It is full of wise and earnest counsel. Here is one of the closing paragraphs:—"A friend once told me that she had been kept from backsliding thus: She always took time at night to consider quietly, in the presence of God, where she had lost ground during the day, and if she felt that she had done so, she never slept until she had asked to be forgiven and restored. 'Tis a good expedient. Let us repair the little rift within the lute, lest by and by it spread and make our music mute, and, slowly widening, silence all."

STEPNEY MARKET MISSION.—The hall of this Mission is in Ben Jonson's-road, near the spot on which Messrs. Moody and Sankey conducted their services. The neighbourhood abounds with dock and wharf labourers, costermongers, &c., many of whom have great reason for thankfulness that this Mission has been started and continued up till the present time. Help is now urgently needed for alterations and repairs. About two hundred pounds are required to extend this good work, in carrying the Gospel from room to room, and to afford greater accommodation to the number of children who attend the ragged school. The founder and superintendent is Mr. James Taylor, 28, Cressy-place, Stepney-green, E.

FOREIGN SAILORS IN CARDIFF.—Allow me to call the attention of your readers to the good work carried on by Mr. George Lawrence and his devoted daughters amongst the foreign sailors coming to this port. The necessity has arisen to secure new premises, to which will be attached reading and missionary rooms, &c. £80 per annum is wanted. I hope your readers will help Mr. Lawrence in this work of spreading and preaching the word of God. French, German, and Spanish books, tracts, periodicals, will be thankfully received by my wife on behalf of this mission. We have here all the elements of doing a successful work. Mr. and the Misses Lawrence speak French and Spanish fluently.—Yours very faithfully,

Paul Barbier.

South Wales University College, Cardiff.

TOTTENHAM DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION.—The annual meeting of the Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institution and Training Hospital, Tottenham, was held on Saturday, July 3, in the grounds attached to the buildings at the Green, Tottenham. The proceedings were presided over by Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P. Dr. Laseron's report stated that during the year the second section of the building had been satisfactorily completed, and was already in occupation, whilst the third section was in progress. There were now fifty-seven trained nurses attached to the Institution. The number of patients received amounted to 552, a considerably larger number than in previous years, which was partly accounted for by the addition of two new cots to the children's ward. The Chairman and other friends congratulated Dr. Laseron upon the excellent work of the Institution. The new wing of the hospital, which is intended for the accommodation of private patients (on payment of proportionate fees), will be formally opened in October.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, JULY 18.—2 SAMUEL IX.

3.—The kindness of God.—I.e., "an everlasting kindness, like God's favour to his people (Rom. xi. 29)."—Sp. Com.

4.—Machir.—"David reaped the fruit of his kindness to Mephibosheth, for, when he fled from Absalom, Machir the son of Ammiel was one of those who were most liberal in providing him and his army with necessaries (xvii. 27—29)."—Idem.

General remarks.—1. "A less noble mind might have shrunk from thus keeping before the public eye, in connection with himself, the true heir of the house of Saul; especially as, though lame himself, Mephibosheth had a son who would eventually inherit whatever claims his father might be supposed to possess. But in the large heart of David there was found no room for such low suspicion and mean misgivings. God had promised to perpetuate the royal power in his house, and what had he to fear? Mephibosheth was the son of his heart's friend,—what could he suspect?"—Kitto.

2.—Here we see kindness shown for another's sake. This is the part of true greatness. Just because David was noble, his conduct seems to us to be natural. What an illustration all this is of that higher nobleness which gives a still readier and far richer friendship to those who are far more unworthy than Mephibosheth was, simply because they belong to Christ!

3.—Here we see a friendship founded on principle rather than preference, and which for that very reason, seeing that David was so strong and noble, was peculiarly firm. Its foundations were threefold: (1) David's faithfulness to covenant (1 Sam. xx. 14—17); (2) to his friendship with Jonathan; and (3) Mephibosheth's relationship to Jonathan. No mere question of unworthiness could touch these. God's friendship with the believer rests on precisely similar foundations.

MONDAY, JULY 19.—2 SAMUEL X.

2.—I will show kindness unto Hanun, &c.—"Hanun—the equivalent of the Carthaginian Hanno, from the same root as the Hebrew Hananiah, Johanan, Hannah, &c."—Sp. Com. We are not told in what way Nahash had shown David kindness. To comfort him for his father.—I.e., "to show his sympathy with him on the occasion of his father's death, and at the same time to congratulate him on his ascent to the throne."—Keil and Delitzsch.

4.—"Cutting off a person's beard is regarded by the Arab as an indignity quite equal to flogging and branding among ourselves."—Arvieux.

This chapter affords us a severe warning against the much overlooked, but great and exceedingly mischievous offence of suspiciousness. Towards Hanun David cherished kind and generous thoughts; but foolish counsellors, men who doubtless prided themselves on their acuteness, caused Hanun to suspect him of treachery, and to reward his offer of friendship with deepest insult. Readers should turn to Gen. xx., and see into what shame and sin this same readiness to see evil in others led Abraham. We all need to be very watchful against this evil, especially in reference to men with whom we differ. See Gen. xx. 11. In such cases it is often easy to suspect, while the harm done by our suspicion is incalculable. "It is our duty to believe every man to be better than we see him to be." "Charity thinketh no evil."

TUESDAY, JULY 20.—2 SAMUEL XI.

1.—They destroyed the children of Ammon.—"Instead of 'the children of Ammon,' we find (1 Chron. xx. 1) 'the country of the children of Ammon,' which explains the meaning more fully."—Keil and Delitzsch. Rabbah (the great city).—"The capital of the Ammonites was situated in a strong position about twenty-two miles east of the Jordan, on a branch of the valley of the Jabbok." David tarried still at Jerusalem.—There may have been good reason for David's waiting behind at Jerusalam, but Uriah's words (ver. 11) lead us rather to suspect that he was beginning to prefer pleasure to duty, and that we have here the first explanation of the subsequent fall.

2.—From the roof he saw a woman washing, &c.—"Bathsheba is not to be regarded as free from blame. The very act of bathing in the uncovered court of a house in the heart of the city, into which it was possible for anyone to look down from the roof of the houses on higher ground, does not say much for her feminine modesty, even if it was not done with an ulterior purpose, as some commentators suppose."—Keil.

8.—Go down to thy house.—"From the palace upon Mount Zion down to the lower city, where Uriah's house was situated."—Keil. Wash thy feet = take refreshment and rest.

9—13.—It looks as if Uriah's suspicions had been aroused. He went not down. "The providence of God is here manifest, defeating David's base contrivances, and bringing his sin to the open light. It is no less clear how mercy was at the bottom of this severity, which issued in David's deep repentance, and has also given to the Church one of the most solemn and searching warnings as to the evil of sin which is contained in the whole Bible."—Sp. Com.

14—27.—"We may see from this how deep a soul may fall, when it turns away from God and from the guidance of his grace. This David, who in the days of his persecution would not even resort to means that were really plausible in order to defend himself, was not now ashamed to resort to the greatest crime in order to cover his sin. O God! how great is our strength when we lay firm hold of Thee! And how weak we become as soon as we turn away from Thee! The greatest saints would be ready for the worst of deeds, if Thou shouldst but leave them for a single moment."—Keil and Delitzsch. "How can we presume of not sinning, or despair for sinning, when we find so great a saint thus fallen, thus risen?"—Bishop Hall. Lust beareth sin, and sin death.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 21.—2 SAMUEL XII.

7.—Thou art the man.—"Nathan could not tell but that his honest, plain-spoken rebuke would bring upon him the same fate as that of Uriah. His example is especially to be noted by all whose office binds them to rebuke with all authority."—Sp Com.

11.—I will take thy wives, &c.—"Having become the man of blood, of blood he was to drink deep; and having become the man of lust, by that baneful passion in others he was himself to be scourged for ever."—Blunt.

26—31.—"These cruel punishments must be judged according to the standard of the age in which they were inflicted. The Ammonites were evidently a savage and brutal nation (1 Sam. xi. 1, 2; 2 Sam. x. 1—5; Amos i. 13), and in all probability they were treated no worse than they were accustomed to treat others. It was the age of retaliation."—Camb. Bible. "We are not competent to pass judgment in this matter, until we have carefully considered whether, considering the times in which David lived, the character of the enemy, and of the proof they had given of the atrocities to which their malignant disposition against the Israelites would have carried them had they been victorious, he was not justified by the public opinion of his own time. . . . We call Titus just and humane, and yet he at Jerusalem crucified his prisoners around the city until crosses enough could not be found."—Kitto.

General remarks.—(1) The merciless selfishness of David's sin is the chief point emphasised. The cruel robbery of a poor man's treasure is shown to be peculiarly hateful to the God who loves justice and mercy. We wound God when we wrong our fellows. (2) Although his sin was so awful in its proportions, and so distinct in outline, David for a whole year was quite unable to estimate it. Even now he could see it only when set before him in parable, and as the sin of some other man. To such an extent did self-love blind him. And if David, why not ourselves? It becomes every wise reader of this story to be profoundly suspicious of those comfortable estimates of himself which are so natural that they often pass unchallenged. "Search me, O God, and know my heart," &c.

THURSDAY, JULY 22.—2 SAMUEL XIII.

"The judgments threatened to King David in consequence of his sin with Bath-sheba soon began to fall upon him and upon his house, and were brought about by sins and crimes on the part of his own sons, for which David was himself to blame, partly because of his own indulgence and want of discipline, and partly because of the bad example that he had set them. Having grown up without strict paternal discipline, simply under the care of their different mothers, who were jealous of one another, his sons fancied that they might gratify their own fleshly lusts, and carry out their own ambitious plans; and from this there arose a series of crimes which nearly cost the King his life and throne."—Keil and Delitzsch.

13.—Speak unto the king, &c.—It cannot be inferred with certainty from this, that marriages were usual among half-brothers and sisters in the time of David. The Levitical law forbade them (Lev. xviii. 9), and Tamar may have merely wished to temporise. On the other hand, the debasing and unhumanising institution of the harem, itself contrary to the law of Moses (Deut. xvii. 17), may well have led to other deviations from its precepts."—Sp. Com.

15.—Hated her exceedingly.—"It is characteristic of human nature to hate one whom you have injured."—Tacitus.

25. Lest we be chargeable unto thee.—"The first instance history offers of the ruinous cost of royal visits to those who are honoured with them."—Kitto.

FRIDAY, JULY 23.—2 SAMUEL XIV.

1.—The King's heart went towards Absalom.—"The peculiarly affectionate temperament of David rendered him incapable of fully enjoying life without some special object on whom to bestow the utmost tenderness of his love. Hence we always find someone in the enjoyment of his special favour and regard throughout his whole career. It is now Absalom. . . . He longed to have the young man back, but on many grounds feared to call him home."—Kitto.

2.—Tekoah.—In the south of Judah, not far from Bethlehem. The prophet Amos was "among the herdmen of Tekoah" (Amos. i. 1).

14.—For we must needs die, &c.—Our readers will note the great force and beauty of this simile. The whole verse is thus paraphrased by "Speaker's Commentary": "If you, O King, have done right in passing a sentence of absolution in favour of my son, and condemning my relations who seek his death, how is it that you harbour such a purpose of vengeance against Absalom as to keep him, one of God's people, an outcast in a heathen country, far from the worship of the God of Israel? Surely upon your own showing you are guilty of a great fault in not allowing Absalom to return."

24.—Let him not see my face.—David seems to have erred greatly from weakness. This partial forgiveness was a terrible mistake. He should either have kept him as an exile or have forgiven him altogether. David is not the first nor the last that has made this mistake. "That Absalom was not admitted into David's presence was a sign well understood that he was still under disgrace. It compelled him to live as a private person, and to lead a retired life; for it would have been scandalous for him to appear in public, or to assume any state, until he had appeared at court. The courtiers were also constrained to avoid him."—Kitto.

32.—Let me see the King's face.—Precious words, when taken from their original connection and used as the expression of a soul that thirsts for God, the living God!

SATURDAY, JULY 24.—2 SAMUEL XV.

1.—Chariots and horses, &c.—"David had been content to go abroad on his royal mule, but the prince now astonished Jerusalem by the novelty of chariots and horses, which had hitherto been seen only in his father's triumphal procession, after his victories."—Geikie.

2.—The way of the gate—I.e., the way leading to the gate of the palace where the King heard causes (see xix. 8, and Ruth iv. 1). "From this practice the Sultan's government is still popularly called in Turkey 'the Sultan's gate.'" Hence the title, "The Sublime Porte," which is the French equivalent for a Turkish word meaning, "the high gate," the name given to the principal gate of the Sultan's palace.

3—6.—"Speaking freely to all, assuring everyone that his case was undoubtedly good; regretting that the King had appointed no deputy so as to expedite settlement; hinting at the different state of things there would be if he were made the chief judge; and in all ways assuming the air of easy good fellowship and sympathy, he won himself high favour. It was usual to approach the King or anyone of high rank with a lowly prostration, but this Absalom would not permit; raising such as proffered 'obeisance,' he would embrace and kiss them."—Geikie.

7.—After forty years.—A clerical error for four years.

23.—The king also himself passed over the brook Kidron.—So nearly 1000 years later David's greater Son, the true King of Israel, rejected as David was, trod the self-same via dolorosa. "He went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron" (John xviii. 1). The whole of this experience of David was anticipative of that of the Lord Jesus.

30.—David went up by the ascent, &c.—"No more striking picture of a great man in adversity was ever drawn than these simple words portray." . . . "David is always great in affliction. His soul is prospering largely amid these circumstances of mental trial and personal suffering."—Kitto.

Forthcoming Meetings.

EVANGELISTIC.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Apply Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

Mission and other Appeals.

WORK IN MADEIRA.—A sale of work and other useful articles will be held in December next in aid of free meals for the children attending Mrs. W. Smart's Portuguese Mission School, Funchal, Madeira. Christian friends are invited to send parcels to Miss NEWTON, 16, Sinclair-road, Kensington, London, who will convey them to Madeira in October. Miss Newton will gladly give information about Mr. and Mrs. W. Smart's Mission work in Maderia.

HOUSE OF REST.—Miss MASON, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N W., writes: I want £475 to make up the last instalment for the purchase of the Seaside House of Rest, Eastbourne. Will your readers help me?

PORTSMOUTH RESCUE ASSOCIATION—This association, composed of Christians of different denominations, has been in existence about four months, during which time between thirty and forty girls have been rescued. Some have been restored to their friends, and others have been sent to larger homes. Our efforts are, however, impeded through want of funds. Communications should be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. J. CABALL, High-street, Portsmouth.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, July 10, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan & Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

S. A. BLACKWOOD'S ADDRESSES

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

THE SERVICE OF CHRIST.

"I am to serve Him in my daily calling; as much in my house or at my business as anywhere else." Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

THE JUDGMENT-SEAT OF CHRIST.

"We must all appear before the Judgment-seat of Christ."—2 Cor. v. 10.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER.

"Christ, the Lamb of God, hath 'suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, and that whosoever believeth in Him shall not come into condemnation.' 'Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us.'"—Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

ASSURANCE OF SALVATION.

"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life."—John v. 13.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

GOD'S COMMAND.

"God commands you to repent lest you perish; lest you sink into the bottomless pit when Jesus comes; lest you be for ever banished from the presence."—Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

FORGIVENESS OF SINS.

"I know that many will tell you that it is presumption to say you know that you are forgiven; but they know not of what they speak. Presumption lies, not in believing, but in doubting what God hath said." Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

LIVING WATERS.

"If you want satisfaction, it is not to be obtained by drinking at an earthly cup, which is soon emptied, but by receiving the Spirit, by drinking the Living Water." Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

CHRIST AND THE MAN IN THE TOMBS.

"Here is a picture of a man under the power of Satan, living among tombs, loving the dead more than the living, and that is where the unconverted man and woman is—living with those who are 'dead in trespasses and sins.'"—Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

ALIVE FROM THE DEAD.

"JESUS cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. The voice sounded down into the deepest recesses of the grave, 'and he that was dead came forth.'"—Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s per dozen, post free.

ETERNAL LIFE.

"Now, whoever you may be that are reading these pages, let me again ask you most solemnly, as before God, who trieth the hearts, Have you eternal life?" Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

THE MERITS OF JESUS CHRIST.

"It will be my object in this little book to show briefly, from Scriptural evidence, first, what our own merits are; then, what the merits of our Lord Jesus Christ are; and lastly, what is the result of really trusting in those merits."—Extract.

Tinted Covers, 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free.

REPENT AND BE CONVERTED.

"Perhaps there are those who say, 'What has this to do with me?' I desire to tell you this day from God—that you are guilty of the very crime that Peter charged on the consciences of the Jews."—Extract.

The above 12 Books may be had in neat packet, price One Shilling.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

By Rev. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

James Scott: A Labourer for God.

BY REV. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.,
Author of "Memoir of R. M. M'Cheyne," &c., &c.

"We wish all young men would read this brief memoir."—Baptist Magazine.

"This book will be read with interest and profit; and its perusal will stimulate others to follow the example of this devoted servant of the Lord." Methodist Times.

"Whatever falls from Dr. Bonar's pen has grace and spiritual power in it. This book is largely a record of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work in Glasgow, and of the earnest way in which it was taken up and carried on by Mr. Scott, whom the Evangelistic Association appointed Superintendent of the work on Mr. Moody's departure. Scott died at the age of thirty-eight, and his funeral was attended by about six thousand persons."—Sword and Trowel, Feb., 1886.

Tinted covers, 4d.; Cloth, 6d. (Either sent post free.)
"Heaven is nearer, Christ is dearer."

From Strength to Strength.

FOUR ADDRESSES TO YOUNG BELIEVERS.

BY REV. A. A. BONAR, D.D.

I.—THE SINNER'S WAY INTO COMMUNION WITH GOD.
II.—COMMUNION WITH GOD.
III.—JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA CONFESSING CHRIST.
IV.—CHRISTIAN GROWTH.

These four Addresses were given in succession, with the special object of encouraging and helping young converts during the awakening under Mr. Moody in Glasgow.

"These Addresses are very excellent: stimulating as well as instructive."—Evangelical Churchman.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

PRESS TESTIMONIALS.

"We give it a hearty welcome. Anything that will stimulate the instructors of our young people to greater freshness and force in their teaching, as this volume is well fitted to do, is to be hailed with great satisfaction."—Nonconformist.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of Salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book; and helpful to the teacher of the infant—as well as the teacher of the Bible-class." Baptist Messenger.

"Teachers and preachers who cannot derive assistance of a suggestive and valuable character from this little work, must be exceptionally dull and incompetent."—Christian World.

"We do not hesitate to affirm that the very best Sunday-school worker in this country may learn much from this book. It deals with the nature, essentials, elements, and methods, of the teaching process; and also with the Sunday-school teacher's other work than teaching—the shaping and guidance of his scholars. . . . Many of the hints given, and methods suggested, will be of great value." Methodist Times.

"There is a freshness and variety on every page most enlivening and instructive. . . . We cordially recommend all who have to train children to give the book a candid perusal; and we promise that they will be the better for it." Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"The manner of teaching is delightfully simple; and the book is a valuable one."—Footsteps of Truth.

ETERNAL LIFE:
Where to Find it,
AND
How to Obtain it.
BY HERMANN LIEBSTEIN.

"Now what was true with reference to the ancient people is true with reference to us. What we need is just the same as that which they needed—life; and the fountain where alone we can find life now, is just the very same which nearly three thousand years ago was pointed out by Amos to Israel—JEHOVAH. EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE (Marked thus*).

The Irish Evangelization Society has had very great blessing in its work. It has pleased God to use their Evangelists in the proclamation of the Gospel to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of, and be invited to aid more largely in this work.

EVANGELISTS.

The Evangelists of this Society may belong, as individuals, to many denominations, but as its Evangelists they represent none. They go out for this Society, not as members of any particular body of Christians, and without in any way taking part, publicly or privately, in questions relating to denominational differences, but only as Evangelists, to preach the glorious Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners, in its fulness and freeness, and to seek, under the constraining power of the love of Christ, to win souls to Him.

The Evangelists sent out by the Society are always anxious to co-operate heartily with the godly ministers of any locality in which they are called to labour.

MEETINGS.

The Society is prepared to receive applications for Evangelistic meetings, in any locality from clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.

The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and Christians are invited to share the privilege of this work for Christ. Those who are disposed to help are requested to do so at once. Contributions will be received by this paper, by the Hon. Sec., or by the Treasurer.

PAST WORK.

The Report of the year 1885 can be had upon application to the Hon. Sec., and will repay perusal.

JAMES BARTON, Hon. Sec., Dundalk.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—Capt. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of The Christian, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED in 1844.

THE Committee very earnestly appeal for greatly needed help in Annual Subscriptions, Donations, and Offertories to maintain their present large staff of earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers engaged under the directions and superintendence of the Parochial Clergy, in visiting the poor, the sick, the ignorant, and the erring; and who help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Some grants have been withdrawn and others are in jeopardy for lack of funds.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. Earl of Aberdeen.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by John Kirk, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND,

ESTABLISHED 1822.

President:
His Grace Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin.
Offices:—27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin;
AND
9, Paternoster-row, London.

Full particulars, Reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary,
Captain JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH AND SCHOOL,

James Street, Oxford Street, London, W.

President—F. A. BEVAN, ESQ. | Treasurer—GEORGE HANBURY, ESQ.

Gospel Services, attended by about 500 of the Homeless Poor, are held on Sundays, at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., after which each person present is supplied with Bread and Coffee. About £2 each Sunday are required for the Food alone, and there are other heavy expenses connected with the Work of the Church and Schools. Funds are Urgently Needed, and will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, 21, Portman-square, W.; Mr. Philip Gough, 33, Cambridge-street, Hyde-park, W. Mr. A. G. Fraser, 4, Inverness-terrace W.; or by Messrs Morgan & Scott.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every Fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, Queen Victoria-st. (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

Principal Sir WILLIAM MUIR said at a Meeting in London last year: "I do not know any Society that does so much good for so little money." The late Rev. Dr. DUFF said: "The object of this Society is second to none in a Christian point of view." Mr. SPURGEON wishes it "growing success, and greatly appreciates its objects and methods." Dr. HORATIUS BONAR desires "to see it more widely sympathised with."

⁂ Funds urgently required to extend the work on Railways, and among Planters, &c. Contributions may be sent to the Secretary, the Rev. John Fordyce, 33, Sutherland-place, Bayswater, W.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL (Instituted May 10, 1758), Maitland-park, Hornsey-rise; and Margate, Kent. 600 Orphan Children, from infancy to 16 years of age, are now maintained and cared for by this National Charity. Founded over a century and a quarter ago. More than 4000 have been benefited. President, H.R.H. the Duke of CAMBRIDGE, K.G. Treasurer, Sir William McArthur, K.C.M.G. Sub-Treasurer, William Holt, Esq., V.P. TEN GIRLS and TWENTY-THREE BOYS will be ELECTED at the 256th Half-Yearly election to be held at Cannon-street Hotel on WEDNESDAY, July 28, 1886. Poll open from 12 to 2 o'clock. Contributions are earnestly solicited, and will be gratefully received, to enable the Committee to provide for the large number now under their care.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT

AND HIS WORK.

A descriptive account of the remarkable work of Faith Healing carried on first at Möttlingen and subsequently at Bad Boll. By Rev. W. Guest. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. Blumhardt. With Portrait.

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships, and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of Life and Truth which it leaves for after years to solve; and certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little Colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old Pastor, whose life-work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of Prayer.

"The good Pastor himself, alas! since these words were first transcribed from my note-book, has been taken to his rest. He was a remarkable man, and leaves a work behind him too remarkable to cease. And though the visitor now will miss the characteristic figure, he will find there the same spirit and faith."

NEW WORK ON CONSUMPTION
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Seventeenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
PHTHISIS—CASE near SHEFFIELD.

(This patient, writing me March 17, says:—"In publishing my case, please do not give my name in full; but if anyone should write to inquire of me, you may give it privately, and I shall be glad to confirm it.")

Mr. J. T. P. visited Coombe Lodge June 14 (year before last). Several of the family had died of Consumption. He had been ailing for several years. For six months cough had been severe. There was pain in the right side; breathing short; loss of flesh and strength. Examined by Dr. Brown: "Upper lobe of right lung diseased."

Letters followed about every month, for about twelve months, reporting gradual improvement.

I received a letter, dated March 17, of this year, in which he says: "I esteem it my bounden duty to write you as to the beneficial results of a diligent use of your medicine and advice. I am sincerely grateful to Almighty God that my attention was directed to your treatment, which has been so blessed by Him, that I am now better than I ever was before; all my symptoms are gone, and there has been a complete cure. I am now engaged as Scripture-reader. My humble prayer is that your labours may be still abundantly blessed."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Revised and Enlarged. Post Free, Twelve Stamps.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS

With Twelve full-page Illustrations and Steel-plate Frontispiece.

Handsomely bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

By John Foxe.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"An excellent edition of this famous work."
Footsteps of Truth.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book."
Christian Leader.

"We most heartily recommend the new edition of Foxe's famous work. It is a wonderful compilation."
Protestant Standard.

"As a complete edition of 'Foxe's Martyrs' this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know."
Primitive Methodist.

Rome, The Murderess.

A Four-page Tractate suited for general distribution.

This Tractate affords new and powerful evidence of the unalterable character of the Church of Rome. The quotations prove that Romanists are as cruel, persecuting, and blood-thirsty as of olden time.

Twenty-fifth Thousand. Tinted cover, 3d.

POPERY AND PROTESTANTISM

Brought to the test of God's Holy Word, in the form of

A CATECHISM

BY

Rev. THOMAS PHILLIPS.

"Sets forth the distinguishing features of the two forms of faith in a manner at once simple, lucid, and comprehensive. The conclusion in every case is condemnatory of the Creed of Rome."
The Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald.

FIFTH EDITION.

With Frontispiece. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE of Roman Catholicism:
WITH INCIDENTS OF CONVENT LIFE.
By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

Author of "The Veil Lifted."

With an Introduction by Rev. Charles B. Tayler, M.A.

"Comment is unnecessary; and we have only to express our satisfaction that this record of personal experience of Romanism should have reached a Third Edition; and also the hope that its perusal may be of use to those who by the practice of extreme Ritualism, are seeking an alliance with that proud Church, which scorns their advances, and will only accept their submission.—The Record.

MRS. ISABEL REANEY.

NOT many words are needed to secure from our readers a welcome greeting for the portrait which appears on our front page of this week's issue. Mrs. Reaney, well-known as the wife of the esteemed pastor of the Stepney Meeting Congregational Church, is the daughter of Mr. Robert Edis, a gentleman well known in Huntingdon on account of his literary pursuits. Like many persons, the beginning of whose religious life is traceable to their early years, Mrs. Reaney does not profess to be able to point to any particular date as the exact period of her conversion. As in nearly all such cases, the processes of life and of spiritual change seem to have gone on together, and the heart was being drawn to God before it could define its own experiences.

This, however, does not always secure immunity from the exacting scrutiny of those who are unable to give recognition to conversion, unless it be verified by the regular sequence of a train of "experiences," and Isabel Edis did not escape this kind of scrutiny. She says, in the introduction to her well-known book, "Our Daughters," "When I was quite a little girl, a young, earnest-minded woman, seizing the opportunity of a moment alone with me, put to me the startling question, 'What do you think your heart is like in God's sight?' I had not a word to say for myself. I stood speechless, while she continued warmly, 'Ah, my poor child, you are not converted, or you would know directly that in God's sight your heart is full of evil imaginations, and desperately wicked.' 'Well,' I thought to myself, 'perhaps it is all quite true, but have I not longed to be made good; have I not prayed for a clean heart; and has not God blessed me in giving me sweet thoughts of Himself, and of his love; and does He not know and see all this?' Tears choked my utterance when I would have spoken. My earnest friend continued somewhat sternly, 'Ah, I am afraid you are very hard and impenitent. Pray that God will soften your heart, and take away your stubbornness and pride!'"

(From Photograph by Mr. Vanderweyde.)

This was strong, if not judicious, treatment of a young disciple, whose spirit was being graciously drawn toward the light, which, come how it may, comes nowhere but from God.

Soon after this, the development of Mrs. Reaney's religious life took the form of work; and as it is to this period she traces the foundation of all her labours since, the incidents in which they originated become intensely interesting. It should be stated that the whole of Mrs. Reaney's family at this period were staunch adherents of the Established Church. At the time now referred to, it was the practice of Mrs. Reaney's parents to receive into their household on Sundays an elderly woman who had been a servant in the family a generation back. The children used to take dessert from the family table to this old lady in the kitchen, and afterwards take turn in reading to her the Gospel, the Epistle, and the Collect for the day. As time went on the old lady became too infirm to come to the house, and it then fell to the lot of Isabel to visit her at her own cottage, and there perform similar services.

By and by what was intended as a purely personal service attracted other members of the family of the old servant, and this informal gathering became the nucleus of a cottage meeting. As years went on the cottage became crowded to its utmost capacity with eager and earnest participants in the reading of the Word and devotion; but at this point both official and friendly zeal interposed obstacles, and the girl teacher, still only in her teens, seemed likely to be overborne, and the work in danger of being stopped.

First came the family doctor. The crowded cottage, with its low ceiling and imperfect ventilation, would certainly impair the young teacher's health. Most likely the doctor was right, but the work, nevertheless, was not to stop, and the doctor himself was pressed into the service. By his help the use of a large class-room was obtained from the Congregationalists, and on a Sunday afternoon soon after the crowd of grown-up scholars, too large for the cottage to contain, without bonnets or shawls, or any change of gear, women and men, like big children, followed their young captain from the cottage to this new place of meeting. Here the simple, conversational attitude hitherto adopted became, with an auditory greatly increased in numbers by outsiders, inconvenient; and thus the girl teacher became a public speaker and preacher—the meeting becoming so large in course of time that it had to be transferred to a public hall.

Here occurred a more formidable interposition than that of the doctor. The bishop of the diocese now intervened, with an authoritative criticism upon the nature of the work, which was, he said, "disturbing the regular order of the Church." Mrs. Reaney's reply to his lordship had in it a characteristic directness, which, perhaps in the case of private intercourse is not so easily recognised as in her public speaking. She said, "I have an authority higher than that of bishops or archbishops, and that being so, speak I must. But if I am likely to injure the Church, I will quietly withdraw from it." The first part of this reply sounds much like one made to ecclesiastical authority more than 1800 years ago, and, like that, it was effective. The bishop rejoined, "If I may be satisfied that your conviction is that of a woman, and not the transient feelings of a girl, go on, and God bless you!"

Mrs. Reaney's part in these labours was sometimes interrupted by ill health, but they were never relinquished until her marriage, and then only to be resumed in other spheres.

Mr. Reaney being a native of the same town with his wife's family, it is not surprising that the young aspirant to the Christian ministry should have turned his attention in the direction of the girl preacher, and it was during his pastorate at Warrington that Isabel Edis became his wife. Here, and subsequently at Reading, Mrs. Reaney's labours amongst the poor were continued. At Warrington, no less than 2000 working men, with their families, during four years, attended her Sunday afternoon services. Amongst the puddlers in the iron works, and other working men, she found a warm and constant welcome. She says, "If I had gone amongst them with a preachy-preachy attitude, they would have had no intercourse with me. But the simple attitude of friendship, and a manifest interest in their welfare, never failed to win their affection."

The same work has now been carried on for the last four years in the densest part of the East of London. Any of our readers who have not seen one of Mrs. Reaney's Sunday afternoon services would do well to go to Stepney for once, at least, and see it. As the preacher comes into view they will see a pale face, with no "preachy-preachy" aspect; no official garb to distinguish the preacher from any other well-dressed middle-class lady; no affectation of special sanctity; but unadorned simplicity, looking down at a sea of upturned faces, and speaking with the warm fervour of a loving woman's heart to the hearts that are throbbing beneath.

Mrs. Reaney's labours are not confined to preaching. She has established, chiefly by her personal exertions, a convalescent home at Folkestone, where in the last two years and a half 800 patients have been nursed into perfect health and restored to their homes to begin the work of life afresh. In addition to this, Mrs. Reaney is now engaged in the establishment of a "Rescue Home," where cases of incidental distress, individuals or families overwhelmed by unavoidable calamity, will find temporary refuge and sustenance until permanent or substantial relief can be obtained. This establishment will be opened in the ensuing autumn.

As a writer Mrs. Reaney is well known to a very large circle of readers. The complete list of her works is too long for insertion here, but among the chief of them may be mentioned, "Just in Time; or, Howard Clarion's Rescue;" "Daisy Snowflake's Secret;" "Our Brothers and Sons;" "Our Daughters;" "The Story of Our Tramcar Men," &c. &c. The stand which she recently made between the toil-driven tramcar men and their employers, if fame were coveted by Mrs. Reaney, would have been sufficient to make her famous. More grateful to her heart will be the invocation, breathed in the days which have recently passed, by many a humble wife and mother, and in which we unite with them in the words, before quoted, of the good Bishop of Ely: "Go on, and God bless you."

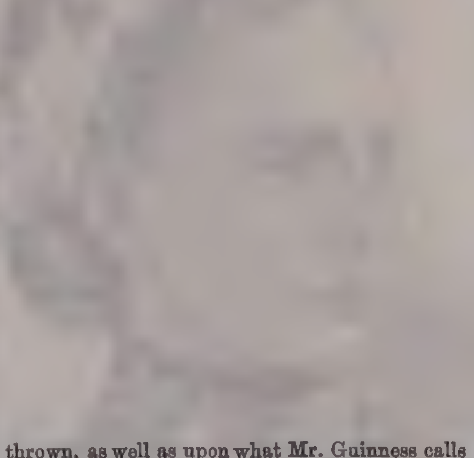
MR. GRATTAN GUINNESS'S NEW BOOK.*

I.

This is another deeply interesting book from the united pens of Mr. and Mrs. Guinness, whose former work, "The Approaching End of the Age," has already, in its eighth year, reached a tenth edition. It is a book more likely to be popular with the general reader than the former one, as there are fewer of those formidable calculations, arithmetical and astronomical, less about "cycles" and "epacts," which were apt to frighten the ordinary student of prophecy; while the subject chiefly considered is the historic fulfilment of the events marking the rise, progress, and consummation of the great prophetic period of "seven times," which, it is intimated in Daniel iv., is to constitute "the times of the Gentiles," or the period during which Israel should be under Gentile dominion. Upon the opening and closing dates of this great period of 2520 years, much light is thrown, as well as upon what Mr. Guinness calls "the bisection æra," or the time from A.D. 533 to 663, within which occur all the most remarkable starting-points of the two great apostate powers of Romanism and Mohammedanism, which for the latter half of this great week of years—that is for 1260 years—have been the bane and scourge of western and eastern Christendom, fulfilling in fact what was written of them in Daniel vii. and viii., as the "little horn" of these chapters respectively.



One of the most interesting points, which it is not too much to say is proved to demonstration in this work, is that what is called "the year-day theory," or the use of days in prophetic symbolism to express years, is in fact not a mere "theory," but a well-established Scripture principle of interpretation. The nature of this proof is the following. Once let the mystical character of Nebuchadnezzar's madness or bestial condition be recognised (and there are few prophetic writers who question this), and then "the seven times" which were to pass over him, whilst fulfilled in his experience no doubt as years, become symbolical of "the times of the Gentiles," during which Gentile power is to be permitted to take the place in the earth which Israel's unfaithfulness had forfeited. Hence in Daniel vii. the four great powers which are successively to arise are depicted as "beasts," and their power is alone brought to an end by the coming of "the Son of Man." Now this whole period of "seven times," if reckoned from Nebuchadnezzar's invasion of Judea (B.C. 606) to the present time, has already reached nearly 2500 years, and in twenty more years the 2520 years (or seven times 360 years) will be complete, which makes up the whole period reckoned from that date.

One principle for which Mr. Guinness contends is that the prophetic periods are to be reckoned from æras rather than from single dates. Thus the captivity æra (B.C. 721—536) presents four or five or more starting-points, and corresponding to these, especially when taken in the different measures of solar, lunar, and calendar time, are a series of most interesting closing dates from the French Revolution onwards, some as yet future. The remarkable coincidences between the character of the events connected with these closing dates, and the starting-points from which they are reckoned is one of the most interesting features of this book. Seven times do we meet with the half of this long prophetic period spoken of as "time, times, and a half," "forty and two months," and "1260 days," and it is evident that these designations refer to the same period, and that the latter half. The designation most frequently used is that of "time, times, and a half," which occurs three times (Daniel vii. 25, xii. 7, and Rev. xii. 14). Now, if "the seven times" of Dan. iv. 23, 25, 32, be mystical as well as literal, then it follows that the half of this period must be so too, and this book adduces abundant confirmation that so it is, from the striking historical events connected with the opening and close of this mystic period, reckoned not only from different commencing dates, as in the well-known case of the seventy years captivity, but also measured differently by solar, lunar, and calendar time.

The closing chapters on the Millennium and the post-millennial state are most interesting, especially that one in which he challenges the post-Millennial Advent views, of which "our venerable and valued friend, Dr. David Brown, of Aberdeen, is the recognised champion." Seldom has the overwhelming Scripture evidence for "pre" and opposed to "post" Millennial Advent views been better put, and we trust one result of this able book, which well deserves its name—"Light for the Last Days"—will be to lead many teachers, who have hitherto held the popular views which post-date Christ's coming to the end of the thousand years, to "reconsider their position." We would thoroughly endorse the temperate appeal which Mr. Guinness makes to such, in words with which we close this notice:—

"The thought of the coming of the Lord is employed in the New Testament to enforce every exhortation, to strengthen every appeal, to confirm every argument; and it is evident that the Church was designed to be kept in a state of constant watching and waiting for his appearing. But if a thousand years, even of Millennial blessedness, is clearly revealed to intervene between us and our hope, its practical power is destroyed. So serious and so evil are the results of severing the coming of the kingdom from the coming of the King, that we cannot close without earnestly urging those who still adhere to post-Millennial views to reconsider their position. It were greatly to be desired that in these last days broad differences of position as to the meaning of Scripture prophecy, and especially this fundamental difference, should cease to exist; that, at any rate, in so simple a question as the chronological relation of the kingdom of God on earth to the second advent of Christ from heaven, unanimity should be attained by the study of Scripture, so that a clear and harmonious testimony might be borne by the Church to the world as to the doom lying before it.

* Light for the Last Days: a Study Historic and Prophetic. By Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness. Hodder & Stoughton. 12s.

"What is and must be the effect on the ungodly of the discordant and contradictory witness on this subject at present borne by the Church? One section of interpreters assure them that peace and safety, prosperity and blessing, lie ahead, and that a thousand years and more will elapse ere any crisis of judgment, or of supernatural intervention in human affairs need be apprehended; while others warn them with all earnestness that the days in which we live are like the days of Noah and the days of Lot, days immediately preceding a tremendous crisis of judgment. The one testimony is so completely weakened by the other, that neither is practically believed.

"The wicked not unnaturally think that no real revelation on the subject exists, as revelation could not be self-contradictory. What, on the other hand, might not be the blessed effect, if week by week, from every pulpit in this and other lands, the Church, with one heart and one voice, were exhorting men to prepare for the inevitable, and warning them that the sure word of prophecy leaves no room to doubt, not only that the kingdom of God is at hand, but that it will be introduced by the second coming of Christ, 'to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him!'"

II.

This book is of very high value to the Church of God, and a worthy successor to the author's "Approaching End of the Age," which has been pronounced by competent judges the most valuable work on Prophecy published since Elliott's "Horæ." Its title, if it seem assumptious, is well justified by its matter; for the work is a flood of Light, shed on God's dealings, from the beginning of time, but exclusively illuminating the very time in which we live,—"the Time of the End" (Dan. xii. 3, 4, 9, 10); when, as had been promised, the wise should understand what had been hitherto sealed.

God has long had the title of "Wonderful Numberer" (Dan. viii. 13, marg.). The grand prophetic periods, 2520 years (of Gentile dominion), 1260 years (of Papal dominion), 2300 years (of the Sanctuary down-treading), and 1040 years (the difference of these latter two), are soli-lunar Cycles; or grand periods when the motions of the sun and moon are brought into harmony, without remainders. Such Cycles, of great importance to scientific chronology, are very rare, and very difficult to find; and the discovery of these by M. Cheseaux, in 1754, has been considered an impregnable proof of the Divine ordination of these prophetic numbers; and therefore of the Book of Daniel, in which they were announced. The fact proves also, undeniably, the computation of the symbolic numbers in the ratio of Ezek. iv., "Each day for a year;" and accordingly the authors have here assumed the Presentist interpretation, as beyond dispute; notwithstanding Futurist anticipations, which are, and must be from the very nature of things, mere guesses.

In the computation of time different scales have been, and are still, in current use. We use a year of 365 days, adding an intercalary day every fourth year; the Mohammedans a year of twelve lunations, with no attempt to harmonise the seasons; the Hebrews, a year of twelve lunations, with an intercalary month (Veadar) every second or third year. Both of these forms, the solar and the lunar, appear to have entered into the Divine dates; and the uncertainty, as to which form is employed in any individual case, seems (like the use of a day as the symbol of a year) to have been intended for the "sealing" by which the wisdom of God concealed unprofitable knowledge, till the Church was ripe for it. Mr. Guinness uses both.

Another notable aid to the solution of these grand problems lies in recognising that great historic eras are to be counted not only from and to dates, but from and to groups of dates. Thus the Exodus of Israel might be dated from the birth of Moses, from his flight into Midian, from his first interview with Pharaoh, from the Passover, from the Crossing of Jordan;—a series of events which covers 120 years. The First Advent of our Lord might be reckoned at the Annunciation, at his Birth, at his Ministry, at his Death, at his Ascension;—a series covering about 36 years. In both these examples, however, there are one or two dates that stand out more salient than the rest; and this is usual. Now, in counting the great period of SEVEN TIMES, or 7 years of years = 2520 years of Gentile Dominion and Israelite Bondage, we may begin with the rise of Babylon's power, = the Era of Nabonassar, fixed by unerring astronomy to the 26th of Feb. 747 B.C. Or, with intervening dates of high importance, we may select the year 587 B C, when Nebuchadnezzar burned the Temple, and desolated Jerusalem; covering 160 years.

Yet these expanded termini do not preclude precision. At the termination of the 430 years of the predicted affliction of the seed of Abram (comp. Gen. xv. 13—16; Gal. iii. 17; Exod. xii. 40, 51) it is emphatically said, "the selfsame day it came to pass." So we beseech the reader to solemnly consider this:—from Feb. 26, 747 B.C., the rise of Babylon, to the final fall of the pagan Roman Empire under Romulus Augustulus, Aug. 22, 476 A.D., are 1260 lunar years, to a day (the selfsame day it came to pass)! Nor is this a day of slight importance with God. It is the day of the cessation of the Imperial power at Rome; and so the day of the "taking out of the way of him that letteth" of 2 Thess. ii. 6, 7, to clear the way for the manifestation of the Man of Sin; as the early Fathers knew, and as Paul says the Thessalonians knew.

And this leads our authors to treat of the Bisection Era of the Seven Times. For there now rose, gradually and by successive stages, to a grinding tyranny over the professing Church, the Papacy in the Western, and Mohammedanism in the Eastern Empire. These rose at the same time and they are to fall together. They have been hateful and unpleasant in their lives, and in their death they shall not be divided.

What then of the Close of the Seven Times? When the Stone falls on the great glittering Image of Babylonian power (Dan. ii. 34, 35; Matt. xxi. 44), and grinds it to powder? When "to the Daughter of Zion shall come the kingdom, even the first dominion" (Mic. iv. 8)? Without minute particularity, a child can in a moment see that twenty-five centuries have passed since Nebuchadnezzar was the Head of gold of the Gentile Image; and that twelve centuries and a half have passed since the rise of the Papal and Mohammedan Apostasies, in the first third of the seventh century.

Concerning the striking and solemnising historic facts and dates of the latter half of the Gentile Period, we commend our readers to this weighty labour of sanctified science. Especially to the very marked breaking-up of the haughty antichristian dominion of both Islam and Popery, in striking parallelism, since the beginning of the eighteenth, and particularly during the present century.

The Church is awakening to her "blessed hope, the appearing of the great God and Saviour:" the cry goes up from thousands of longing hearts, "Come quickly, Lord Jesus!" And the veil is being taken away from the long-blinded Jew; there is already "a noise and a shaking among the dry bones;" already "one of a city, and two of a family" (Jer. iii. 14) are returning to Zion. Everything tells that the Day of the Lord is at hand. But to the "Things" of this Aspect, which are "beginning to come to pass," many of the Lord's saints are "looking up, and lifting up their heads" (Luke xxi. 28). It is for the definiteness and convincing clearness with which the chronology of these times is presented, that longing, waiting believers owe a debt to our honoured brother and sister, that eternity only can repay.

There is one great defect in the work, a defect painfully felt by the student—it has no Index.

BIBLE STUDIES.—23.

GUIDANCE.

I.—Reasons for seeking guidance. (1) Man's incapability of directing his steps (Jer. x. 23). (2) There are enemies to be met (Ps. xxv. 19); especially the great enemy (1 Pet. v. 8). (3) The uncertainty of the future (Prov. xxvii. 1).

II.—If any man say, "I can take care of myself," the wise man answers him, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool" (Prov. xxviii. 26); "The way of a fool is right in his own eyes" (xii. 15).

III.—How the Lord guides. (1) He is a strong guide. "The Lord your God, which goeth before you, He shall fight for you" (Deut. i. 30). "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?" (Isa. xl. 28). (2) He is a wise guide. "There is no searching of his understanding" (Isa. xl. 28). "Declaring the end from the beginning" (Isa. xlvi. 10). "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. ii. 3). (3) He guides continually. "The Lord shall guide thee continually" (Isa. lviii. 11). "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. xxxvii. 23). "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep" (Ps. cxxi. 4). (4) He guides on every side. "The Lord . . . guided them on every side" (2 Chron. xxxii. 22). "He will go over before thee . . . He it is that doth go with thee" (Deut. xxxi. 3, 6). "The God of Israel will be your rereward" (Isa. lii. 12). (5) He guides as a Shepherd. "He guided them in the wilderness like a flock" (Ps. lxxviii. 52). "By the springs of water shall He guide them" (Isa. xlix. 10). "The Dayspring from on high hath visited us . . . to guide our feet into the way of peace" (Luke i. 78, 79). (6) He guides with his eye. "I will guide thee with Mine eye" (Ps. xxxii. 8). Our answer: "Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress, so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God" (Ps. cxxiii. 2). (7) He guides with his counsel. "Thou shalt guide me with Thy counsel" (Ps. lxxiii. 24). "His name shall be called . . . Counsellor" (Isa. ix. 6). "I will bless the Lord, who hath given me counsel" (Ps. xvi. 7). (8) He guides by his Spirit. "The Comforter . . . shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you" (John xiv. 26). "When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth" (John xvi. 13). (9) He guides unto death. "He will be our guide even unto death" (Ps. xlviii. 14). "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee" (Isa. xliii. 2). "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me" (Ps. xxiii. 4). "The meek will He guide in judgment, and the meek will He teach his way" (Ps. xxv. 9).

THE SCOTTISH HOME MISSION TO JEWS recently opened two rooms at 104, Rose-street, Edinburgh. Rev. J. G. Cunningham, Free St. Luke's, presided, and gave an opening address from an appropriate passage in Exodus. Rev. Eliezer Bassin, M.B., missionary to the Jews in Scotland, drew attention to the importance of the rooms for the work, and gave an interesting account of his intercourse with resident and emigrant Jews in Leith, Granton, and Glasgow. Rev. Robert Henderson and Rev. W. F. Scott, late missionary to the Jews, Beyrout, also took part, and spoke on the practical aspects of the Mission. The rooms were dedicated in prayer to God, and his blessing invoked on the missionary and the Mission. Contributions in aid of the funds will be thankfully acknowledged by the hon. sec. Rev. Robert Henderson, 1, Ventnor-terrace, Edinburgh. There is also a special fund for the purchase of Hebrew New Testaments for the Jews, to which some might feel disposed to contribute.

UNDERSTANDING OF THE TIMES.

When David came to the kingdom, and each of the twelve tribes supplied its contingent to his army, none of these was more welcome than that of Issachar, "men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred, and all their brethren were at their commandment." The bands of all the other tribes were counted by thousands; but the two hundred chiefs of Issachar, who understood the times and knew what Israel ought to do, are alone enumerated; all their brethren were at their commandment, but we are not told how many there were of them.

There is no kind of man more urgently wanted now than men who have understanding of the times. Without such, "mighty men of valour for the war" may make the most disastrous blunders. Byron, remembering the brave three hundred, who sacrificed their lives in holding the pass of Thermopylæ against the hosts of Persia, appealed to the gods of Greece:—

> Of the three hundred grant but three
> To make a new Thermopylæ.

We, in these days, need to cry to the God of Israel:—

> Of the two hundred grant but two
> To know what Israel ought to do.

In order to an understanding of the times, it is necessary to know not only the present but the past; to know history in the light of Scripture "given by inspiration of God"—the God of nations, who "hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."

Human history has been divided into periods marked by great catastrophes: e.g., from Adam to the flood; thence to the tower of Babel and the confusion of tongues; from the call of Abram to the Exodus, and the destruction of Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea; the three times fourteen generations: from Moses to David, David to the captivity, the captivity to Christ. But the great era called by our Lord "the Times of the Gentiles," commencing with the reign of Nebuchadnezzar—the head of gold—and closing with the destruction of the kingdoms portrayed by the fourfold image which that king of kings saw in his dream, is the period which to Israel and the nations has the most immediate and urgent interest.

There is a very general consent that the four divisions of the image signified the four great empires, Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, and that the little stone is the Lord Jesus, cut out of the mountain without hands—apart from human power, by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost.

The next question is, what is meant by the deterioration of the metals from gold to iron and clay? There can be little doubt that the depreciation of the royal prerogative is thus prefigured. The words of the prophet to the monarch imply as much as this:—

> "Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath He given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold" (Dan. ii. 37, 38).

"Thou art this head of gold" closes the brief but pregnant summary of the absolute autocracy which the God of heaven had committed to Nebuchadnezzar: a power still more vividly described by Daniel of Belshazzar; "Whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive" (Dan. v. 18, 19).

The kingdom which arose after that of Babylon was inferior in this, that the royal prerogative was less. Whom Nebuchadnezzar would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive; but Darius was bound by his own decrees, and when he had signed the decree which consigned Daniel to be slain, he had no power to keep him alive. Ahasuerus could not reverse the writing given to Haman, he could only seek to neutralise it by another writing.

In the third kingdom, that of brass, the royal prerogative, which Nebuchadnezzar received direct from God, was subordinate to human prowess. Alexander the Great was more a conqueror than a king; he carved his way to universal empire with the sword; and he is known in history rather as a General than as a Sovereign.

The fourth kingdom was strong as iron, and like iron it broke in pieces and crushed. But the royal prerogative was not acknowledged as a gift from God, and its exercise was still further restricted. "The emperor was entirely dependent on the people's choice. The very name of emperor (Imperator) arose from any commander having been so saluted by his soldiers after a victory, if they were satisfied with his conduct. Thus in the Roman Empire, power actually was derived from the people, and the emperors succeeded one another rather in the way of popular military election than of hereditary rule."

In the last stage of the fourth kingdom, the iron is mixed with miry clay, and is partly strong and partly brittle. And this is interpreted to mean that "they (the kings) shall mingle themselves with the seed of men." There should be kingly power, in its deteriorated form, iron, mixed with that which is wholly of man; "but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."

Could language more accurately describe the conditions which we see around us now, in these last days of the Roman Empire? or could any conditions answer more exactly to the figures of the prophecy?

Government has become increasingly popular. The royal prerogative is well-nigh gone. That the People are the source of power, is the boast of the Nineteenth Century, and "Vox Populi vox Dei" is its creed. But the clay of Internationalism and Nihilism, Socialism and Democracy, is not mixed with the metal of kingly prerogative.

Do we, then, affirm the Divine Right of kings? Were the days of Nebuchadnezzar, who slew and kept alive according to his own sweet will, better than these days of enlightenment and liberty? Let the wise man answer —"Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not inquire wisely concerning this." The true form of government is absolute monarchy. But no man has yet been found unselfish enough to be the monarch of the world. Nevertheless, there has been one Child born, one Son given, who has every qualification—Wonderful, Counsellor, the Father of Eternity, the Prince of Peace. The government shall be upon his shoulder, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

We now want sons of Issachar, men who have understanding of the times. The Times of the Gentiles are the last times before He comes who is the Desire of all nations, whom God's decree has already set upon his holy hill of Zion, and whom He commands all kings and judges of the earth to kiss in token of submission to his rule.

God gave universal dominion to Adam; but in obeying Satan and disobeying God he handed over his rule to Satan, who thus became the prince of this world. From Adam to Nimrod there was no God-appointed ruler of men. But after the catastrophe of the tower of Babel, God called out Israel to be a kingdom of priests and a holy nation unto Himself. But they proved throughout their history a stiff-necked people, and God sent them into captivity to Babylon.

Then He committed kingly power in its highest form to the ablest and mightiest Gentile at that day upon the earth. The Great King made Nebuchadnezzar a great king. The King of kings made the monarch of Babylon a king of kings. The King of heaven committed to the king of Babylon absolute power and universal dominion upon earth. But, instead of using his power in the spirit of Him from whom he had received it, and whose tender mercies are over all his works, Nebuchadnezzar made a golden image of himself, which he obliged all people to worship, and cast three of God's faithful servants into a fiery furnace because they refused to bow down to it.

The rulers of that first kingdom abundantly proved that man cannot be trusted with autocratic power, and God, in mercy to their subjects, permitted the royal prerogative to decline, dividing the power between the king and his nobles, and curbing it more and more from age to age, by making the monarchs of the succeeding kingdoms more and more dependent on the people.

But can the people be trusted with power any more than the kings? Let the French Revolution answer. Let Nihilism and all the other voices of the people at home or abroad reply. Let the present condition of England answer this one question: Have we, has our Popular Government, learnt the lesson which Nebuchadnezzar was deposed from his high estate and sent among the beasts that he might learn—the fundamental truth: that the Heavens do rule—that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will?

Far from it. Modern religion is becoming more merely humanitarian and less honouring to God. "The portals of the Church must be widened to include all who can minister to the service of humanity. In the ideal Church there will be work enough and to spare for those who, although they have not found God, are willing and anxious to try and help men." This is the mistaken utterance of a very philanthropic man. The mystery of all this unintelligible world will not so be solved. No one can truly help man until he has found God. For "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding." The mystery of God will be finished when the human power and self-resource even of the holy people is broken in pieces, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ (Deut. xxxii. 36; Dan. xii. 7, R.V.; Rev. x. 6, xi. 15).

This is the truth of God individually no less than dispensationally. What God has to do with us is to wear us out that He may reign. Every one of the many forms of Antichrist, which wears out the saints of the Most High, is, like the Assyrian, the rod in God's hand, though he thinketh not so (Isa. x.). The coming kingdom will be ruled by Him who emptied Himself, and became "a worm and no man," and his saints will reign with Him, when they have been, through death and resurrection, brought to an end of themselves, and are blessed with the seven beatitudes, the first of which is to be poor in spirit.

THE MANIA FOR CHEAPNESS.

BY REV. J. B. FIGGIS, BRIGHTON.

I WAS informed the other day that the payment for making nightlight boxes is a shilling a gross, which, lately, the employers tried to reduce to eightpence, but the workers successfully resisted the reduction. It takes a day's hard work to produce a gross. "For making fancy aprons, trimmed with flounce and wings of sateen and full trimming of lace, the workwomen are paid 1s. 3d. a dozen, and have to supply their own machines and cotton."

When one hears of such cases, or reads of poor seamstresses working for seven shillings a week and finding their own needles and cotton,* when one is told that sometimes they get (and on the same conditions) no more than three farthings an hour; when one hears of a few pence as payment for making a dozen shirts, all that is human within us, to say nothing of aught that is Divine, is stirred to its very depths. If our Ritual Revival and our Protestant Revival together leave us in the least degree partakers in these iniquities, is it any wonder that in the one case men may have fasted and not been blest, in the other have attended meetings and not been refreshed? I will not multiply cases. I have not been trying to collect evidence. It is notorious that such things are done; and such things, I say are tyranny, and tyranny is sin. To fast and to pray and to preach, and then to take no trouble to undo these heavy burdens is a vain thing—useless to us, grievous to God.

If such tales of oppression make the blood boil, the accounts of dishonesty make the cheek blush.

What is this that is going on in Sheffield, calling for inquisition of its Mayor and other authorities? It is alleged that certain firms in that town have imported from Germany cheap and inferior cutlery, and have sent it out stamped with Sheffield trade-marks, as if manufactured in their own town. We are not jealous of German cutlery, but we are jealous for the fair name of England, and are doubly jealous when we hear that hundreds or thousands of our artisans are unemployed, who but for such nefarious practices might be earning good wages.

"Well," you say, "and whom do you charge with this twofold state of things? Men of business, in the one case, I suppose, manufacturers in the other; so you do but reiterate the everlasting cry against dishonest and overreaching trade?" No, I charge no man, and no class of men with anything more than his share of responsibility warrants. I am not going to set class against class, or to hold a brief for one against the other. What if all, or nearly all, are more or less at fault.

If I were addressing a body of manufacturers, I hope I might have the grace to say some plain things to them about abstaining from all appearance of evil. Were I speaking chiefly to men of business, especially to employers of labour, I would say, "Be careful how, for the sake of trying to save a penny here or a pound there, you grind the faces of the poor."

But, at the present juncture, it is not with men of business that I find most fault. I sympathise with them exceedingly. Their profits are so low, their trade is so precarious, the shadow of the cloud over them is so black, that they are driven to buy in the cheapest market, and so, directly or indirectly, driven to underpay. "Who drives them?" We careless people in easy circumstances, with incomes small, perhaps, but comparatively settled and certain. When people are bitten with the current mania for cheapness, and the indifference as to where things are made, or how those who make them are paid, they are the occasion of no end of misery, of which they take no thought.

There is misery to the man of business whose profits are so low that he can only live when he does a large business, and a large business it is not in the nature of things that many men should do. There is misery to the manufacturer who suffers immensely from the over-production thus induced. And there is misery greater still to the operatives, workmen of every handicraft, whose wages sink so low, where they do not cease altogether, that what is depression of trade to others, may threaten starvation to them. This is especially the case with female labour. A magistrate at a recent meeting uttered a merited rebuke on the ill-paid services of some "first hands" in this town, and I myself have met with unsought cases quite recently on which you would all cry shame.

But how can we alter things? What are we to do? Do! "Do good unto all men, especially unto them of the household of faith." And remember that one way of doing good unto them is this: of doing business with them. That was a noble example which the great Bishop Berkeley set his diocese. He was Bishop of Cloyne, and he preferred to dress in homespun rather than wear anything but cloth from the looms of Cloyne. I do not say that we must imitate this to the letter. But I do say that when people are making a fortune, or a competence in a town, that they lose a distinct opportunity of doing good if they deliberately send to another town for what they might get there.

I do not say that landlords with reduced rents, and others with reduced dividends, are not to seek to make their money go as far as it can, and that they may not "co-operate" to prevent their having seriously to retrench. But I do say that it is a pitiful thing to see people—Christian people—to whom it can make no appreciable difference, carrying their custom away to an unknown company when they might thereby be helping needy men of business—perhaps Christian men of business—at their very doors

"Well," you say, "I never thought of it in this light, I really thought it was thrifty, and thrift, you know, is a virtue!" Yes, thrift is a virtue, I grant—by all means practise it. But there are other virtues, perhaps higher ones, not to be overlooked. One of these is to "consider one another." You admit that you have not considered, you have not thought of this. I daresay. Perhaps it has never occurred to you, never been brought before you; but now that it has, you will not be guiltless if you do not consider it for the future.

What I contend for is this, that the principle of Christian love and of Christian discretion (bring that in, by all means) which actuates us in giving money, ought to actuate us in spending it. See how much more good we should do. You have five hundred a year, we will suppose. You tithe it and give away fifty (I hope you do). You bestow your gifts religiously, but for the rest you act on the principle, "Business is business." What then? Why, you bring Christ into one-tenth only of your finance. But if you spend on the same principle on which you give, the principle of "fearing God and hating covetousness," then you bring Christ into the whole of your money matters, and will be likely to do ten times as much good. Do see to it that not only the fifty pounds or the fifty shillings you give in charity, but that your whole expenditure is regulated in such a way as to be useful to others, especially to aid struggling merit, and to keep the wolf from the door of the needy tradesman or the much-suffering seamstress. One way in which you may do this is by giving out more work direct to the workers, for then you can secure that they will be properly paid. But take care that you do pay them properly. A poor woman whom I knew, carried home by the help of her crutches a bit of work to a fine house. The sum due to her was tenpence. The ladies of the house, not having the exact coins, borrowed them of their servants. Do you not think they might have given the poor thing a shilling? I think Jesus Christ would. And that is the very thing I am aiming at—to get you to do what Christ would do.

"But all this will involve much thought, and on a subject on which I have never thought at all!"

My friends, and you, my sisters, especially, you find time to think of a new book, a new pattern, and a new cantata, and surely you can find time to think where the money with which God has entrusted you goes, and what good or evil it does. Do not let the words that stirred England once be applicable to your case:—

> For evil is wrought from want of thought,
> As well as want of heart.

But this will involve not only consideration, but considerateness; by which I mean that when your want of thought is exchanged for tender thoughtfulness, you may be forced to the conclusion that the funds at your disposal will not go quite so far as they used to do. This may be the very point at which our principle comes in; you may have to deny yourself a luxury or two for the sake of those who serve you, and must we not say, deliberately, that it is better for us to have less that they may have more? How much better to feel that you have been just and even generous towards those to whom you owe your comforts, and to have one comfort the less, rather than to "heap to yourselves treasure," and to add luxury to luxury at the cost of the ill-paid services of those who supply them. Instead of hoping a vain hope for "fair trade," a remedy quite out of reach, let us be ready to pay a fair price, a remedy always at hand.

I may in some of these remarks have seemed to allow my sympathy for creditors to run away with me. Have you no sympathy with their customers? it may be asked. Yes, assuredly, a great deal; my natural sympathies are with them. But I would that those to whom they do not so naturally flow may receive their share. Perhaps my suggestions as to ways of showing this are not good suggestions. Alter and amend these as you will: only take hold of the principle, this, viz., of doing all and expending all for God. That, whether we give, or buy, or whatever we do, we "do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."

"Of what avail," you may ask, "the efforts of individuals to remove this widespread evil?" If Wilberforce and Clarkson had asked that question; if the seven men of Preston had been persuaded that success is only with multitudes; they never would have made their stand for liberty or sobriety. But they knew that it is all one to the Lord, "to save by many or by few;" they dared to attempt reformation, and reformation has followed their efforts. So will it ours, my friends, if we are earnest, if we are honest, if we are ready to keep the fast of God.

The fast that God requires of the manufacturer is to abstain from seeking profit by fraudulent trade-marks and the like; of the merchant and man of business to abstain alike from tricks of trade towards those who deal with him, and acts of hardship towards those who work for him; and of the purchaser to abstain from attempts to lower the market to a level at which prosperity ceases to be possible, for some selfish ends to reduce prices to a state at which it is all but impossible for most to live.

While we are sinning in any one of these matters, it is no wonder that our newspaper writers find it hard to tell us in language graphic enough "how the poor live," or that our religious people anxiously ask, How is it that we do not get more good out of our services?

You need not expect it till you learn to keep the fast that God requireth, and have grace for this practical piety—abstinence from every form of greed.

* THE CHRISTIAN, April 8, 1886.

THE LATE REV. DR. McAUSLANE.—It is proposed to erect a monument in Abney-park Cemetery to the memory of the late Dr. McAuslane, by shilling subscriptions. The treasurer is Mr. F. Baylis, Moss House, Victoria-park-road, E.

CHURCH ARMY.—During the last two months missions have been held in Norfolk in a tent, with very large attendances, and good results. Many have come inside the tent who never enter the church. The work is entirely under the direction of the parochial clergy, and has affected the most careless and indifferent. In several other parishes tents are being supplied with these working-men evangelists. In August the work will recommence in Belfast.

THE ELDER'S SERMON.

WHERE THE DEACON FOUND EVERY WORD OF IT.

"I REALLY wish, deacon, that you would tell me what your candid opinion of our minister is."

Deacon Brown looked meditatively at the speaker, a small, wiry-looking man, whose features were almost as sharp as the sharp black eyes fixed so intently upon him.

"I don't know, Brother Quimby, as a candid opinion of our minister would do him any good."

"I dare say not," responded Mr. Quimby, darkly; "but then it would do me a great deal of good to hear it."

"I don't know as to that either."

"There is no one in the church whose opinion I think more of," continued Mr. Quimby. "Not that I approve of giving it to every one. But you needn't be afraid of saying just what you think to me, deacon, for it won't go any further, and it might serve to clear up some doubts that troubled me."

"What doubts?"

"Well, about various things. But you haven't told me what your opinion is, deacon."

"I have only one opinion of Elder Wakeman, and that is that he is a man who tries to do his duty in all the relations of life."

This was evidently something that Mr. Quimby had neither expected nor desired to hear, and he stared blankly at the speaker. But quickly recovering himself, he said:

"Ha! I think I understand you, Deacon. What you say is very well put indeed. I have thought that he might have been a leetle more willing to take advice; but there is no question in my mind but what he tries to do his duty, as you say. But is he sound?"

"Perhaps not. Some ministers are all sound."

The merry twinkle in the good deacon's eye found no reflection in the solemn visage opposite him.

"It's no laughing matter, deacon," responded Mr. Quimby, with a rebuking shake of his head. "I am surprised that you should speak on so serious a subject with such unseeming levity. I referred to being sound in doctrine. I have been a good deal exercised in my mind in regard to this ever since I heard his sermon on 'Justification,' which is no justification at all, as I understand it, and as good old Dr. Seaver used to lay it down. Dear old man! I wonder what he would say if he could come back and hear the new fangled ideas that are taught from the pulpit where he preached such good old-fashioned doctrines nigh on to twenty years."

"If he is where I think he is, he doesn't want to come back. I only hope that some things he used to preach about are clearer to him now than he ever succeeded in making them to me."

"There is no merit in believing where everything is made clear. There are mysteries of faith, deacon, that nobody has any right to try to understand. Now, Elder Wakeman is forever preaching about what we ought to do, as though such poor weak creatures as we can do anything toward effecting our salvation. As for me I am free to own that I don't consider anything I have done, or am doing, of the least account whatever."

"A man ought to know better than anyone else the quality of his own works, Brother Quimby, so I won't dispute you on that score. So far as I am concerned, I feel that the Lord will have quite enough to do in effecting the work you allude to if I help Him all I can."

"Well, deacon, I wish I could have my mind cleared up in regard to Elder Wakeman. What did you think of his sermon last Sabbath morning?"

"There is one thing I might say about it, if I thought it a prudent thing to do. We can't be too careful speaking, especially if it's anything that's likely to affect the character and usefulness of a man like Elder Wakeman."

"Very true, deacon. But you needn't be afraid of my telling; I'm not one of the leaky sort. I knew, as well as I wanted to, that a man of your sense couldn't approve of such doctrine as that."

"Oh, I've nothing to say against the sermon; it was a very good discourse—you won't often find a better. But the fact is, every word it contained—I really don't know as I ought to mention it, though; if it should get about it might make trouble."

"I'll never lisp a word of it to any living soul," was the eager response.

"Well"—here the deacon lowered his voice to a very impressive whisper—"I have a book at home which has every word of it in."

Here the train for which Deacon Brown was waiting came rushing up to the depôt.

"Is it possible?" ejaculated Mr. Quimby, with uplifted eyes and hands. "But you haven't told me——"

Deacon Brown was already up the steps, smiling and waving his adieux from the platform of the rear car, which rapidly disappeared around a curve in the road.

He was absent nearly a week. When he returned he found not only the church but the whole village in a state of excitement and commotion.

He had not been home more than an hour when Elder Wakeman called on him, and in the course of the day he was waited upon by two deacons and several church members, to say nothing of being interviewed by various of his acquaintances and neighbours, all of whom were anxious to ascertain if there was any truth in the rumour of the grave charge made against his pastor.

Deacon Brown, though somewhat startled at first by a result so little anticipated, took all this with his usual calmness and serenity. He was very reticent on the subject, asserting that he had said nothing that he was not both able and willing to prove when the proper time came to do so. His interview with Elder Wakeman was a private one, but it was noticeable at its close that the countenance of the latter had a serene, almost smiling aspect. But as the Elder took no measures to prevent the meeting of investigation that had been called, no particular importance was attached to this. He didn't seem disposed to talk much about it, merely saying that he thought the deacon ought to have an opportunity to prove or explain what he had every reason to believe he had said about him.

The meeting in question was held at the vestry, which was filled to its utmost capacity before the two chiefly interested, Elder Wakeman and Deacon Brown, entered, and who appeared to be the least excited ones present.

Mr. Quimby was there, full of importance, and with an exultation of look and manner only thinly veiled by the gravity which overspread his countenance. He was standing by the stove, the centre of an interesting and curious circle, when the two entered, but he avoided meeting the eye of either.

At the motion of Elder Wakeman, one of the deacons called the meeting to order, briefly explained its objects, the serious nature of the imputation under which their pastor rested, and appealed to Deacon Brown to put a stop to the talk it had occasioned, by either denying or proving the assertion.

Rising to his feet, Deacon Brown looked around upon the excited and curious faces that were directed toward him.

"Behold, brethren, how much mischief the tongue can do! I said a few words to one of you, under a pledge of secrecy. I think it was under a pledge of secrecy, Brother Quimby?"

"I considered it to be my duty to tell what you told me," said the individual addressed, turning red.

"You are to be commended for having performed your duty so thoroughly," continued the deacon; "a very painful duty, as it is easy to see. I understand you said that I told you Elder Wakeman stole his sermon from a book in my possession; are you sure I used the word 'stole,' Brother Quimby?"

"You said that you had a book that had every word of it in! Where's the difference, I'd like to know?" was Mr. Quimby's prompt and triumphant rejoinder.

"There might be none at all, and again, there might be a great deal," responded the deacon.

"I did use the language ascribed to me by Mr. Quimby," continued Deacon Brown, addressing the rest of the assemblage; "moved thereto by his evident desire that I should say something to our pastor's discredit, and without a thought that it would lead to this trouble and excitement. I declare, furthermore, that I have seen a book containing every word of his sermon in Elder Wakeman's own library. I have taken the liberty of sending for it, and will offer it as evidence as to the truth of my statement."

Taking a ponderous volume from the hands of his son, who had just entered, Deacon Brown laid it on the table before the presiding officer, who carefully adjusting his spectacles, opened it.

Giving one glance at its outspread pages, he raised his eyes to the serene and kindly face opposite.

"Why this is a—a dictionary!"

"Very true," responded Deacon Brown. "But you'll find every word of Elder Wakeman's sermon in it—if you look long enough."

"I must confess, however," added the deacon as soon as the general laughter and astonishment had subsided a little, glancing smilingly across the table at Elder Wakeman, "that there are not many that can string them together so as to form such an interesting and instructive discourse."

Here the elder and deacon shook hands, which was the signal of general hand-shaking, congratulations and good feeling. No one was dissatisfied, with the exception of Mr. Quimby, who, mortified and confounded at the unexpected turn affairs had taken, had slunk from the room.

FRENCH IN LONDON.

A REPRESENTATIVE and numerously attended meeting in connection with the above was recently held in the French Protestant Church, Bayswater, on the occasion of the twenty-fourth anniversary of the founding of the church. The report, read by Pastor Du Pontet de La Harpe, stated that during the past year they had been enabled to open a new and much larger Home for Foreign Governesses; they had added another lady missionary to their staff of workers, and secured for the winter the assistance of two devoted young pastors. All their former agencies, including two day-schools and a Sunday-school near Fitzroy-square, a medical mission near Oxford-circus, a Church Society for Befriending Foreign Girls, Société de Placement, including tutors' and governesses' agencies, and servants' registry office, Cercle de la Jeune France, with its reading-room and monthly public gatherings; ouvroir for poor women, lending libraries, Biblewoman, evangelistic services, special meetings for young men, governesses, shop girls, and servant girls, Fresh Air Mission, Window Gardening Mission, visiting and tract distributing, were in full operation.

Rev. Dr. Bennett said he looked upon the work of the church as one of the greatest importance. He had reason to know that the Romish Church was putting forth more power than it had done for years. He was satisfied that it was aiming to conquer Protestantism in this country.

Dr. D. MacEwan said his heart went a long way with much of what Dr. Bennett had said. He had met one day with an infidel who told him he wished all the churches were swept off the land, beginning with Spurgeon's. "Then which of you infidels will be the first to take upon himself the responsibility of Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage?" was the Doctor's reply. The importance and value of a work like the one carried on by this church could not be overrated. Their lot had been cast in solemn and difficult times. Let them all, whatever may be their denomination, unite in preaching Christ and in living Christ.

Mr. HAMMOND in NORWAY and SWEDEN.

Writing from Bergen, Mr. Hammond says :—

Now for six weeks we have held meetings nearly every day in different parts of Norway and Sweden. My own soul has been most deeply moved by what we have witnessed of God's power in the salvation of the young and old. Sometimes we have seen hundreds bathed in tears—some of sorrow, and some tears of joy. In all these places much prayer had been offered for the presence of the Holy Spirit. We shall ever remember our visit to this land with gratitude to God.

I believe that many Christians who visit foreign lands might with a little effort, and securing the assistance of an interpreter, quicken the people, and preach Jesus to them with God's blessing. His promises never fail.

We have greatly enjoyed our visit to this "land of the midnight sun." The many beautiful lakes, the waterfalls, the snow-capped mountains, and the valleys are very charming. On our way from Stockholm to Trondhjem we spent the Sabbath on the top of the mountains which separate Norway and Sweden. Although it was the 24th of June, deep snow-banks were all around us. The old cathedral at Trondhjem was built in the twelfth century. Some parts of it still retain their grandeur, and it is being restored by an architect, who expects to give the whole building the same magnificent appearance that it had in 1240. The sunsets and lingering twilight in this far northern latitude are very lovely; but although there is "no night" here, yet it is not quite heaven. The steamer from Trondhjem takes us in two days to where the sun may be seen at midnight, and where the strolling Laplanders come with their large flocks of reindeer.

We are now at Bergen, a beautiful place where the sun seldom shines, and we are told that it rains here two hundred days in the year. It has a population of 40,000. The high mountains which nearly surround the town, the beautiful new park, and the drives in the neighbourhood, make it a very attractive place. The old church, dating back 600 years, is one of the curiosities of Bergen. It was bought and restored by the American Consul, whose brother very kindly opened it for us, and pointed out its characteristics.

But our hearts have been deeply touched by visiting the Lepers' Hospital. We had seen lepers in Damascus, and in different parts of Palestine, but never saw such sad sights as here. There are about 800 lepers in Bergen. One hospital near the centre of the town has sixty-four inmates, and two in the outskirts accommodate 700. As we entered one of these, two young women approached Mr. Hubert, and, with a pleasant smile, shook hands with him, but we noticed that their fingers were gone. He told us they were earnest Christians, and were at our meeting the night before in the Baptist Church. This surprised us, for in most countries lepers are never allowed to come in contact with other people. The physician of the largest hospital considers the disease to be contagious, but the managers of the smaller hospital evidently do not think so, as they allow patients to go into the town. As we were walking along the street Mr. Hubert said, as we passed a man: "He is a leper, but is also a minister in the Church." In one of the hospitals I gave a short address, and the sight I then saw I can never forget. Near me stood a man, perfectly blind; his face and hands showed that he was a leper. We talked with him, and his distorted face lighted up as he told us he loved Jesus, and that he would see us in heaven. A year ago he received his spiritual sight.

We noticed two boys standing near, whose blistered faces showed that the terrible disease had fastened upon them. There were also six children from one family, yet neither their father nor mother had the leprosy. A mother of six other children had to leave her family and go into the hospital, where she remained for sixteen years, until her death. She was a member of the Baptist Church, and an earnest Christian. Her sufferings were very great, yet God's grace enabled her to bear them patiently. As yet the disease has not appeared in any of her children. Another Christian leper said to Mr. Hubert not long before her death, "I have a double joy in going to heaven. I shall not only see Jesus, but shall have this vile body changed and fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself" (Phil. iii. 21).

This dreadful disease baffles the skill of all medical men. One strange fact is that sometimes the lepers do not feel pain from external causes. The mother of whom we have spoken, in cooking her food sometimes let boiling water fall upon her hand; large blisters would appear, yet she felt no pain in her hand. She might even put them in the fire without the least sensation, but after a while an intense pain would come internally, so that she would be obliged to remain in bed for weeks. This illustrates sin, and its results. It is impossible to describe the loathsome appearance of those in the worst stages of the disease. We did what we could to comfort them, by telling them of Jesus and his love. Our hearts have since gone out in prayer for them.

A HUNDRED YEARS OF TEMPERANCE REFORM.*

Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, wrote an essay on "Temperance" in 1785. In it was the germ of what has since grown into a great movement. He was far enough advanced to oppose distilled liquors, but he heartily commended fermented and malt liquors. A step forward was taken at Moreau, in the State of New York, in 1808, when the first Temperance Society, which imposed a fine of twenty-five cents for drinking, and one of fifty cents for being drunk, was founded. Since then the march onward has been rapid, yet, after a hundred years, we are far from the goal.

Miss Willard realises this, but she is not dispirited. She believes firmly in the ultimate triumph of total abstinence. She sees much to encourage, in the midst of many discouragements. The forces of progress are on her side. The two fixed motives in human conduct—love of life, and love of property—unite in promoting Temperance. Directors of steamships and railway companies find it does not pay to employ men who use intoxicants. Physical culture fights the liquor traffic tooth and nail. The newspaper, by raking out of the sewers and alleys of large cities the crime and misery produced by drink, helps on the good cause. The laws of hygiene and psychic studies are also valuable allies. So the forces of the age are on the side of Temperance, and directly aid those who fight the battle of reform.

Miss Willard is specially happy in pointing out the relation of the Church to Temperance. The rationale of the alcoholic fascination, she says, has never been better stated than that it is "the devil's counterfeit for the Holy Ghost;" bewildered gropings after what seems the highest and the best, have brought to man the curse of drunkenness. The feeling of many slaves of the bottle was expressed by the beggar who cried on the streets of London, "Why should one be cold and hungry, when twopence worth of gin will admit him to Paradise?" It is the duty of the Church to meet this delusion of the devil, and show that true joy can be found in the Gospel alone. In fulfilling this duty the demon of intemperance has to be crushed. We rejoice to know that the Church has buckled on her armour to do it battle. The victory is sure, for God is on her side. Soldiers in this noblest of all battles should read Miss Willard's pamphlet. It will fill them with new energy.

IF ONE DOUBTS whether he has accepted Christ or not, the best practical remedy for the doubt is to accept Him then and there on the spot, and to keep renewing the acceptance whenever he has the doubt.

For the Young.

A LETTER FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

The following letter, sent to Mr. Hammond by a missionary in Africa, will, we hope, interest our young readers :—

Dear Sir,—I ought to have written long ago and thanked you for the two books you so kindly sent us, "Gathered Lambs" and the "Conversion of Children." They were read months ago with great interest, and with an intensified longing to see every one of our four little sons converted to God while they are still little children in the shelter of home. It seems to me the only true preparation for the battle of life. There are dangers enough around the feet of a boy even with that safeguard; how much more without it! I thank you for those books. I wish every Christian mother might read them.

My eldest little son, now nearly seven years old, I hope has enlisted as a little soldier in Christ's army. He has for a good while shown that he was thoughtful and tender on the subject of religion. Last week we had a visit from a noble young lawyer who gives all his leisure to Christ's work. He had come here to help in holding some evangelistic services with the Zulu lads in my husband's school. After his visit was over, my little Leonard said to me, when in his little cot for the night—

"Mamma, did Mr. B—— begin to love God when he was a little boy?"

"I do not know how young he was," I answered, "but I know he thinks that is the right time to begin, for I heard him say so."

Leonard said, with a little choke in his voice, "I want to love Jesus, but I can't."

"Can't you love Mr. B——?" I asked him. "You do love Mr. B——, but Jesus is much kinder than he, and it is the light from Jesus that makes Mr. B——'s face so bright. If you should see Jesus once you could not help loving Him." And then I asked him if he would not like to begin just then to be Christ's little soldier, and if he would not tell Him so. He assented, and prayed a most genuine little prayer, asking Christ to receive him. I have no right to doubt that he was accepted. I hope and pray that we older ones may not by our lack of faith and patience discourage the child.

It seems to me the danger is that we are sometimes so irritable with the children's restlessness, and carelessness, and noise, that we constantly say "don't" do this and that, and the children get the idea that they are hopelessly naughty, and that it is of no use to think that they can be just as really followers of the Lord Jesus as the older people. I said to Leonard this afternoon: "I am going to write to the gentleman who wrote 'Gathered Lambs' (he knows the book quite well). What shall I tell him from you?" Leonard said: "Tell him I want to be a Christian." Dear little fellow, a hard battle is before him, with his temper and his many faults. He needs all the more our sympathy and constant hopefulness.

We are missionaries to the Zulus under the American Board. My husband has charge of a boarding-school for Zulu lads. The work is very dear to our hearts. It is a work in which there are many discouragements, or would be if we did not know that it is God's work, and that He is with us. We have been here four and a half years.

We feel that we are doing a great work for the Master, one that sorely needs to be done, to wake up the fathers and mothers to appreciate the precious opportunity that is given them to win their little ones to Jesus. May you long be spared to call the tender lambs to the Good Shepherd before you go home to the reward of those who turn many to righteousness, is the wish of Yours in Christ, C. L. G.

* A Century's Evolution of the Temperance Reform. By Frances E. Willard.

NOTES FROM NORTH-WEST SPAIN.

The work in this part was begun twelve years ago by Messrs. Wigstone and Blamire, in Corunna, where there is still a small gathering of believers, and a day school. When I joined these brethren in 1876, Corunna was the only town where the Gospel had been preached. We then held meetings in Arteijo, a village six miles distant, where we met with great opposition, and at the end of four months we gave up the meeting, although we had taken a house for six months, as we saw no fruit. Yet in one of the last meetings held by Don Rufino and myself, a farmer's wife received blessing, and the result has been that some twenty souls have been saved, and this farmer's wife has fitted up, at her own expense, a room of her own, where the meetings are now held. There are fortnightly meetings held in a neighbouring village, in the house of a farmer, whose whole family are converted.

Vigo was the next town we visited, leaving Don Rufino in charge of Corunna. Here thousands attended the preaching of the Gospel, and many were gathered to the Lord; but, owing to much trial and persecution, many have embarked to Buenos Ayres and other Spanish Republics, or have removed to other towns in search of work, so that a few only remain.

Morgadanes, a mountain village beyond Vigo, has been the scene of much blessing and very bitter persecution. Several have been fined and imprisoned several times, but, thank God, there are faithful souls there holding forth the light of truth.

In April, 1878, I returned to Corunna, and the following year Mrs. Spooner and I went to Ferrol to carry on the work begun by Messrs. Previ and Lund. Ferrol is a large seaport town, with an arsenal employing some 5000 men. We had a good time of Gospel testimony there for three years, when some souls were added to those who were converted when we went. Circumstances necessitated our return to Corunna, so Ferrol was worked from thence.

Mr. Chesterman, who came to Spain with us in 1876 and remained in Barcelona, was with me in Ferrol for five months in 1881, and rejoined me in Corunna in January, 1883, where he and Don Rufino still carry on the meetings. Two years ago I removed to this town, Betanzos, where I had long desired to preach the Gospel. We have had uphill work, amid bitter opposition, but God has preserved us although we have heard of threats to blow our house up, and to smash our windows. I have a Bible stall in the fortnightly fairs, when thousands come from great distances, and we have full liberty to explain the Holy Scriptures; so all day it is like an open-air meeting, but with no singing. Then we have meetings for the village people, who attend the Sunday morning markets, children's meetings, and preaching of the Gospel in the evening; besides week-night services and Bible-readings; the latter have been very well attended all through the winter, and every Monday morning some fifty to sixty poor people come for a half an hour's meeting, and then receive a farthing each—a half-farthing is the usual gift. My sister-in-law, Miss Martin, generally assists at this meeting.

We think we are doing very little; but, although the twenty priests and their assistants have been unable to hinder souls being converted, they called to their help two friars to give us battle. These friars held a ten days' mission, consisting of processions in the streets, the people singing a new hymn to, "Mary, our Mother." Two days were devoted to blessing the crosses, medals, rosaries, &c, that the thousands of people carried to them, while two more were given to receive confessions, and an evening's preaching was especially devoted to denouncing the Protestants and their books, and all who attended their meetings. But, "if God be for us, who can be against us?"

To cause a sensation, the young friar while preaching the first sermon, took off his habit and beat his naked back with a chain. Another evening he preached with a crown of thorns on his head, and a thick rope round his neck.

At another mission held in a village near here, the parish priest handed to the friar, who was preaching, a letter in a broad black-edged envelope, "which had been received from hell," with the astounding news that one of the hearers would soon be there. This caused the people to yell and shriek, and some fainted. This having had the desired effect of exciting the people, the letter was handed to the wooden virgin, that was present in the open air, and she was entreated to intercede for this lost soul, and soon another letter was "received from heaven," saying that the Virgin had prevailed, and the lost soul had been delivered: then praise was given to the image, the people falling at its feet.

We shall be glad of the prayers of the Lord's people on behalf of the Spanish Christians, who are called to suffer so much for the name of Jesus. While the work of God has been extending in this province, our brethren Messrs. Wigstone and Blamire, have pushed on to Redondela, Pontevedra, Villagarcia, and Carril, near Santiago. Mr. Blamire is now at Marin, where God has saved many souls, a hundred and thirty having been baptized; while Mr. Wigstone has gone to Linares, where God is giving much blessing, Mr. B. Smith taking charge of Vigo and neighbourhood.

We have reason to thank God and take courage, yet it is sad to see whole provinces without a single missionary to preach Jesus. Who will come to the help of the Lord, and come soon, as infidelity is coming in upon the people as a flood?—Yours in the Gospel.

George Spooner.

AT THE SEASIDE WITH THE TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

A day at Walton-on-the-Naze with over 1200 of Mr. Charrington's people from the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on the 13th instant, will not soon be forgotten. The first train started about 7 a.m., arriving at Walton by 10.30. It was delightful to watch the old people and little children basking in the sunshine or watching with wonderment and joy the tide come rolling in, while many of the more active went out in boats singing—

> "We are out on the ocean sailing,
> To a home beyond the tide."

Thus the happy hours fled rapidly, until only one remained before the train was timed to start for home. This was spent in a short Gospel meeting round the flagstaff near the station, where Mr. Charrington, and his co-worker, Mr. Kerwin, soon attracted a large crowd of all sorts and conditions, from the wealthy visitor to the costermonger with his fruit and nuts. The service was very impressive. After the singing followed some earnest prayers, thanking God for changed hearts, and homes, and bright hopes of one day seeing Jesus. I have heard "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" many times, but never remember it being sung with such tender feeling as on this occasion. Eyes were closed and hands clasped during the verse :—

> "Jesus, my heart's dear refuge,
> Jesus has died for me;
> Firm on the Rock of Ages
> Ever my trust shall be."

Then followed some testimonies; as one man tells his story, which is a terribly dark one, suddenly his face changes, and although tears are standing in his eyes an expression of joy lights up his countenance as he exclaims, "But, blessed be God, I went into the Assembly Hall and heard about Jesus, and He has saved me!" A woman near broke out into a sob, and a "Thank God," and who can wonder, for that woman was his wife!

The journey home was in perfect keeping with the rest of the day, the voice of prayer and praise resounding from nearly every carriage of the train, furnishing one more proof that God's people, however poor, can really enjoy themselves and be thoroughly happy without indulging in drink and sin. James B. Wookey.

SUCCOUR THE TEMPTED.

Oh! women, help your sisters,
  And aid them as they stand,
And fight a fearful battle
  With weary brain and hand.

Their lives are spent in toiling,
  They long for rest and ease,
And welcome change and brightness,
  The passing hour to please.

They are not evil-minded,
  Nor tread with eager feet
The gilded path of peril,
  Stretched out their way to greet;

They are but vain and thoughtless,
  As we ourselves have been,
And walk in slipp'ry places,
  With face and smile serene.

Their homes are often cheerless,
  The scenes of woe and strife,
With few to share or lighten
  The burdens hard of life.

They droop and faint unheeded,
  With none to soothe or care,
And dread of want or sickness
  Oft proves a fruitful snare.

They have their aims and cravings
  For higher, nobler things,
  Their daily labour brings.

They know the love of Jesus
  But as a childhood's tale,
Nor dream his strength and mercy,
  Can present help avail.

Oh! woman, safely sheltered
  From the foul breath of sin,
Stretch forth your hands and aid them,
  The struggle hard to win.

Not with a scornful pity,
  But with a sister's love,
As children of one Father
  Who watcheth from above.

A CONFERENCE IN CHICAGO.

Writing with respect to the Conference of Christian Workers in Chicago in June, which was announced in our columns some time since, Mr. John C. Collins, English Hall, New Haven, Connecticut, writes :—

We had a very interesting and helpful Conference. I should think that the total attendance of different ones who were interested or engaged in the work was not far from 800, but the regular delegates numbered perhaps 150 or 200. We discussed work and plans and methods, and prayed together for seven days in the utmost harmony and union. At the close of the Convention a committee of seven was appointed to represent the various workers engaged in mission and evangelistic work, and to push on and encourage this work in various parts of this country and Canada. We call it "The Committee for Christian Workers of the United States and Canada." Four denominations are represented, as also are the four sections of the country—North, East, South, and West.

We intend to have another Conference or Convention next year. I believe it is the beginning of a new day in this work in the cities of America. Mr. G. A. Barclay, of the Carrubbers Close Mission in Edinburgh, was with us all through the Convention, and was a most interesting speaker.

EX-PRIESTS.—M. Réveillaud, in the Signal, gives an account of the work he himself initiated, in aid of those priests who have left, or are leaving, the Romish Church. Some are preparing for evangelical work in France or its colonies. To many material and spiritual help has been accorded.

LETTER FROM BOMBAY.

By J. S. STONE, M.D.

The weather has been almost unbearable this year, and so we hail with delight the signs of an early monsoon. It is difficult for the readers of The Christian to appreciate our interest in the changing seasons in the Orient. We say but little about summer and winter, unless in recalling experiences of other days. Our language is about the Hot season, the Rains or Monsoon, and the delightful Cold season.

I am glad to write that the Master minds not the heat or the rain in the distribution of his blessings. He has worked hitherto, and still works among us. We have all been thrilled by the tidings from the far North-East of the Empire; tidings of a marvellous ingathering of souls from the very midnight of heathenism. In a few weeks, nearly six hundred heathen were led to Jesus and baptized under the ministry of one missionary, Rev. S. Knowles, of Gonda, Oudh, assisted by a few native helpers. The reports we are receiving from the Western world of great revivals are stirring us up to take hold of God for like visitations of grace in Bombay.

I am thankful to be able to write that in our sailors' work God has been specially blessing his word and our little work. We have secured a very pleasant hall opposite the entrance of the dock. With illuminated texts on the walls, beautiful plants around the entrance, and a hearty welcome ready for every man who may chance to enter, we think we are successfully contending with the gin-palace and the billiard-saloon for patronage. Our missionary is Mr. W. A. Prantch, of Chicago. He was converted about four years ago in Mr. Moody's church in that city. We have abundant reason to thank God for plucking him from the fire, and sending him far away to India to work. Mr. Prantch is indefatigable in his efforts to rescue men. He visits daily the ships, passing from the cabin to the forecastle, talking to all he meets about his Master, and inviting the men to make the "Rest" their head-quarters while in port. During the first three months of the year an aggregate of more than 3000 men attended the Gospel meetings, and about 4000 visited the reading and coffee-rooms. In this time hundreds took the blue ribbon, and a number were converted. To be in one of the testimony meetings at the Rest some evening, and see the men rise one after another to tell the "sweet story of old," newly learned by them, would do you good.

The gin-palaces and groggeries in the neighbourhood are regularly visited, and are often emptied. One evening Mr. Prantch said to me: "No one came to the Rest last night, so I went into 'The Rising Sun,' (a low den near the Rest), and led out of it twenty-five sailors. I did not leave them until I saw them on board." On one occasion the Parsee publican called a European policeman to protect him from the seamen's missionary. The "arm of the law" told Mr. Prantch he must not go into the Parsee's shop, as he was ruining the poor man's business. The missionary said: "But it is a public-house, and I have a right there; however, I can stand on the side walk, can't I?" "Yes, you won't be disturbed then," was the reply. "Now you hear, Mr. Parsee," said Mr. P. "I can stand here. I have a loud voice, and I mean to use it in calling these men to come out of your den. I think you had better allow me quietly to come in and talk to them there." "No, you shall not enter my shop," answered the irate publican. "I have sent a number of Englishmen to hell from this place, and I mean to send more." "Do you hear that, mates?" cried Mr. Prantch. "He confesses his object in keeping this place open; come away from his den." It is not an uncommon thing to find a number of drunken men stowed away in some quiet part of the Rest, where Mr. P. has put them to sober up, thus keeping them out of the hands of the police.

Unfortunately, house-rent is so high that our expenses are very heavy. The cost of the Mission is about 250 rupees a month. Some day we trust it will be God's will for us to build a house, and thus be free of rent. Should any of our readers be inclined to help this work, the writer will be accessible at the Parsonage, 14, Chunam Kiln-lane, Girgaum, Bombay. Or Mr. A. W. Prantch can be communicated with at the Rest, Princes Dock, Bombay.

I am glad to say before I finish that Mr. Prantch, being able to speak German, conducts special services among the German seamen who visit the port. We trust our fellow-workmen in this cause in places visited by The Christian will remind the seamen whom they may meet that there is a "Rest" for them in Bombay, and a welcome too.

NOTES FROM NEW ZEALAND.

From a very lengthy communication, sent to us by Mr. D. Wright, evangelist, Dunedin, we make the following extracts:—

The total population of this colony is only about 600,000 souls. When it is remembered that the area covered by these thousands is 106,260 square miles, or little less than that of Great Britain and Ireland, and that the distance between the north and south extremities is about 1100 miles, no one will be surprised that the work of the evangelist in New Zealand, as to distances, numbers, meeting-places, modes of travelling, &c., must necessarily differ very materially in many respects from that of the evangelist in Britain.

During the past four years or so it has been my privilege to visit and conduct special missions,—generally eight days'—in some sixty places in this province of Otago, besides other places in the province of Canterbury. Churches, school-rooms, halls, theatres, barns, cottages, and other places of all sorts and sizes have been pressed into the service, and not infrequently we have held forth in the open air. In one way or another I have been associated with and assisted by nearly one hundred ministers of the Gospel, belonging to different denominations. These labourers for God and souls deserve the cordial support and the earnest prayers of all who seek the highest good of their adopted country. I am well acquainted with a worthy brother in the Gospel ministry, who told me that for many years he had ridden, on an average, 5000 miles a year.

Sometimes our audiences are large and inspiring, and at other times they are small and discouraging. Much depends upon the place, the weather, and the state of the roads. Our summers are long, pleasant and balmy, and our winters are short but very often wet. Sometimes the people are hindered by the heat, and sometimes by wet, but chiefly because the heart is cold and dead. At Milton, with a population of 1300, I have seen 500 people gathered on a week-day evening, and 40 souls, old and young, seeking the Lord in one night. In a country district where on one occasion we continued our special services for nearly three weeks consecutively, over sixty persons professed faith in Christ. In those places where fruit has been seen, the ministers were thoroughly evangelical, fully sympathetic, eager for souls, and supported by earnest praying men and women. The young converts were carefully shepherded and cared for, and the result was eminently satisfactory to all.

Concerning individual cases, I cannot now write. Testimonies in scores from every quarter and from all sorts of people, old and young, high and low, have been cheerfully given to the effect that through the simple Gospel message in speech and song, hearts have been changed, luke-warm believers revived and stimulated, backsliders restored, homes brightened and God glorified. It would be to me both a pleasant and easy task to go into lengthened details as to striking incidents witnessed and results achieved, but I forbear, partly because it might appear egotistical and partly because readers might be impatient.

The ball-room, the theatre, the racecourse, the glittering drinking saloons, and the gambling table attract and ultimately destroy great numbers of our fine young men. In most communities, however, there are bands of splendid young fellows with influence, intelligence, and force of character who are not ashamed to profess their faith in and allegiance to Christ, and to be identified with Christians and Christian work. Let me note the fact that most painful tragedies come under the notice of Christian workers from time to time in connection with young men who have come out from home. Emphatically I would say, after years of experience and observation, New Zealand is no place for wayward lads to reform; in some few instances they have been improved, but often and often they sink to a lower depth of depravity, and are as unknown strangers laid in a stranger's grave.

Contempt for parental authority and the powers that be on the part of young people of both sexes is somewhat rampant in this fair colony. To their shame be it said, our legislators have for several years banished the Word of God from the public schools. As a citizen, a father, a church member and Christian, I protest with thousands more against this as a scandal and a crime. Crowds of healthy boys and girls receive little or no Bible teaching in too many homes, or in our Sabbath schools, and, therefore, are practically heathen. Who can foretell what the fruit may be?

In the matter of "giving" to the Lord's cause, many Christians are very liberal. Religious and philanthropic institutions are well supported. The churches are busy, and draw large congregations; the Sunday-schools throughout the land are attended by thousands of bright, intelligent boys and girls, and large bands of teachers are doing their best to counteract the devil's ravages, and to spread the seed of the kingdom. For these things we are, and must be, profoundly thankful. Our most clamant need is a wave, wide and deep, of Holy Ghost power and quickening.

Speaking of the gold-fields, the writer says: If the history of these diggings could be written the narrative would be more startling than any nursery tale or book of fiction ever penned. Men from every land are eager in the hunt for gold. Sons of the aristocracy of England are there; so are the sons of judges, lawyers, doctors, merchants, and bankers; men are there from Oxford, Cambridge, and other celebrated seats of learning, and from every walk of life. Drink and bad living have sent many fine fellows there. Respecting spiritual matters, they are too often utterly regardless, but not a few are earnest men. On these and other gold-fields our audiences are often made up of Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Baptists, Brethren, Christian disciples, Wesleyans, Congregationalists, Primitives, and all sorts.

I regret to say that at this moment New Zealand is passing through a commercial crisis, and the worst has not yet been reached. The cry of the unemployed in many quarters is both loud and deep. May the Lord again give us prosperity, and overrule the severe depression for his own glory. Most cordially do we send Christian greetings to brethren across the seas, and request them to join with us in the cry—New Zealand for Christ!

Heriot-row, Dunedin, New Zealand.

THE BRITISH AND COLONIAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.—In connection with the British and Colonial Temperance Congress held in London last week, a sermon was preached in Westminster Abbey by the Bishop of London on Monday evening. The Congress was formally opened on Wednesday morning, in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, the president, the Bishop of London, in the chair. Lengthy addresses were given on the progress of the cause in Malta, Gibraltar, Ceylon, India, and Burmah, New South Wales, Victoria, New Zealand, Queensland, &c., and the proceedings were continued on Thursday and Friday. The pressure on our space will not admit of a detailed report, but it will be found in full in The Temperance Record (337, Strand).

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait and sketch of Pastor Chiniquy, whose book, "Fifty Years in Rome," may be obtained at this office, price 7s. 6d.

Rev. Archibald Neilson Mackray, M.A., Minister of the Presbyterian Church of England, Torquay, has been elected colleague and successor to the Rev. Dr. Bonar, Chalmers Memorial Church, Grange, Edinburgh. Mr. Mackray has been fourteen years minister at Torquay and is well known as an evangelical and able preacher.

The time for the autumn Christian Conferences is upon us, and we note with extreme pleasure the growing disposition to infuse into them the practical and missionary element. For some years past they have been getting into well-worn ruts—discussing over and over again the first principles of the faith, till they have been in danger of degenerating into purely academical debates. The flowing tide of missionary fervour, however, is reaching them, and this autumn we hope to find most of these gatherings turned into recruiting grounds for the great mission fields of the world.

As an indication of this welcome change, we may allude to the fact that during the coming months our earnest friend, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, of Liverpool, will be busy blowing his missionary trumpet all up and down this land, calling the hosts of believers to the fray. Next week, at the close of the Keswick Conference, an opportunity will be afforded him of impressing on the minds of the believers gathered there the supreme claims of the perishing heathen. A series of Conferences is being arranged for during September in the north-east of England, through the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. At Salisbury, in the end of September, Mr. Radcliffe will have full scope for expatiating on his favourite theme. Early in October there comes the three days' Conference on world-wide evangelisation at Mildmay. Mr. J. E. Mathieson is taking up the matter with great spirit, and an important programme may be expected. The Dublin Conference in mid-October is to follow suit in giving prominence to this topic, and at its close Mr. Radcliffe will speak at a meeting convened by the Y.M.C.A. The Conference in Clapham Hall is fixed for October 27, 28. After that Mr. Radcliffe will visit Edinburgh, Glasgow, and perhaps other parts of Scotland. The last Conference of the London series will be held towards the end of November.

In this list we have not referred to the Liverpool Conference, October 7 and 8, but it deserves special mention. Hitherto the subjects considered there have been of the abstract and doctrinal sort. This year it will be entirely revolutionised, and attention will be concentrated on the great theme of the Evangelisation of the World. We earnestly trust that the example of the Liverpool friends will be largely followed throughout the country, and that the reproach of "spiritual dissipation" sometimes levelled at these gatherings may be rolled away. It is high time for the churches in Protestant lands to awake out of the sleep of easy-going profession, and rise to the height of the privilege God has conferred upon them. The whole world is now open to the Gospel messenger. Shall not Great Britain and America lead the way in a new departure for its complete evangelisation?

Reliable and official statistics show that, even looked at from a purely physiological point of view, the State regulation of vice in Paris has utterly failed to effect the object upon which the promoters and supporters of a vicious system have laid so much stress. There are, however, other causes than that of State recognition of vice to which must be attributed the alarming immorality and consequent disease, and perhaps not the least of these may be found in the tacit admission of a great portion of French society, in nearly all grades, that vice is a necessary accompaniment of civilisation, and in the reception of false canons of arts and morals by leaders in thought and literature.

A people whose journals are full of obscenity, either pictorial or verbal, and much of whose literature is a witches' cauldron, seething with filth, must necessarily descend lower and lower, until the inevitable day of reckoning and retribution arrives. One would naturally think that the lowest depth had been reached when a critic could refer to a leading author's new book, a trifle less immoral than its predecessors, as being only a cup of tea after an emetic; but there is a lower deep still, and it is arrived at only when such writers' revolting suggestiveness is assimilated and acted out in the daily life.

This is the terrible condition into which a by no means small section of the population of Paris and other large centres has already sunk. The leading French novelist may, as has been claimed for him, have idealised animals; though, after our necessary study of his works, we can call to mind only one instance in which he has done this, but he has studiously "naturalised" humanity, depicting his men and women as infinitely lower in every respect than the beasts of the field. It is impossible that the numberless books of this and other less capable, but equally obscene, writers of the "realistic" school can run through scores after scores of editions, and be read by myriads of people of both sexes, without the life of the nation being forced into channels before the uncleanness of which even a Dante fresh from the revolting horrors of his Inferno would shudder.

France more than once has had to pay dearly for her self-imposed degradation, and she will have to pay dearer still before she can shake from herself the serpent-coils of that depravity of thought and life which at present are choking healthy existence and aspiration. Even to-day there are signs of coming internal trouble, and it is by no means unlikely that before very long Paris, at any rate, will again be in turmoil. In a powerful journal, only the other day, after references to the "cloaque républicain," it was asserted that, for every citizen worthy of the name, there was only one thing possible, that of loading his rifle and awaiting the hour; and those who profess to be best acquainted with the condition and feelings of the Parisian "lower orders" do not hesitate to say that the hour is not distant.

[We have, however, another letter from our friend and correspondent, Mr. Richard Heath, speaking in much more laudatory terms of Paris and the Republic. All depends upon the point of view from which we make our observation. Mr. Heath's letter will appear in our next.—Ed.]

In the midst of all this, the mission work in Paris seems like a drop in the ocean; but it is God's own work. Hitherto, a very great measure of success has attended it, and it may be that all these troubles, past as well as future, will clear out of the way obstacles to the reception of that righteousness which indeed exalteth a nation. A smaller seed than that which has been, and which is being, sown in France has become a great tree, and hope and comfort are to be found in the fact that in national, as in individual life, the path to light often is through utter darkness. God grant that this may be the ultimate result in the case of France, where so many of our brethren are devotedly working for Christ and his kingdom.

A lady sends us the following letter from a Methodist Episcopal minister in America, to whom she sends her copy of The Christian when read. She says, "If you insert it, it may lead others thus to utilise their copy of your precious paper to the helping of fellow Christians." We regret that the writer and her sister, who each used to send their copies to others, are now unable, through reduced circumstances, to take it in themselves. We have put our correspondent for the present on our free list, so that she and the American minister will continue to receive the paper. He writes:—

> Dear Mrs. ——, The Christian comes regularly to hand, and I find it very helpful. There is no paper I prize so much as this "light from across the water"—this weekly record from my native land.

We should be glad to know that the majority of our readers sent their copies to some pastor, or evangelist, or other Christian worker at home, or missionary abroad, with whom they might occasionally exchange a letter, and thus encourage the Lord's servant and get refreshed themselves.

> 'No Popery,' as a political or even as a sectarian cry, has lost its force in England altogether. There are many causes, no doubt, for this disappearance of a sentiment which was at one time an important factor in public opinion. The progress of Ritualism may have something to do with it. Priests, hardly distinguishable from their Roman Catholic comrades, have worked zealously among the very poor, familiarising them with a ceremony closely resembling the Mass . . . A prelate like Cardinal Manning, ever foremost in great national movements, works wonders also in dissipating the old dread of Romanism as an anti-national creed.

This dogmatic statement, made in the editorial columns of The Daily Telegraph a few days ago, has, perhaps, only one defect—the vital one of not being quite accurate. The heart of England is as truly Protestant as ever, though many of her children, in toying with Ritualism and its dangerous dogmas, have, indeed, been playing with fire. But, if the occasion should arise, her voice will again pronounce unmistakably against both the soul-enslaving doctrines and the body-enslaving social claims of Rome. We must demur also to the assertion that Cardinal Manning has ever been foremost in "national" movements. In many social movements he has indeed taken a prominent place, and we gladly recognise his service in such directions, but those movements have never clashed with the claims of Rome, or they would not have had the support of any Romish dignitary. How bitterly anti-national Rome can be, even in her own headquarters, is shown in that faithful and valuable volume, About's "Question Romaine," elevated by the Pope and his councillors to the dignity of the Index and the flames. If we had no History of England to go to, we still should have ample evidence that Rome is the centre round which the Romanist must NUTS TO CRACK.

For Infidels and Freethinkers.
BY AN OLD DEIST.

Extracts.

2. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this; because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

* * * * *

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

* * * * *

19. Why is it that dying men never regret being Christians? And why do deists often on their death-beds mourn over the fact that they were not Christians?

* * * * *

24. I cannot gainsay the fact, that the London Shipping Gazette has admitted that no ship is capable of meeting great storms and carrying heavy cargoes "that differs far from the proportions of Noah's Ark." How came the proportions of that great ship to be so worthy of attention in this nineteenth century?

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings;

The Present Distress.
A Personal Testimony and an Earnest Appeal.

Price 6d. per Dozen, post free.
Look out for the Safest Path.
A Few Words on Christian Duty at the Present Crisis.

"Mr. Blackwood has thrown in his lot, and wielded his influence, both by example and by speech, on behalf of the Temperance Reform. Some of his addresses on this burning topic, such as 'The Present Distress,' 'Look out for the Safest Path,' 'Battlements and Blood-Guiltiness,' &c., have been published, and deserve wide circulation, especially among Christians, as setting forth their urgent duty in connection with one of the towering evils of the day."—The Christian, July 1.

ETERNAL LIFE:
Where to Find it,
AND How to Obtain it.
BY HERMANN LIEBSTEIN.

"Now what was true with reference to the ancient people is true with reference to us. What we need is just the same as that which they needed—life; and the fountain where alone we can find life now, is just the very same which nearly three thousand years ago was pointed out by Amos to Israel—JEHOVAH. And the way in which we may and can obtain life now, is none other than the old way—seeking Him who is its fountain."

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—Capt. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of The Christian, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED in 1844.

THE Committee very earnestly appeal for greatly needed help in Annual Subscriptions, Donations, and Offertories to maintain their present large staff of earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers engaged under the directions and superintendence of the Parochial Clergy, in visiting the poor, the sick, the ignorant, and the erring; and who help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Some grants have been withdrawn and others are in jeopardy for lack of funds.

Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

necessarily revolve, and that, as is evidenced by the order of proceedings at most Roman Catholic gatherings, the rule with the Roman Catholic, priest and layman alike, is "Pope first and Queen afterwards."

In the progress of the nation towards civil and religious liberty, we have been taught to tolerate the Romish Apostasy, though it is essentially and irremediably intolerant. But it is simply tolerated, it is not loved or admired; and, so long as England remains a land of Bibles, Popery can only be permitted, not participated in. Whenever the real question arises, "Christ or Pope," the decision of England will be the one to which she has resolutely adhered in spite of torture and fire.

On several occasions we have called attention to the endeavour made by Mrs. Heckford, of No. 6, The Crescent, Minories, E., to improve the sad condition of shirtmakers and other seamstresses in the East-end of London, and we have commended the work to our readers in the hope that many of them would be induced to give, not only their sympathy and prayers to the noble work, but also their practical assistance. All that Mrs. Heckford asked for, in order to enable her to elevate the poor women who were toiling from dawn to midnight for six or seven shillings per week, was private orders for articles of clothing, and we regret to learn that customers still are few, and that, instead of increased business, the self-denying head of the movement has now to report a falling-off. It is, indeed, painful to us to comment upon this, for the fact points to a want of practical Christianity in our midst.

Surely, amongst our readers in London, there are sufficient kind-hearted men and women willing to take a little personal trouble to secure to Mrs. Heckford that success which she unselfishly longs for, and to enable her to employ at least twenty-four widows in making shirts and other articles for Christians, who desire to have no part or lot in that "slop-shop" competition which is doing so much to fill our graveyards with consumptives, and our midnight streets with "gay" women, shivering and starving beneath the lamps. We once more appeal to our readers to come to the help of the movement "by wearing no linen but such as is made without sweating, and paid for comparatively decently," and we shall be grieved if the appeal is made in vain, and the workers whom Mrs. Heckford has gathered around her have to be turned out to swell the appalling numbers of those who have "no visible means of support."

Cardinal Manning writes powerfully; but, unfortunately for the influence of his last letter with reference to some of Rev. Wm. Arthur's opinions, the facts of history are against him. It is, however, so much the custom of Rome to decry history, or to deny it, that we cannot be surprised when Cardinal Manning ignores it, but we shall be surprised f Mr. Arthur accepts, as final, the quotation from Leo XIII., on the subject of Roman tenderness towards those whom she deems heretics. One Pope finds it convenient to assert that, "the Church is wont diligently to take care that no one shall be compelled against his will to embrace the Catholic aith;" and another one insists upon the application of the rack and the fire; but the Cardinal makes no attempt to reconcile the utterances; perhaps, because he is compelled y his position to believe both Pontiffs equally infallible, and Mr. Arthur will be excused if, like every other thoughtful Protestant, he sets the evidence of history against the statements of blind and bigoted partisans.

It says but little for one section of society, that in these days, when men and women are dying of hunger in our midst, and grave social and national questions are calling for careful Christian consideration, it should be remunerative for a lecturer and his wife to come from America to give addresses upon "posturing." One would think that the times are too serious for attention to be given to drawing-room posing, and that men and women with immortal souls would not find it difficult to get through the day without wasting time upon inane follies such as this. Perhaps, if the patrons of such lectures were to visit some of the slums and courts, and see the postures the poor take when they are dying of hunger and poverty begotten diseases, they would have less heart for the æsthetic peacock feathers, and the picturesque positions which, it would seem, are necessary in Society drawing-rooms; but they would at any rate gain some knowledge of the life which is seething around them, hungering and fainting and dying in God's sight, and unlooked upon by the thoughtless creatures whose luxurious days seem to be a heavy burden, difficult to be borne except upon the crutches of folly.

A recent writer has said, with singular aptness:—

> It would be good for every man and woman to write down for a fortnight the occupation of every half hour, the expenditure of every penny, and then, looking back, to ask themselves whether in a world where they have only one life, and where they can live that life in so many different ways, this is really the way they think best. If they would only once taste the creative delight of performing one act which is really their own, which they have not been told to do, or done as a matter of course, or drifted into doing, the happiness and significance of their whole lives would be raised.

We trust that not many of our readers are in the habit of letting their days slip away unused and unsanctified, but perhaps even the best of us would be better for the practical application of the suggestion to look after the half hours and the pence. It is by careful attention to details, that the noblest building is raised, and in character it is the same. There may be the resolve to give the day to noble labour, but moments may be allowed to drift away unused, which, had they been utilised, might have added something to the welfare and comfort of some suffering human beings. Thought given to the seeming trifles of pence and minutes will almost ensure the proper expenditure of days and pounds, only the thought must not be based upon a painful and pharisaical self-criticism, but upon the nobler foundation of a loving desire to return to the Master the one talent used and blessed.

The problem of dealing with evil for its recovery is, perhaps, the most difficult one which confronts men. Few prison chaplains have studied it more than Mr. Horsley, late of Clerkenwell Gaol. He still occupies himself with the question, and his latest expositions go the startling length of declaring that our prisons are failures; they do not protect society; they do not reform offenders; they do not act as a terror to the corrupt and lawless. Of incurable women, he says, they constitute 31·6 of the total recommitments, and have risen within the last six years from 5673 to 9451. These are distressing facts, and still greater seems the difficulty of knowing how to deal with them.

We are glad to see that a theological professor, writing from Allegheny, and whose paper appears in the current Expositor, sets aside a notion which has had its advocates, that the Apostle when writing to the Thessalonians made more of the Second Advent than he did afterwards. The prominence of the teaching of the Lord's coming arises, he says, from the fact that the letters to the Thessalonians were the only ones which have come down to us which were addressed to an infant community just emerged from heathenism. He holds that the doctrine of the Second Advent was not only one of hope, but furnished an appeal to the consciences, and that in this respect the teaching to the Thessalonians and that to the Athenians were alike. The article deserves attention, although we are not in agreement with some parts of it.

In the same magazine there is an article on Peter's Epistles, by the Bishop of Derry, who, quoting our Lord's words to the Apostle, "when once thou hast turned again strengthen thy brethren," observes that the very word "strengthen" occurs in different form, five times in the two Epistles. But to our thinking the best paper in the number is by Dr. Maclaren, on "Slaying Self, the Foundation Precept of Practical Christianity." Speaking of covetousness (see the catalogue of vices in Col. iii. 5), he says: "When the former evil spirit loses its hold, the latter often takes its place. How many respectable, middle-aged gentlemen are now mainly devoted to making money whose youth was foul with sensual indulgence? When that palled, this came to titillate the jaded desires with a new form of gratification. Covetousness is promoted vice—lust superannuated, 'The which is idolatry.' The lowest form of idolatry is the giving of supreme trust to a material thing, and making that a god. There is no lower form of fetish-worship than this, which is the real working religion to-day of thousands of Englishmen who go masquerading as Christians."

In this month's Chronicle of the London Missionary Society there is a letter from a young missionary in Southern India who says of the villagers whom he had visited that they reply, "You ask us to give up the customs of our fathers; but, if you are in earnest, why are your visits so few and far between, and why are you so few?" This should be an affecting question to the Lord's followers; and should it not be especially heard by theological students who are looking forward at home to what some denominational writers have lately spoken of as an overstocked ministry?

GOSPEL WORK IN HOUNSLOW.

Sir,—The spiritual wants of Hounslow are increasingly great. In view of this, missionary efforts among the lower, middle, and industrial classes have been recently made by a valued friend of working men, Mr. W. E. Whittaker. He lately resigned a paid appointment as Scripture reader in the parish, that he might preach "Christ crucified" without let or hindrance. A room capable of seating from 150 to 200 persons was hired, but this soon became inconveniently crowded, and in a few weeks the work has grown beyond expectation. The Christian public are earnestly asked to assist in raising about £250 to erect a suitable building in which the Gospel services can be carried on. A site for the proposed building has been secured, and the effort will be quite self-supporting as soon as the place is erected. The hon. treasurer is Mr. Edgar Kember, 5, St. Stephen's-road, Hounslow.
—Yours faithfully, Edward Powell.

THE LORD'S WORK AT FIGUERAS.

LAST Saturday half our party went to Villafan (which means "The town of hunger," and is well named, for the people there are perishing for lack of the "Bread of Life") to open a new Sunday-school, and were delighted to have forty children to speak to of Jesus and his love. The priest sent two acolytes to disturb and spy, but we at once saw their intention, and sent them away. The people of the place are like those of Villabertran, and the work promises well. One night recently, at 11.30 p.m., my husband returned home from a village meeting, delighted, to tell us that, notwithstanding the busy harvest-time and overpowering heat, the large room was quite full, even to the back of the platform. Now, considering that those men and women had been working in the fields from 4 a.m. till 8.30 p.m., and at 9 came to the meeting, many looking weary, it is evident that more than curiosity brought them, not to see a magic-lantern, but to hear the simple Gospel.

Last Sunday a lady came to the chapel, brought by one of the converts. She was a nun in the large convent near, and escaped by climbing a wall, which has since been raised six feet or so. Her parents would not receive her into their home, but pay for her to live in lodgings. At the meeting she sat just behind me, and I was glad to see that she joined in the singing, and never took her eyes off the preacher's face. The address seemed made for her, from the words: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thy heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." She said to me at the close: "What beautiful things I have heard to-night. Don Luis preached with so much heart, I think what he said must be the truth. I liked it exceedingly. You know who I am, but I hope you don't mind my coming." On assuring her of a most hearty welcome, she pressed my hand, saying: "Then I shall come next Sunday." Hearing that there was to be a meeting in Villabertran, she walked over, and was present. Do pray that she may be truly converted; it would so brighten her sad life, and be such a joy to us all.—Yours in the Master's work, EMILY LOPEZ RODRIGUEZ.

Figueras, Spain.

REV. THOMAS G. CLARK writes from Odessa, Russia:—"I do not know by what arrangement THE CHRISTIAN has been sent to me for these many years; but, as I am leaving Odessa for good, after twenty-one years' residence, I must express my grateful acknowledgments for so valuable a gift, which I have not confined to myself, but circulated as widely as possible." Will the friend who has been kindly sending THE CHRISTIAN to Mr. Clark please discontinue doing so? We shall be happy to give the address of another missionary to whom it can be sent instead, on application.

PROTECTION OF WILD BIRDS.—The magistrates of the North and the East Ridings of Yorkshire are looking closely after the wild birds, and have applied to the Home Secretary to extend the close time for another month of the year, so as to include the whole of August. The close time from March to August is not sufficient to protect the young birds, as the idiotic persons who find sport in shooting sea-gulls and other visitors to our shores deprive the little fledglings of their parents before they are able to provide for themselves, and the result is the death from starvation of thousands of the tiny "fowls of the air." Why should not the act be widened to make all the year a "close time" for many of our native wild birds and foreign visitants which cannot be used for food. The shooting of them is simply brutal massacre, calling for some such repressive legislation. Many farmers on the coast would doubtless join in this, knowing that the sea-gulls are really their friends, protecting their crops from the ravages of destructive insects. Apart from this, the presence of sea birds adds greatly to the charm of our marine resting-places, and persons interested in attracting visitors should take up the question and form local committees to extend the close time, to obtain for the lovely birds of our coasts and harbours total immunity from wanton slaughter at the hands of cruel and foolish people.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.

COLONEL CLARKE writes:—"In 1875, when I first went to Gibraltar, the Christian soldiers had no place to meet in but a shed behind a shop. This need was so much felt by a few Christian officers that in 1876 they opened a small Institute. The work since then has gradually developed, with God's blessing resting upon it, as manifested by the numerous letters from soldiers and sailors received by our superintendent, Mr. Holmes. Besides being much used by the military, it is well attended by the seamen and marines when any of H.M. ships visit the ports. The overcrowded rooms night after night, especially, the one used for religious gatherings, which is small and oppressively hot, clearly show the need of increased accommodation. It is also the only place of refreshment on the Rock now where intoxicants are not sold."

The work during the past year may be briefly summarised as follows: Bible-class, meetings for prayer and for Gospel addresses, numbering 260; temperance meetings every week, presided over by an officer or minister, at which during the year 470 pledges were taken; classes for soldiers' wives and their children, &c. Mr. Holmes, who is also the Army Scripture reader, paid 210 visits to barrack and guard-rooms, 39 to hospital, and conducted 12 services for the patients. In connection with these visits, and those to Her Majesty's troop ships, 3360 Gospels, tracts, and magazines were distributed, 246 packages of books and magazines were sent to Egypt and India, besides one large case for Alexandria, and one for Suakim.

The unsuitable accommodation, as well as the heavy annual rent of £100, led the Committee to purchase a freehold in the town for £1350. This, however, must be entirely reconstructed, at a further cost of £2000, and to furnish it will require £150 more. To meet this total outlay of £3500, there is in hand £3000, leaving £500 to be raised. It is hoped that the new Institute may be opened as soon as possible free of debt, and all who are interested in the welfare of our soldiers and sailors are invited to assist in this object.

The management of the Institute is ably carried on by Mr. Holmes and his wife, and that it has been a means of spiritual blessing to many is apparent from the many letters received from men in all parts of the world who have been quartered at Gibraltar. For instance, a Lance-Corporal writes from Cairo:—

> "I am sorry to say that the same facilities we had in Gibraltar for attending meetings are not to be met with here, so I miss Gibraltar and the many friends I left there, but, praise the Lord, I have always the same kind, loving Friend near me as I had when I first knew Him."

A Sergeant also writes from Suakim:—

> "When we first came here we had a tent set apart for prayer, and blessed times they were, but our tents were taken away, and then we had a little meeting in the trenches. My earnest desire is that the fruit may increase a hundred fold, for there are many that can say, 'I thank God that I have been in Gibraltar.'"

The hon. treasurer is Colonel H. S. Clarke, 6, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon. We cannot too emphatically express our hope that the needed sum will very soon be given.

BERLIN.—In these days, as in those of Luther, boys go about in the streets of Berlin singing chorales. The City Mission, under the presidency of Herr Stöcker, Court preacher, has taken this up for evangelistic work. The boys meet for practice under an accredited leader twice a week. They all wear a sort of uniform, consisting of a grey cloak, which covers up all deficiencies and varieties of clothing, and a black hat. Every out-going is preceded by prayer. The singing generally takes place in the house courtyard, and is almost without exception welcomed. At the close a collection is made on behalf of the Mission; the boys receive a small remuneration monthly. The Sunday-school, under the direction of the Mission, is making good progress, and now numbers 10,000 children.—City Mission Report.

CHURCH REFORM IN ITALY.

ON the 14th inst. a drawing-room meeting was held, by kind permission of Dr. and Mrs. Schofield, at 141, Westbourne-terrace, to hear a statement by Count Enrico di Campello concerning his work in Rome since he resigned his canonry of St. Peter's. The second son of a noble Umbrian family, Count Enrico was destined to Holy Orders, in virtue of a family compact with the Sovereign Pontiff, rather than by his personal choice. But his career once marked out, he pursued it with a zeal which brought him at an early age to the notice of Pius IX. On his leaving the Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics, when he had obtained his degree as Doctor of Divinity, the Pope conferred upon him a canonry in the Liberian Basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore, from which he was translated, six years later, to the like dignity in the Patriarchal Basilica of S. Pietro in Vaticano.

A canon's stall in one of these greater Roman Basilicas gives time for study, if the occupant likes to avail himself of it; and the young Umbrian canon was also fortunate in his friendships among elder members of the dignified clergy. To these men Count Campello owed in part his gradual enlightenment, with the result that he resigned, into the hands of Leo XIII, the position conferred upon him by Pius IX. He was also influenced by the existing corruptions in the modern Roman Church, and the consequent need for reforms.

In common with all Italy of his day, he read Rosmini's powerful treatise on "The Five Wounds of the Church," and he said to his friends, "Surely it is a great thing that one of our clergy should have so told the truth." To this Audisio replied, "Rosmini has indeed told the truth, but not the whole truth." Thus he saw that there was more yet to be done ere the Italians could worship in spirit and in truth. In seceding from Papal Rome, and remaining in the Eternal City, there to plant the banner of Reform, he invented nothing new, but simply put into practice what his friends and teachers—some living, some dead—had maintained in theory.

It is, perhaps, little known or understood in England how long and how earnestly a reforming school among the Italian clergy, living and dying in communion with Rome, has yet kept alive in Italy the sense of a need for Reform, the times and the seasons of which they were content to leave in God's hands. "This is God's work," they said, "and He will find his own time for it." When he came out from Papal Rome, Count Campello believed this time had come, and he believes so still. He claims for his fellow-countrymen the right to purify their Church, to worship in their own tongue, and to enjoy their glorious heritage—the Bible He believes that their hearts may be reached by a national Italian mission, as no foreigners could hope to reach them. The State has bound the Church hand and foot, and delivered it over to the Pope and his Curia. For thousands of souls in the manufacturing centres of Italy no spiritual provision is made either by State or Pope. Amongst these Count Campello would take an Italian Bible, and establish an Italian Church. In this work he prays England to help him, believing that the gifts which she may make to Italy will be returned unto her a thousand-fold.

At the close of Count Campello's earnest and impassioned appeal, the meeting was addressed by the Bishop of Mauritius, by Admiral Fishbourne, R.N., C.B., and by Mr. C. H. E. Carmichael, who had very ably rendered the substance of the Count's address into English.

YOKOHAMA.—DEAR SIR,—Kindly permit me to return through the medium of your paper, my sincere thanks to the kind friends who have for several weeks past been mailing me copies of your valuable paper. It has proved a very useful addition to our stock of reading matter in the Mission reading-room, and has been much enjoyed by ourselves.—I am, yours most truly,

W. I. AUSTEN, Seamen's Missionary.

BLUEJACKETS and SOLDIERS, S. AFRICA.

Simon's Town is the port and dockyard for the Royal Naval vessels of the West Africa and Cape of Good Hope station, and always contains a large number of soldiers and sailors, which is occasionally abnormally increased when a troopship may arrive. To meet the wants of these the town has eleven places (including bottle stores) where intoxicants are sold; but not one temperance house, where a cup of coffee and a night's lodging may be secured by the sailors who have leave to remain ashore.

We are happy to say that in our army and navy there is a continually increasing number of men who are struggling to live lives of temperance and purity, and who will not use any existing accommodation. For these men we, as Christians, have hitherto made no provision.

As a little section of the Christian community, we have therefore resolved no longer to shirk our responsibility, but to remedy this evil. This must be done by providing a Home for our Soldiers and Sailors, affording a night's lodging and a meal, or temperance refreshments, at a small cost, with the comforts of a home, the use of a reading-room, and rooms for religious exercise or those who might wish to utilise them. A weak timid scheme providing insufficient accommodation n unsuitable premises would never do. To succeed, we must provide suitable premises, and set the scheme going on a sound financial basis, secure rom future collapse. Our little Wesleyan Society nd our naval and military adherents are pledged o do their best; but their resources are small, and lready more than fully taxed, and are utterly nadequate for grappling at all with so large an ndertaking without outside help. The scheme is ot merely local. Situated as a kind of Gibraltar f the Indian and Southern Oceans, Simon's Town s occupied solely as a naval station (it would have o existence otherwise), to guard the commerce of he west with the east—with India, China and ustralia.

English contributions may be sent through Rev. . W. Allen, Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, .C.

HURCH OF ENGLAND BOOK SOCIETY.

HE annual meeting of this Society was held on the 3th inst. at the offices, 11, Adam-street, Strand. Ir. Francis P. Labilliere presided, supported by aptain the Hon. F. Maude, R.N., Rev. Dr. 'B.ien, and others.

The position of the Society is satisfactory, and he grants of the past year have been bestowed far nd wide, not only in our own land but also in stant colonies; but there is a wide field before e Society, and its operations could be immeasurbly extended if funds were forthcoming. The alue of the books, &c., distributed during the year £1635. The free grants of theological books ade to poorer clergy are an important branch of e Society's work, and it is essential that the ounger clergy especially should possess books cessary for their work, and yet many of them e totally unable to purchase them. The free rants of books made to the clergy of poor parishes, well as to Sunday-schools, working men's clubs, d young men's and young women's institutes, hich in so many cases lack good books, have been reatly valued as is evidenced by the letters received lating thereto.

MECKLENBURG-SCHWERIN.—A circular from e Public Instruction Department of this duchy rbids the use of any Bible other than that translated by Luther in the schools.

SCOTTISH EVANGELISTIC ASSOCIATION.— pursuance of the special object to evangelise mote country districts, this Association has conded a successful mission in and around the small llage of Cruden, in Aberdeenshire. Mr. Somerset ardner was the evangelist, and the meetings were ranged by Rev. N. C. Macfarlane, whose heart s thoroughly in the good work. Every night r two weeks meetings were held in school-room, rmhouse, church, and cottage, at which deep pression was produced. The district undertaken a wide one, and the people are far scattered. cept at one meeting in a fishing village, the ople addressed were wholly agricultural. The ends were sorry to lose Mr. Gardner. Many arts had been stirred, and the good work will ubtless go on. Mr. Gardner began a three eks' mission in Perth on the 17th inst.

A FEW FACTS about the INQUISITION.

The paper which appeared in The Christian of April 29, entitled, "Rome, the Murderess," shows conclusively that some of the Spanish clergy desire and expect the re-introduction of the Inquisition, without any modification of its horrors; and we cannot doubt that their feelings are shared by the leaders of the Roman Church, when we remember that one of those elevated to the rank of Saint by Pius IX., in 1867, was a Spanish Inquisitor who condemned 2300 heretics to death. These facts make it morally certain that Rome has not outgrown the Inquisition, but is quite ready to establish it in any part of the world, and therefore it behoves us to keep the real character of that diabolical institution constantly before our minds.

Some valuable help in that direction can be gleaned from a Roman Catholic book published at Madrid about a century ago, and evidently much esteemed by Spanish Catholics, as it passed through at least eleven editions. "Moral Directory," by Rev. Father Francisco Echarri, of the Order of St. Francis, revised by Rev. Father Antonio Lopez Munoz, Director of Studies in the College of the Immaculate Conception in the City of Murcia, &c. Madrid, 1787. The second volume contains a section entitled, "About Informations to the Holy Tribunal of the Inquisition" (pp. 590—601); and this "tractate," as it is called, has furnished almost all the material for this paper.

The reverend authors are, of course, not very explicit in this part of their work, as the Inquisition has always "loved the darkness rather than the light," and inconvenient clearness might have led to unpleasant familiarity with the Holy Office. Nevertheless, the dozen pages with which we are favoured are exceedingly suggestive, and a few extracts may help us to realise in some measure what life is like under the rule of the Inquisition. All persons who have reached years of discretion, whether men or women, whether laymen or ecclesiastics, whatever their degree or quality—for even kings and princes are not exempted—are under obligation to report offenders to the Holy Office (p. 592). No one is excused from giving information in a case of heresy or apostasy because of near relationship. If the offender is merely guilty of heretical blasphemy, of saying, for instance, "I deny Christ and his Gospels," or of superstition, or of abuse of the Sacraments, or of improper use of the Confessional, a relative is not bound to lodge information; but if a man or woman is guilty of formal heresy or apostasy from the faith, the wife must name the husband, or the husband the wife, the parent must name the child, or the child the parent, &c. (p. 599, also p. 65). This shows that Longfellow's horrible picture of the father giving up his daughters "to the flame, the secret torture and the public shame" is not overdrawn.

The offenders who ought to be named to the Inquisition are arranged in eleven classes as follow:—

(1) Heretics, or persons suspected of heresy.

(2) Schismatics, that is, persons who deny the primacy of the Holy Catholic Roman Church, and forsake the union of the members with the head, which is the Pope, saying that he is not the lawful superior (p. 593).

(3) Apostates, or renegades (p. 593).

(4) Those who propound "depraved propositions" appertaining to the holy office, amongst others those who defend, teach or preach any one of more than 160 propositions condemned by certain Popes (p. 594). Lists of these are given elsewhere in the volume, probably for the guidance of priests (pp 570 589).

(5) Lay-brothers, &c., who exceed their powers in certain specified ways (p. 595).

(6 and 7) Priests who misuse the confessiona (p. 595).

(8) Those who interfere with the annual reading of the Edict of the Inquisition (p. 595).

(9) All superstitious persons, necromancers, augurs, astrologers, wizards, &c. (pp. 595-6).

(10) All those who mix foul words with religious worship; those who say that bells in churches are abominable, &c. (p. 596).

(11) All those who read, defend or retain books or writings of heretics which contain things contrary to the faith, or which treat of religion; and also those who read or retain books of Catholic authors which have been prohibited by the Holy Tribunal for containing heresy or suspicion of false doctrine, inasmuch as all who read or keep them are suspected of heresy. Persons who keep prohibited books, without permission or licence, are bound, no matter what their position, to reveal them, and give them up to the Holy Office within a specified period. Confessors are ordered to ask each penitent whether he or she possesses any book or books which the Church has prohibited (pp. 596-7).

The crime of heresy of course demands special consideration, and its treatment gives us a curious glimpse of Roman Catholic morality. Heresy is to be reported even though it be so secret that no proof can be produced (p. 592). If a person knows another to be a heretic through personal observation (more literally "because he sees or hears it"), and promises at the delinquent's request not to reveal it, he is bound to reveal it notwithstanding, because before he gave the promise he was under obligation to inform against heretics (p. 593). If a heretic confesses his heresy to a priest the priest must not disclose it, provided the offender be penitent; in other cases the obligation of secrecy does not bind him (pp. 593-4).

These extracts give us some awful glimpses of Spanish life under Roman Catholic influence not quite a hundred years ago, showing how ruthlessly the Inquisition of the priesthood trampled on the closest and tenderest relationships of human life; how they made light of the most sacred obligations; and how intolerably they trammelled the movements of the inquiring intellect. Fidelity, affection, and gratitude were crimes instead of virtues, when they shielded heretics, and a gross violation of the moral law was a far less heinous offence in the eyes of the Inquisitors than heresy, even when it was secret, and accompanied by a blameless life. Yet that, or something like that, is the goal which the Roman Church is endeavouring to reach, and hoping to reach, in these islands. English Protestants ought to realise this, and not remain silent and apathetic while Romanism is spreading stealthily but rapidly at the old universities, and amongst the aristocracy, and when there seems a near prospect of Roman ascendancy in Ireland.

DECAZEVILLE, where such grievous troubles have taken place owing to the prolonged strike of the miners, was lately visited by a colporteur with Bibles and New Testaments. He sold all the Bibles and a large number of the New Testaments and Gospels, besides giving away 4000 tracts, which were literally almost torn out of his hands.—Le Témoin de la Vérité.

PAISLEY.—Mr. William Dunn, of London, late Liberal candidate for West Renfrewshire, on the 12th inst. formally handed over to the managers the title-deeds of a new mission hall erected in Paisley, at a cost of nearly £4000, for the further prosecution of missionary work in connection with Canal-street United Presbyterian Church. A soirée was held in the new building, at which the Rev. Dr. Hutton presided, and in the course of an address Mr. Dunn presented the title-deeds of the building, which he stated was "in memory of a loving and good mother." Dr Hutton accepted the gift on behalf of the managers, and expressed their gratitude to Mr. Dunn.

DIFFICULTIES IN DEMERARA.

We extract the following from a letter recently received from our friend Mrs. Huntley, Georgetown, Demerara:—

The wonder is that my husband lives through so much suffering for so long a period, now nearly three years. What he passes through is indescribable; and his rheumatism has now become chronic.

The Red Indians needed to be visited, and none of our fellow missionaries were at liberty to go, and, as my husband's kind hostess offered with her son to do all they could for him, I took the journey. It was a very trying time for me, having to take such long journeys in a small open boat, and under circumstances without any means at my command to hire boat hands, yet the Lord went before me, and prepared the way. His leadings and help were so marked, more so than ever I have known them before. I was amply paid for any inconvenience I had, to see the joy of the people at seeing me, and thankfulness to think I had come to read God's Word to them, saying, "this must be love to come such a long journey." I had little groups around me from place to place, and miles apart, for the people are few and far between. We sang Mr. Sankey's hymns; some were eager to learn new tunes, and were delighted with "Sing them over again to me." They went long distances to get provisions to help me on my journey.

I was often caught in heavy tropical rains, and in thunder-storms, and fearful lightning, yet the Lord preserved me. On two occasions I was disappointed of boat hands, and once had to pull with two little girls some four miles. Another time I had to steer with a paddle, and no rudder to the boat. Night came on, but we got safe to the hut of an Indian, where we hung up our hammocks, and he very kindly got another young man to go with him to take us on another stage. We had to start at 2 o'clock in the morning, and only those who travel at night can understand the feeling and longing for the sight of the morning star, but best of all our thoughts were carried forward with longing for that bright and glorious morning star, and with joy unspeakable could say—

> Soon will rise the day star,
> Soon will dawn the day,
> Soon will earth's dark shadows
> For ever flee away.

Henry Taylor has done a good work among the Arrawak Indians, speaking and preaching to them in their own tongue. He had to pull me up a common ladder to the sleeping apartment. I had to stay with them from Saturday till Monday, and then two days in the steamer to get to Georgetown. I cannot forget the kindness of these dear people, and the hospitality they showed me in a humble way. When I arrived in Georgetown, I found my husband there before me, very feeble and helpless, and myself in such a state that I had to see a doctor, we are no help to each other. But we can only speak well of the Lord's goodness towards us.

CLAPTON PARK TABERNACLE.—On Tuesday evening Mr. Henry Varley preached in this place, choosing for his subject, "Grace." A gracious influence rested upon the congregation, and the word was with power. At the close of the service Mr. Varley invited all who had received blessing during the service, and were willing to confess Christ, to stand up, when sixteen adults stood up in response to the invitation. Much earnest prayer had been offered by the members that the visit of Mr. Varley might be made a great blessing to many precious souls, and now that we have received an answer to our prayer, we ask the readers of The Christian to join us in praise to God for the blessing bestowed upon our work. Many wanderers have been reclaimed of late, and are now added to the Lord.

The Book World.

The chief feature in the July number of The New Princeton Review (2s. Hodder & Stoughton) is some reminiscences of Carlyle, by Professor Eliot Norton, of Harvard. The article is very interesting, and throws a favourable light on the character of the Sage of Chelsea. High praise must be given to the able papers and careful editing of this Review.

The Sacrifice of Praise, compiled by An Invalid (2s. S. R. Briggs, Toronto), consists of thirty-one separate sheets, each containing a verse of Scripture and a hymn, with references to other helpful passages, for every day in the month, mounted on roller for hanging up. It will doubtless prove a source of comfort in many a sick room as it has been to the author.

The Gospel Treasury. Compiled by Robert Mimpriss. Third edition. 12s. The Bible Depository, 67, Paternoster-row. Great as has been the success of this valuable work, it deserves more. It should be in the study of every minister and Sabbath-school teacher. It gives in addition to an expository harmony of the four Evangelists, Scripture illustrations of the various texts, practical reflections, and a series of admirable charts.

The Philosophy of Voice. By Charles Lunn. Fifth Edition, enlarged. Baillière, Tindall & Cox. An admirable little book, setting forth the whole theory of the production and cultivation of the voice in a clear and comprehensive way. Whether we agree with the "old methods" of training the voice or the new, it is evident that Mr. Lunn has devoted a large amount of care and thought to his work. He is an eminent teacher at Birmingham, and the best test of his method lies in the amount of success attained by his pupils.

John Conscience of Kingseal. By Rev. John M. Bamford. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. This is a story of the right kind. It has a definite lesson to teach; its style is fresh and bracing; and its conversations are as bright as a summer afternoon. It may be called a parabolic sermon on the truths that the only real rule of life is the will of God, and that the only real satisfaction of life is in keeping it. Its merit is so great that we can confidently recommend it as one of the best books that could be placed in the hands of a young man entering on business.

Apologetics; or, The Scientific Vindication of Christianity. By J. H. A. Ebrard, Ph.D., D.D., Erlangen. Translated by Rev. Wm. Stuart, B.A., and Rev. John Macpherson, M.A. 10s. 6d. T & T. Clark. Preachers in our day often make the mistake of thinking that they must meet the enemies of truth on their own ground, not on God's. They read up science and philosophy, and proportionately neglect the Bible. To some extent they should be acquainted with the current of modern thought, but their great study and one weapon should be the Word of God. What they need to know about scientific theories, and how to rebut them, are furnished here by Professor Ebrard. His scholarship is wide, his logic keen, and his conclusions are always worthy of attention.

MORE JULY PERIODICALS.

Our Darlings (3d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) is sure to be a favourite with the children. Its pictures and stories are just what they like to see and read.

The Sword and Trowel (3d. Passmore & Alabaster) is as bright and racy as ever. The article on a holiday in New Zealand, by Thomas Spurgeon, is very interesting.

Eastward, Ho! (6d. Swan Sonnenschein & Co) abounds in descriptions of what is being done to elevate the masses. It advocates some wise schemes, which have for their object the welfare of the poor.

The Christian Treasury (6d. E. W. Allen) has a striking article on "Decision for Christ," by Cheyne Brady, and Mrs. Evered Poole has commenced a new story. We are sure that anything which comes from her pen will be found worth reading. We advise our readers to get it, especially as we understand the story is true. The magazine is of a thoroughly evangelical character.

BURTON, WESTMORELAND, Y.W.C.A.—Mrs. Legg, of Harrow, has just concluded a week's mission here. It has been a very happy time, the meetings increasing each day. At the praise meeting quite a number rose to testify of definite blessing received. Mrs. Legg has also been holding meetings in Kendal, Penrith, Keswich, Appleby, and Carlisle, all in connection with this Association.

REV. DR. MUNHALL, of Indianapolis, has been holding remarkable meetings in Denvers, Colorado. Whether men only, women only, or a mixed audience, some 2000 persons gathered night after night at the Mammoth Skating Rink. His utterances on such subjects as "The Model Woman," Total Abstinence, or Purity of Life, were powerful and bold, producing deep impressions upon his hearers.

THE GOSPEL IN THE ITALIAN ARMY.

Although but few of the many visitors to Rome have sought out the soldiers' meeting, yet the work itself is progressing greatly. The soldiers have found a lodging in which meetings can be held at the Camp of B——, and are expecting Cav. Capellini's arrival, as also many soldiers at Civita Vecchia; in August there are other camps to be visited, and this part of his work is not only most valuable in spreading the seed of the Word of God in many regiments which have never been brought under his influence in Rome, but is especially useful as a preparatory work in those regiments which are to pass the following winter there, as the men thus become acquainted with him and his colporteur, and some begin at once to attend the meetings on their arrival, thus forming the nucleus of a fresh ingathering of precious souls. Will Christians remember Cav. Capellini at this time, that he may "go forward" without anxiety in pecuniary matters, and thus bear the glad tidings to many young soldiers who have never yet heard the Gospel in its purity and simplicity? There is truly an "open door." Will you assist him to enter in? Contributions can be sent to Miss M. C. Bryce, Gordonston, York-road, Bournemouth.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The increased use of strong drink is a growing curse among the people of India.

The Band of Hope Review urges Bands of Hope to adapt their meetings and general work to the summer months, and not to suspend them.

Mr. John Abbey's paper on "Beer in the Hay and Harvest Fields" is now published as a pamphlet. It ought to be widely circulated in farming districts.

Rev. Canon Ellison stated, recently, a lady of rank had told him of seventeen persons in her own station who had fallen into the lowest degradation through drink.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen attended the recent fête of the Hibernian Band of Hope Union. Lady Aberdeen distributed the prizes, and addressed the children in a homely and interesting speech.

Mrs. Leavitt, of the American Women's Christian Temperance Union, is on a tour round the world for the establishment of Women's Temperance Unions. She has had great success in Australia.

Dr. D. V. Lucas, M.A., of Canada, delivered two effective lectures, recently, in the Wesleyan Mission Hall, Liverpool. He gave his experience of Prohibition in Canada. There were large audiences.

The Colonial and International Congress on "Inbriety," arranged for by the Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriey, has, in consequence of the General Election, been postponed till Parliament meets.

Sir Charles Warren says the success of the Army division of the Church of England Temperance Society, in a certain barracks, caused the goodwill of neighbouring public-houses to fall from £1100 to £600 or £700.

The Duchess of Sutherland recently gave an "At Home," at Stafford House, in aid of the Women's Union of the Church of England Temperance Society. Hopes are expressed that the Princess of Wales will do likewise.

Mr. H. H. Bancroft, in his "Indian Races on the Pacific Coast," shows the ancient Aztecs were savagely severe on the intemperate. A noble was hanged for the first offence, and his body cast into a stream used for that purpose only.

Mrs. Temple, wife of the Bishop of London, gives servants "so much to cover everything, and says nothing of beer money or anything else separately." She asks, "Why should you give beer money more than butter money?"

At a Rechabite meeting in New Zealand, lately, Sir George Grey said, "Old as he was, he had never yet tasted spirits in his life." By preventing his men obtaining spirits, he had, "in unhealthy climates, carried them through great privations without having one sick man to nurse."

A PRINCE MISSIONARY.—The nephew of the late King Cetewayo, brought to the true faith through missionary effort in South Africa, was sent to Stockholm for his education, after remaining there six years, he has now returned as missionary to his own country.—Témoignage.

FLEURANCE, GERS, FRANCE.—The evangelical movement in this place (amongst the Roman Catholics) continues to extend and to take root. A private letter to M. Pozzi says that these conferences have been the means of blessing. Twenty children attend the Sunday-school, notwithstanding the strong opposition of the priests who have taken steps to prevent anything being bought of the shopkeepers who attend the meetings, nor to employ the work people or give alms to the poor.

Letters to the Editor.

THE SABBATH FOR POSTMEN.

Sir,—A large number of letters are posted each Saturday and consequently delivered the following day—Sunday; but the senders would be quite satisfied if the letters reached their destination by Monday morning. Kindly allow me to suggest that those who write letters for the post on Saturday should, in every possible case, also write on the envelope, "Not for Sunday Delivery." This would save a great deal of unnecessary Sabbath labour, and prove a blessing to many a tired post-office official. Such a plan might with advantage be commended to their members by the various religious organisations.

Brecon. Every Little Helps.

A NEW WAY OF HELPING THE POOR.

Dear Sir,—In a recent number of The Christian I read a notice commendatory of a German-made pea-soup slab, as suitable for charitably-disposed persons to give away instead of money. I am much interested in the suggestion, as it is not a new one to me. Some months ago I heard of and obtained an agency for Edward's Desiccated Soup. This soup is highly nutritious, being used for strengthening persons who are recovering from sickness, and is sold in 1 oz. packets at 1d. each. Each packet makes a large basin-full of rich soup. Being deeply interested in work among the poor at the Evangelistic Hall, James Morrison-street, Glasgow, and in the tent connected therewith, and often asked for assistance, the thought occurred to me, why not give them packets of soup instead of money? I acted on this thought, and have suggested it to others, and given some of our lady workers a box of packets to try the experiment. The name of F. King & Co., Waring-street, Belfast, and Bishopsgate-avenue, London, appears on the circulars.

I have been heartlessly deceived repeatedly by those I sought to help, and am only too glad to have a substitute for money which is easily carried about. Others I know have suffered similarly to myself, and I doubt not will be glad of any suggestion that will help them out of a difficulty.

DEACON ABRAHAM AND HIS ORPHANAGES.—Since his return home, Deacon Abraham has been suffering with much weakness and pain of body, and his burden has been increased by the great need of funds for his orphanages. The winter in Persia has been unusually long, and a frost, quite phénomenal as to intensity and lateness in the season, has almost totally destroyed the hope of the grape crop, upon which the orphans largely depend for support. To endeavour to raise funds for this sorely tried servant of God, a sale of work will be held on Bank Holiday, August 2, in the Waterloo Workman's Hall, near Andover, Hants. The sale has originated with those who, having no money to give, have given their time, and many who have the care of families have been busily at work. Contributions of articles will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover, Hants. All kinds of articles will be acceptable, especially those that can be offered at a low price, as no raffling or distribution by chance of any kind will be permitted.

SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN AND MARINERS.—The forty-seventh annual general meeting of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society was held at the Sailors' Home, Dock-street, London, E., Thursday, July 8, Captain the Hon. Francis Maude in the chair. In their annual report, read by the Secretary, Mr. W. R. Buck, the Committee commented on the satisfactory diminution, during 1885, in the general shipping casualties (1996, compared with 2216 in 1884). Reference was further made, however, to some sadly instructive figures, lately issued by the Board of Trade, putting the aggregate number of masters and seamen lost at sea during the nine years ending June 30, 1885, at 14,633, belonging to vessels of the United Kingdom, other than Her Majesty's ships and fishing vessels, and 2435 from fishing vessels alone, or a total of no less than 17,068 of our own mariners thus lost within the one period in question. The Society's relief had been extended to 11,379 shipwrecked and distressed sufferers, and widows and orphans, &c., in 1885, the number of 373,239 sufferers so aided by the Society since its institution in 1839; numerous rewards for saving life at sea were likewise granted during the year. The Committee make a very earnest appeal for continued sympathy and support.

RAMBLING ROB AT ALDERSHOT.

The sergeant of a West Country regiment; a bronzed old corporal returning from furlough after lengthened foreign service; a civilian who has evidently been a soldier; and myself.

The other three go over their old campaigns again, and then, as the train nears Aldershot, the sergeant asks the civilian if he knows the landlord of a certain public-house.

"I don't," is the somewhat curt reply; "I never use 'pubs' now."

"Do you know Miss Daniell's place?"

"I am happy to say I do; I was there two or three nights last week, and if I can get away, I shall be there again to-night; that is my 'pub.'"

Ah, then in the ideas of men like these, "The Home" is opposed to the public-house. "Just give me your hand, friend;" and the ex-artillery-man and I make an agreement to meet at "The Home" for the service that he tells me is advertised to be held to-night; for who, knowing anything of an Aldershot public-house, with its manifold allurements to ruin, would hesitate to encourage a good fellow like this to shun the snares spread for a young man's feet in such a dangerous place. This conversation has made me believe in "The Home" more than ever, and as I silently contrast its associations with those of what my travelling companion has just called "The Pub," the voice of prayer with that of blasphemy, the sound of praise with the song of the drunkard, the salvation which the man seems to have found at the one with the damnation which necessarily connects itself with the other, I breathe the prayer, "God bless The Home."

D. M. B. ——, another of these Cambridge men! God bless those dear fellows out in China. I knew this gentleman when at "Corpus," he was one of the best left-handed bowlers in the University. A simple address in plain Saxon, and to the point. What will be the result? "Are there any here who, still outside the kingdom of God, would like to cross the line, to-night? If there are, let such just raise the hand."

Three hands go up in response to this appeal, and the first of these is that of a Papist. He has never been to "The Home" till now, but it has evidently been the hand of God that has brought him up to-night. The young preacher kneels by his side, and, having learnt some little of his history, finds that he has grown weary of the bondage of Rome without learning the way of salvation through Christ. Prayer, conversation and instruction follow, and we believe God has given his blessing. Miss Daniell herself has been dealing with another. I do not know who has spoken to the third; but, as they tell me that this kind of work is carried on, night after night, from year's end to year's end, while those who have no taste for the services are left free to amuse themselves in other parts of "The Home," I once more say, "God bless 'The Home,'" and her who ministers in it, together with all those who share with her these many labours of love.

DUNDEE.—Mr. and Mrs. C. King's mission here is being much blessed. Night after night the tent is filled and souls are saved, and every afternoon the Bible-reading at the Y.M.C.A. is attended by from two to three hundred people; the mission will be continued till the end of the month.

THE ANNUAL TEMPERANCE FETE at the Crystal Palace, attended by over 40,000 persons, on the 13th instant. was vested with more than usual interest by the presence of several colonial visitors, to whom a "reception luncheon" was given in connection with the British and Colonial Temperance Congress, convened by the National Temperance League. The refreshment department was, as usual, brought into harmony with the occasion. Meetings of religious and denominational Temperance organisations took place, as well as open-air services for the preaching of the Gospel. Various amusements were also provided, muscular and choral, which all contributed to the enjoyment of the day.

SPANIARDS AT TURANCON.

About fifteen years ago this work was begun by Antoine Marin, a companion in tribulation of Manuel Matamoros. Like him, he was exiled for reading the Bible, and seeking to distribute it. After a slight interruption, caused by Marin's death, the work was taken up under the superintendence of Pastor Pozzy, of Pau, and his wife. In 1884 a God-sent evangelist, Señor Toribia, and his wife, began to labour among the Spanish population. Gospel meetings are conducted twice a week. At the end of May, when the wheat harvest begins in Spain, many of the men leave Turançon to help in harvest work. Before starting, they are well supplied with religious tracts, which they distribute among their friends and compatriots. A mothers' meeting, led by Mesdames Pozzy and Toribia, is much appreciated by the women. The Sunday-school numbers over thirty boys—not a single girl is among them, the reason being that the only girls' school in the neighbourhood is conducted by Roman Catholic sisters, who insist upon attendance at their Sunday-school. The girls would be without education if this were not complied with; it is, therefore, extremely desirable that a week-day school should be set on foot. Some help towards this has been offered, but more is earnestly sought. In the meantime, Señor Toribia, having observed that many of the men could neither read nor write, invited them to meet him for instruction twice a week. About thirty have responded to the invitation. It is believed the Gospel has been received by some, their lives being consistent with their profession.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—July 25, Acts xxi. 15—26; July 26, xxi. 27—40; July 27, xxii. 1—16; July 28, xxii. 17—30; July 29, xxiii. 1—11; July 30, xxiii. 12—22; July 31, xxiii. 23—35.

SWITZERLAND.—Mr. John Bain writes from the little village of Les Ponts, in the Jura, 3000 feet higher than the sea:—"I can walk to France in some three hours. The English do not come here. The family life is pure, and all is very nice. Everyone is in the watch trade, and a good many of them are their own masters. I am surprised at the large numbers of Christians in the village. There are two churches—the Established and Free. Few go to the first, but the Free is well filled, and living Christians are in it. There is only one sermon on the Sunday, but the Christians and seekers meet in the evening in a large room, and conduct a sort of an open meeting. A leader begins with singing and prayer, then reads the Word and speaks a little, after which the brethren take up the Word or engage in prayer; all is done so nicely that one cannot help loving this evening hour. This meeting was begun by a woman, now in glory, whose husband presided last night, and many present at that meeting owe their conversion to her. They speak of their friends as Christians or non-Christians. Altogether they are a most delightful people, and love God in the true old way.

Y.M.C.A., FINSBURY PARK.—The Lord has of late greatly blessed his work here, and our souls are more than grateful for the results we have seen. Some weeks ago a few of God's children met together to ask for special blessing upon this branch of the Association, and He has graciously answered our request. The following Sunday one soul accepted Christ through the open-air mission, and on the Monday, at the reception meeting, a young Dutch lad came in most anxious to be saved, and after he had been shown the love of God to him, he yielded himself to his Lord, and is now a bright Christian. But our greatest blessings were on Sunday and Monday evenings, July 11 and 12. On Sunday two lads in a Sunday-school class of a gathering near the hall were converted through the little leaflets distributed by our Tract Society, and three souls were converted at the evangelistic service in the hall in the evening. I have seen one of them. I rejoice to say he is most decisive for Christ. After the reception meeting on Monday last a young backsliding brother decided to return to the Shepherd's fold. At the suggestion of one of our number we have started a weekly subscription list of contributions from a penny upwards, open to Christians only, to diminish the debt of £600 still remaining on our hall, and we sincerely trust that ere long we may be free of debt

SUNDAY, JULY 25.—2 SAMUEL XVI.

4.—Then said the king, &c.—"Another instance of David's hasty temper (see 1 Sam. xxv. 13.)"—Sp. Com. General remarks.—(1) "David bore Shimei's curses much better than Ziba's flatteries; by these he was brought to pass a wrong judgment on another; by those to pass a right judgment on himself. The world's smiles are more dangerous than its frowns."—Henry and Scott. (2) Shimei's charge was more than untrue. It was the exact opposite of the truth, seeing that David had dealt so magnanimously with Saul and his house. Nevertheless, David is quiet and patient. Sometimes, those who are steeped in guilt, when wrongfully charged with some minor offence, assume the spirit and manner of aggrieved innocence. In their eyes, their real sins are as nothing to the wrong done to them in laying this false or mistaken charge to their account. Not so with David. "Shimei unjustly upbraided him with the blood of Saul; from that his conscience acquitted him, but, at the same time, charged him with the blood of Uriah. A humble, tender spirit will turn reproaches into reproofs, and so get good from them instead of being provoked by them."—Henry and Scott. (3) "David saw God in every circumstance, and owned Him with a subdued and reverent spirit. To him, it was not Shimei, but the Lord. Abishai saw only the man, and desired to deal with him accordingly. . . . David looked right up to God, and with unshod feet and covered head he bowed before Him. . . . We are constantly ensnared by looking at second causes: we do not realise God in everything. Hence Satan gets the victory over us."—C. H. M. (4) Absalom's question: "Is this thy kindness to thy friend?" reminds us that when Christ's people forsake Him in weak deference to the opinion of worldly friends, those very friends are usually the first to sneer at their unfaithfulness, and to ask, Is this your love to Christ?

MONDAY, JULY 26.—2 SAMUEL XVII.

3—The man whom thou seekest, &c.—I.e., all depends on the person of David. When he is slain all the people will return. "Absalom had knowingly subjected himself to the inevitable necessity of taking his father's life, and he only desired to learn how that object might be most effectually secured. A council was held on this question, and it is the first cabinet council to which history admits us."—Kitto. We imagine that the idea of taking his father's life would have filled Absalom with horror not very long before. He began by allowing vanity to overpower him. Then he coveted the glory of the kingdom, till the purpose of gaining it possessed him. From that time the murder of David grew to be a simple necessity. Just so men begin by loving the world in preference to Christ. Gradually, as ungodly habits and purposes strengthen, they are brought into more direct and conscious antagonism with the God of love, until that negative enmity against God which rules in every unrenewed heart, and which shows itself in a general dislike of what is distinctly godly, become positive and habitual.

8—13—"For, said Hushai," &c.—"It is likely that Absalom was not a man of courage, and Hushai, knowing this, adroitly magnified the terror of the warlike prowess of David and his mighty men. He evidently adapted his speech to the vainglorious, boastful, but weak character of Absalom, in the magniloquent expressions of verses 10—13"—Sp. Com.

Our readers should observe the parallel between Ahithophel and Judas. See Ps. lv. Also the impotence of the highest worldly wisdom when unblest by God. "Except the Lord build the house," &c. "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom when he sees him who was so great an oracle dying as a fool dies" Further, note in what a wonderful way the incidents of this chapter answer David's prayer, xv. 31. "Prayer is answered, and an honest cause served even by its enemies."

TUESDAY, JULY 27.—2 SAMUEL XVIII.

1—And David numbered, &c.—The word used here means rather to muster or review. We must suppose that a considerable time has elapsed since the events of the last chapter.

3.—Thou art worth ten thousand of us.—Compare Cant. v. 10, "The chiefest among ten thousand."

5.—Deal gently . . . with Absalom.—"How does David render good for evil! Absalom would have only David smitten; David would have only Absalom spared. What foils are these to each other."—Henry and Scott.

6.—The wood of Ephraim.—"Apart from any other considerations, the wood of Ephraim would naturally be sought in the west of Jordan, in the tract described Josh. xvii. 15—18, where the same word for wood is used as here. But, on the other hand, it seems certain that the scene of this battle was on the east of Jordan. . . It seems inevitable to conclude that some portion of the thick wood of oaks and terebinths, which still runs down to the Jordan on the east side, was for some reason called the wood of Ephraim."—Sp. Com.

8.—The wood devoured more, &c.—"The woody region was most likely full of ravines, precipices, and marshes, into which the flying foe was pursued, and where so many perished."—Kiel and Delitzsch.

9.—The mule went under . . . his head caught, &c.—No doubt his head was caught in the fork of some branch. Probably, too, he would be stunned. Observe, the text says nothing about his hanging by his hair. That idea comes from Josephus: "Being thus, by the immediate interposition of Providence, hanged on a tree, he was, as it were, pronounced accursed of God Himself. Let young people look upon Absalom, suspended on the tree, accursed, forsaken of heaven and earth; there let them read the Lord's abhorrence of rebellion against parents."—Henry and Scott.

33.—My son Absalom, &c.—"We must bear in mind not only the excessive tenderness, or rather weakness, of David's paternal affection towards his son, but also his anger that Joab . . . should have paid so little regard to his command (ver. 5). With the King's excitable temperament, this entirely prevented him from taking a just and correct view of the crime of his rebel son, and of the penal justice of God."—Keil and Delitzsch. Nevertheless, we have here a splendid illustration of that divine love which is as perfect in justice as in strength, and which waits not for worthiness in its object.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28.—2 SAMUEL XIX.

9—12.—The Israelites in the north were to a large extent anxious for David's recall, while the men of Israel, who seem to have been deeply implicated in the late rebellion, hung back. With an unwise partiality, David gave no response to Israel, while he sent private messages to excite tardy Judah. We are not surprised to find (41—43), that when the friendly Israelites coming southward to David found themselves forestalled by Judah, they were deeply offended. This event had probably much to do with the subsequent division between Israel and Judah. In all this David seems to have erred greatly. Nevertheless, he was therein fulfilling prophecy.

30.—Yea, let him take all.—"Nearness to the person of the King so filled, so satisfied the heart of Mephibosheth that he could give up all that for which Ziba had so diligently acted the deceiver and the slanderer. Just so will it be with those who love the name and person of the Son of God."—C. H. M.

37—40.—This incident furnishes a double illustration. In himself, Chimham had no special claims on David. But he stood for Barzillai, as the one to whom David was to pay his debt of gratitude. David would count it a great privilege to be thus able to show kindness to his friend through Chimham. So let us prize the high privilege of serving Christ in his little ones. Again, as Chimham's title to the King's favour stood entirely in Barzillai on the ground of his relationship to him, so the believer is "accepted in the Beloved" only because he belongs to Him.

"How is it that we hear no more of David asking counsel of the Lord? Since he became king over all Israel, we have had only one instance of his resort to this sure means of guidance. We shall not be far wrong in ascribing to this neglect the the serious mistakes into which he appears to have fallen."—Kitto.

THURSDAY, JULY 29.—2 SAMUEL XX.

3.—Living in widowhood.—The Hebrew is, in widowhood of life. "The cruelty and selfishness of the system of polygamy is very apparent in this transaction."—Sp. Com.

5.—But he tarried longer, &c—The cause of Amasa's delay is not stated It may have been the unwillingness of the men of Judah to place themselves under the orders of Amasa (contrast 13 and 14), or it may have been caused by a wavering or hesitation in the loyalty of Amasa himself. This last is evidently insinuated in verse 11, and no doubt this was the pretext, whether grounded in fact or not, by which Joab justified the murder of Amasa before David."—Sp. Com.

6.—To Abishai.—"That Joab commanded the expedition is clear. . . . Probably, as the King was on bad terms with Joab, and wished to deprive him of his post as captain of the host, he gave his orders to Abishai, and weakly connived at the execution of them by Joab, which was inevitable."—Idem.

8—10.—"What appears to have happened is, that by accident or design Joab's sword fell out of the scabbard on to the ground as he was going to meet Amasa, and that he picked it up with his left hand, so as to leave his right hand free for the customary salutation (ver. 9). This awakened no suspicion in Amasa's mind."—Idem.

16—22.—"The woman gave Joab to understand, in the first place, that he ought to have asked the inhabitants of Abel whether they intended to fight for Sheba before commencing the siege (see Deut. xx. 10, &c); and, secondly, that he ought to have taken into consideration the peaceableness and fidelity of the citizens of Abel."—Keil and Delitzsch. "A great deal of mischief would be prevented if contending parties would understand one another." This is a capital example of the good that may be done by a woman of good sense and right feeling.

FRIDAY, JULY 30.—2 SAMUEL XXI.

1.—Then, &c.—"Rather 'And.' There is no note of time whatever, nor any clue as to what part of David's reign the events of this chapter ought to be assigned to. The insertion of the phrase, 'in the days of David,' seems expressly designed to neutralise the inference that the narrative comes in due chronological order."—Sp. Com.

4.—Neither . . . shalt thou kill any man in Israel.—"They mean that it is not against the nation of Israel, but against the individual Saul, that they cry for vengeance."—Idem.

6.—Let seven men, &c.—"Seven was a sacred number, not only with the Hebrews, but with other Oriental nations, and is therefore brought in on this occasion, when the judicial death of the sons of Saul was a religious act intended to appease the wrath of God for the violation of an oath."—Idem. I will give them.—"David granted the request, because, according to the law in Numbers xxxv. 33. blood-guiltiness when resting upon the land could only be expiated by the blood of the criminal."—Keil and Delitzsch.

8—Michal.—Read Merab.

10.—Until water dropped upon them, &c—I.e., "Till rain came as a sign that the plague of drought that had rested upon the land was appeased; after which the corpses could be openly taken down and buried."—Keil and Delitzsch. "God often visits the sins of the fathers upon the children, and his judgments are a great deep. He gives no account of any matters. Time does not wear out the guilt of sin; nor can we build hopes of impunity upon the delay of judgments."—Henry and Scott.

SATURDAY, JULY 31.—2 SAMUEL XXII.

David's Thanksgiving Psalm.—With the exception of certain minor differences, this is identical with Ps. xviii. "In it David praises the Lord as his deliverer out of all dangers during his agitated life, and conflicts with his foes.

2—4.—In the first half he pictures his marvellous deliverance out of all the trouble which he passed through, especially in the time of Saul's persecution, under the image of an extraordinary theophany (5—20), and unfolds the ground of this deliverance (21—28). In the second half he proclaims the mighty help of the Lord, and his consequent victories over the foreign enemies of his government (29—46), and closes with renewed praise of God for all his glorious deeds (47—51). The contents and form of this song of praise answer to the fact attested by the heading, that it was composed by David in the later years of his reign, when God had rescued him from all his foes."—Keil and Delitzsch.

7, 8—Our readers will note the sublime contrast seen in these two verses. The first states the moving cause, the second, the grand result. The cause is a cry, a simple cry of distress and appeal; the result of that cry is commotion, not on earth only, but also in heaven. Moreover, the reason of this is given: "Because He was wroth."

21—25—"The righteousness and cleanness of hands, i e., the innocence, which David attributed to himself, were not perfect righteousness before God, but the righteousness of his endeavours and deeds, as contrasted with the unrighteousness and wickedness of his adversaries and pursuers, and consisted in the fact that he endeavours, earnestly and sincerely, to walk in the ways of God. and to keep the Divine commandments."—Keil and Delitzsch.

While David wrote with his own life in view, we doubt not that, unconsciously to himself, he wrote also of Jesus, led by the Spirit of prophecy.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Orphan and Destitute Children."

Opening of the New Infants' Home,

HAWKHURST, "BABIES' CASTLE," KENT.

H.R.H. PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE (Duchess of Teck)

HAS MOST KINDLY NAMED

MONDAY, AUGUST 9,

For the opening of this new Branch for the reception of Infant Children.

Purses containing not less than £10 towards the funds of "BABIES' CASTLE" may be presented to Her Royal Highness on the occasion.

Ladies or children desiring to offer such gifts are invited to communicate with Dr. Barnardo at once, who will forward empty purses to be filled.

A Special Train will leave Charing Cross on Monday, the 9th August, to convey Visitors to "BABIES CASTLE." The times of departure of the Train are as follows:—

It will leave Charing Cross at 1.10 p.m. | arriving at
,, Cannon-street ,, 1.18 ,, | Etchingham
,, London Bridge,, 1.23 ,, | 2.47 p.m.

At Etchingham, passengers by this train holding Special Tickets, will be met by Carriages to convey the whole party to the pretty little country village of HAWKHURST, six miles distant, where "BABIES' CASTLE" stands.

By an arrangement with the Railway Company, and with Carriage Proprietors, fares have been fixed at the lowest possible return rates, which include Railway and Carriage Fares both ways. They are as follows:—From either of the three London Stations to Etchingham and back, including the return journey by road to Hawkhurst, First Class, 14*s.* 6*d.; Second Class,* 10*s.* 6*d.; Third Class,* 6*s.* 6*d.*

All these tickets must be obtained beforehand from the Office of the Institutions, as below; and as, owing to the situation of the village, arrangements have to be made well in advance, no tickets can be supplied for this Special Train, or for Carriage conveyance, the order for which arrives later than by the first post on Friday, August 6.

The Terms for REFRESHMENTS are not yet concluded, but will shortly be announced.

Friends proposing to be present will therefore very much oblige, and greatly facilitate arrangements, by sending AT ONCE for their Tickets, which will be ready to be issued, in the order of application, on the 24th instant. Letters ordering Tickets should contain a P.O.O., or Money Order in payment for the same.

To avoid delay, all communications on the subject of Tickets should be addressed to—

MR. JOHN T. PAGE,
Publication Secretary,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every Fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.
181, Queen Victoria-st. (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

Gibraltar Soldiers' Institute.

OBJECT, THE CONVERSION TO GOD OF OUR SOLDIERS.

During the past five years more than 20,000 Troops have been stationed on the Rock, many of whom have been drafted to the Soudan, and numerous letters have been received, both from Soldiers and Sailors, testifying to the Spiritual blessings received at the Institute.

A Site for a much needed NEW Institute and Mission Hall has been purchased at a heavy cost, and

£500 IS AT ONCE NEEDED

To complete the sum of £3500 required for building, furnishing, &c.

Contributions will be thankfully received by

Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, July 17, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan & Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

My heart was very heavy, for my children cried for bread;
I wept to see my little ones go supperless to bed;
I listened for a footstep, as I'd often done before,
Waiting for a staggering man to stumble through the door;
But his step was firm and steady, and his eye was clear and true,
And on his ragged coat he wore a little bit of blue!

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
INCIPIENT PHTHISIS.

The following case is that of Miss ANNIE WEAVING, THE COTTAGE, UPPER SLAUGHTER, MORETON-IN-THE MARSH, GLOUCESTERSHIRE, who wrote me first on the 5th of September, last year, by advice of a friend, who had seen a report of my treatment in a publication called "The Little Gleaner." Consumption had shown itself in the family, and now threatened her.

This patient's illness had commenced eight months before with cold and acute pains in the chest, followed by troublesome cough, and pains extending now from the side through to the shoulder blade; fever and flushings after food. Considerable loss of flesh had taken place. Writing me at this time she says: "I have taken a great deal of medicine and pills, but to no avail."

There was not much progress for some weeks, but the patient continued, and in her last letter she says: "I am sorry I neglected writing you so long, but after the last medicine you sent you, I lost the pains, &c., and am now quite strong again. I feel deeply thankful to you, and shall be pleased to recommend your treatment.—Yours gratefully," &c.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

PRESS TESTIMONIALS.

"We give it a hearty welcome. Anything that will stimulate the instructors of our young people to greater freshness and force in their teaching, as this volume is well fitted to do, is to be hailed with great satisfaction."—Nonconformist.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of Salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book; and helpful to the teacher of the infant—as well as the teacher of the Bible-class."
Baptist Messenger.

"Teachers and preachers who cannot derive assistance of a suggestive and valuable character from this little work, must be exceptionally dull and incompetent."—Christian World.

"A thoroughly practical book by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard and word work. The addresses are real teachings, which very many children's addresses are not."—Teacher at Work.

"We do not hesitate to affirm that the very best Sunday-school worker in this country may learn much from this book. It deals with the nature, essentials, elements, and methods, of the teaching process; and also with the Sunday-school teacher's other work than teaching—the shaping and guidance of his scholars. . . . Many of the hints given, and methods suggested, will be of great value."
Methodist Times.

"The manner of teaching is delightfully simple; and the book is a valuable one."—Footsteps of Truth.

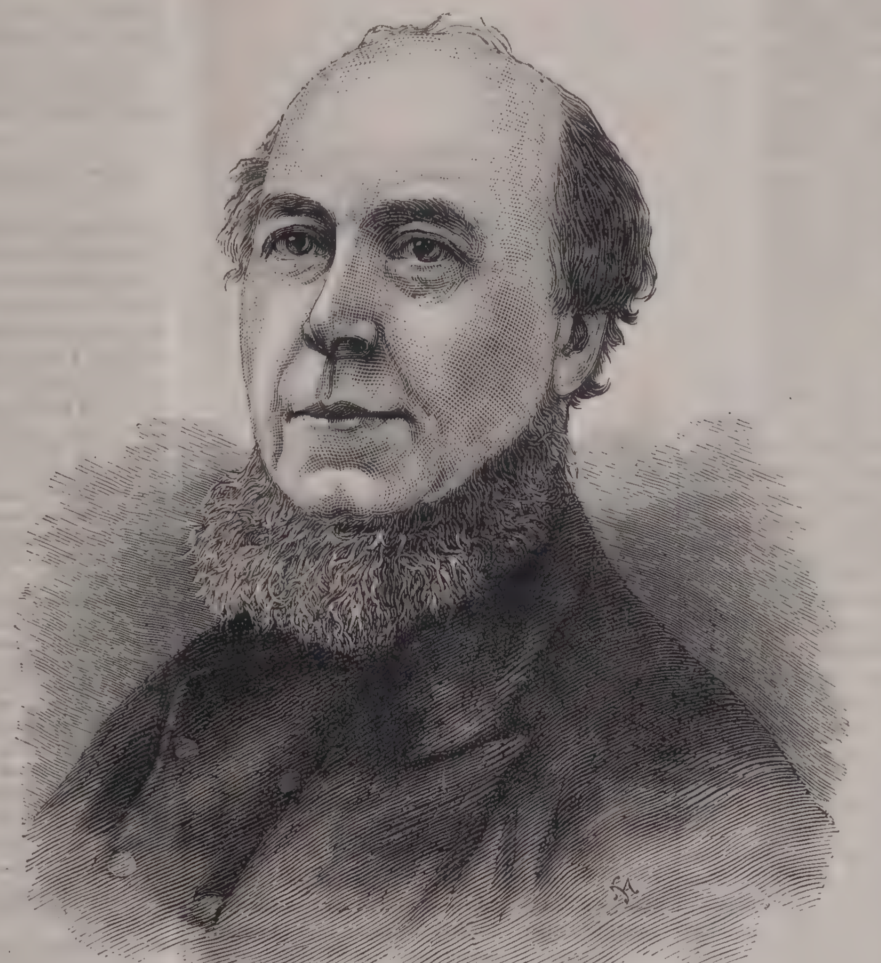
PASTOR CHINIQUY.



PASTOR CHINIQUY, the celebrated convert from Roman Catholicism, whose success in escuing Papists from the errors of Popery has on for him the name of the "Canadian Luther," as born on July 30, 1809. His mother was his rst and best teacher. She taught him to read French and Latin Bible is father had got as a present. He was specially fond the story of the sufferings the Saviour, and his tears ften fell on the sacred arrative. The hours spent ius left their impress on is character, and helped to ould his life. Long after oyhood was left behind for ver, he recalled, in thought, e precious moments when is mother and he, in studyg the Gospels, felt so overome by holy emotions that ey could do nothing but eep. These memories were once a comfort and rength in the trials he had endure.

His parents lived in a untry district where roads ere bad and churches few. n the Sabbath evening the eighbours gathered in his ome, and heard him, child ough he was, recite with veet earnestness and conderable dramatic power e most beautiful parts of e Old and New Testaents. He was listened to ith breathless attention. Then he got tired, his other sang a hymn. These eetings did good. They owed the seed of truth, and rought an elevating power bear on those who came them. One day the priest ut in an appearance. He as by no means pleased ith what he had heard about the Scripture ecitations. As soon as he entered the house, e asked, "Mr. Chiniquy, is it true that you and our child read the Bible?" "Yes, sir," was the nswer, "my little boy and I read the Bible, and hat is still better, he has learned by heart a reat number of its most interesting chapters. you will allow it, he will give you some of em." But the priest had not come for that urpose. He launched into a denunciation of e folly of allowing a child to read the Bible, d ended by coolly asking that the Bible ould be handed to him in order that he might burn it. The insolent request was more than the father could stand. He sprang to his feet quick as lightning. His first impulse was to revenge the insult, but he restrained himself. He strode up and down the room till he gained self-control. Then he turned on the priest, and demanded whether he had said all he had to say. The frightened ecclesiastic admitted that he had. "Well, sir, you know the door through which you entered my house. Please take the same door, and go away." The priest went with more haste than dignity. As soon as he had gone, the boy, who had followed the proceedings with the keenest interest, ran to his father's neck and thanked him for his victory. To pay him with the coin of childhood, he jumped on a large table, and recited most impressively the fight between Goliath and David. Goliath was, of course, the priest, and the father was David. This incident fostered in Charles Chiniquy the fearless opposition to tyranny of any kind which has always been a special feature in his character.

Years rolled on, and the boy became a man. In 1833 he was ordained a priest of the Church of Rome. He was thoroughly sincere, and in love with the Church of his fathers; till the day it pleased God to lead him into light, he was ready to die for her. He threw himself with enthusiasm into his work. He could not do things by halves; whatever he put his hand to was performed with all the powers of intellect and heart at his command. His sympathies were enlisted in the cause of temperance reform. During ten years he went about advocating it with such remarkable success that no less than 200,000 French Canadians signed the pledge. In this way his name got to be familiar as a household word. His energy and ability drew the attention of his superiors to him. The bishops thought he would prove useful in visiting his countrymen who had emigrated from Canada to the United States. They asked him to undertake the duty, and he cheerfully consented. He found the Canadians scattered among Protestants, and in danger of forsaking the faith of their youth. In alarm, he hastened home again, and besought the bishops to select some priests who would gather these Catholics together and lead them to the prairie, where they could form a settlement untainted by heresy. The proposal met with favour, and he himself was appointed to take charge of the expedition. In 1851 he went to the far West, and chose a place suitable for a colony. He then issued invitations to his countrymen throughout the States to repair to that spot. In the course of a few months 12,000 came. This great exodus was meant to guard and strengthen Popery; but God overruled it to serve another and better purpose.

In the bustle of his public life, Mr. Chiniquy could not silence the doubts which often destroyed his peace. His early studies of the Bible and his later meditations made him uneasy.

The more he read the Scriptures, the more did he suspect that everything was not right in the church he loved so well and served so faithfully. His mental vision was too keen to be blind to the fact that a great gulf lay between the teaching of God's Word and the practice of his system. The degrading exercises of the Confessional shocked his pure mind. The sophistry of much of the teaching he had to accept and inculcate was apparent to him; yet he clung fondly to the faith of his fathers. When rays of light fell on his perplexed path, he did not welcome them. When God's voice said to him, "Do you not see that your church follows the laws of men, and not those of God?" he silenced that voice by fighting against his growing convictions. So he wandered in a desert lone and drear. The old lights were going out, and the new ones were not seen as yet. But the time of their appearance was drawing nigh.

The colony prospered. Father Chiniquy was wise in temporal matters as well as zealous in spiritual things. He gained the love of his people. They rallied round him, and gave him many tokens of their trust in him. That trust was soon put to the test. The bishop of the diocese committed an act which broke the laws of God and man. All the priests but one were dumb in the presence of this sin. Father Chiniquy spoke out loudly and strongly. His boldness called forth the thunder of excommunication. Then a long and bitter struggle began. The people paid no attention to the excommunication; they continued to worship quietly in the chapel. The bishops of the States wrote many letters to denounce their conduct, and Chiniquy invariably answered them. He sent all the correspondence to the Pope, with only these words, "Holy Father, take and read." The Papal reply was to transfer the erring bishop to another diocese, and send in his place one who enjoyed a great reputation for piety and prudence. This was a victory for the protestor; but his troubles were by no means over. It was expected that he and his followers should submit at once. They did not feel inclined to take such a step. By this time they had drifted from the old moorings. They were not Roman Catholics, and they were not Protestants. They read the Scriptures diligently, and groped after the light.

The Grand Vicar came to Chiniquy, and asked him why he did not make peace with the Bishop. He said he was willing to submit to his superior, and wrote down, "My lord, we are determined to submit ourselves to your authority, according to the laws of God and of the Gospel." The wily Bishop received the submission joyfully, and for a time the reconciliation seemed to be complete. But it was only the lull before the storm. The Bishop summoned Chiniquy before him ten days later, and told him that a priest must submit to his bishop without any condition. "You must," said he, "make another act of submission, and take away those words 'according to the laws of God and the Gospel,' and instead of them, say you will submit yourself to my authority without any condition, and promise to do anything I bid you." This was more than the priest could bear. He turned on the ecclesiastical tyrant, and told him boldly, "My lord, this is not an act of submission you require from me; it is an act of adoration. I refuse to do it—I refuse to you that act of submission; and I refuse it to the Bishop of Rome." The face of the Bishop paled, but he only said, "Mr. Chiniquy, if it be so, you can't be any more a Roman Catholic priest." The unexpected answer was the ejaculation, "Almighty God be blessed for ever!"

Chiniquy went straight to his room, where he fell on his knees, and prayed for guidance. He saw he had taken the final step. The doubts and questionings of years had found a solution through unfaltering loyalty to conscience. He must leave all—church, family, and friends—in obedience to the voice of God, and go he knew not where. Nor did he care much, for he felt God would be with him, and his presence was enough. He pulled his loved New Testament out of his pocket, opened it, and read, through tears, "Ye are bought with a price; be ye not the slaves of men." These words filled him with a great joy. For the first time he understood the mystery of the Cross. He felt the burden of his guilt press heavily. He saw that he had been the tool of men, and that he had enslaved the consciences of his people. But with that bitter knowledge came the healing balm of assurance of pardon through Jesus Christ. Even while he prayed, the Saviour came to him, and gave him peace and rest. So happy was he that he felt bold as a lion; he realised that He who was with him was more than all who could be against him. The weary searchings after truth were at an end; the full light came, and darkness fled away.

Sabbath morning followed, and he had to face his people. He was told they would turn him out. He went up to the pulpit without any priestly ornaments, and told them what had happened to him. He did not want them to follow him; let them follow Christ and the Word of God. If they wished him to go away, let them stand up. Not one moved. He was surprised; but, thinking their conduct was due to love for himself, he put the question in another form. He asked them to stand up if they thought it better to submit to Christ than to submit to man, and if they wished him to remain among them to teach them God's Word. The great crowd sprang to their feet as if one man. Then emotion found expression; the songs of Zion rang out in the chapel. The Spirit of God wrought, and many souls were saved. The wonderful exodus from the Roman Catholic Church in Illinois began, like every other great religious movement, with an outpouring of the Spirit.

The news flashed through the length and breadth of the country that two thousand men had left Roman Catholicism, with their priest at their head. It caused considerable excitement. The Papists were scandalised and secretly afraid; Protestants rejoiced openly. The Lord's hand was distinctly visible in the whole transaction. He had prepared pastor and people, and his grace upheld them in the persecutions they had to endure. All the craft of the Papacy was employed to lure them back, but in vain. Freedom was too sweet and the love of Christ too precious to be given up for a return to slavery. The converts stood firm.

We have not space to tell the trials through which they passed, or how they were gradually led to renounce all their old habits and religious rites, and became out-and-out Protestants. Those who care to read about these things will find them recorded in "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome."* In days when a liberty which is licence is given to the machinations of Papists this narrative should be read attentively, and its lessons should be pondered prayerfully.

God's blessing has rested on the work of Pastor Chiniquy. He has suffered much, but he has also had the joy of leading many souls to Christ. His enthusiasm is intense, and his courage invincible. No danger turns him aside from the path of duty. In the bravery of his deeds, in his loyalty to conscience, and in the success with which he has attacked the errors of Roman Catholicism, he has shown himself not unworthy of the name—THE CANADIAN LUTHER.

MR. HAMMOND IN LONDON.

THERE was great rejoicing at Haddon Hall last Sabbath upon a fresh visit from Mr. Hammond. In the afternoon he addressed a great congregation of children, many of whom found the Saviour at his meetings last winter. After the address, several gave simple testimony of the good they received there. It was very pleasant to see the loving welcome they accorded to Mr. Hammond, whom they look upon as their "spiritual father." In the evening Mr. Hammond addressed the adult congregation upon the healing of Naaman the Syrian, and gave an account of his recent visit among the lepers in the hospital of Bergen, Norway.

The service was made specially attractive by the sweet singing of Mrs. Hammond, who rendered several pieces out of "Gems of Praise" with great feeling. Our brother was again cheered by hearing of permanent fruit having been given to his last adult service in this hall nine months ago. It is the lasting character of the work, both amongst young and old, which must make Mr. Hammond's services valued by all thoughtful, earnest Christians. Will friends continue to bear our beloved brother and his wife upon their hearts during their voyage across the Atlantic and their work in their own country?

YOUNG EMIGRANTS.

LAST Monday, at the noon prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, about sixty of Miss Macpherson's little protegés were commended to God prior to their leaving for Canada in the Sardinian. Mr. Robert Paton presided, and earnest prayer commending them to God's keeping was offered by several friends. Before speaking Miss Macpherson said she would let the children speak for themselves, and asked those who had lost either father or mother to rise, to which some thirty or forty responded. She then gave a short but interesting address, alluding to several who had gone out to Canada with former parties, some of whom were now earning as much as two guineas a week. Rev. E. Payson Hammond also addressed the children in his own attractive style, after which Mr. Paton gave them a text to remember as they set out upon their new life.

THE DIGNITY OF LABOUR.

IR,—I was much interested to see your remarks n the necessity there is to restore the idea of e true dignity of labour to our minds. I have r years watched keenly the rapid degradation f our workmen which the present system of ade and manufacture has brought about.

When a lad, I worked for a time (to practically arn my business) in the small workshop of an onmonger, and the training I there received, om the honest pride one and all took in doing e work we had to do in the best way we could, ven to small details, has made me utterly disusted ever since with the way in which such small atters as household repairs, &c., are now done t similar shops. I then went to an engineer's op to learn that business, and there I was ained to take an honest pride in putting the est work one could do in everything great or mall.

Though still only in the prime of life, I have ved to see all this changed. I soon had to arn the hard lesson (to me, at least) that good ork did not pay, and I have seen the good onest workman displaced by the men who can rn out the greatest amount of stuff in the hortest time.

Factory work has always tended to more and ore separate the producer from the consumer, nd to force the maker to deal with a middleman, hose only idea is to make as much money as he an out of the transaction. Consumers in their rn have been taught "to buy in the cheapest arket," and so pit one middleman against nother for price, and so quality gets more and ore run down, and the workman is still further emoralised.

My letter will be far too long if I go further nto this, and I will therefore turn to the remedy hich, after long experience of what some would all more practical methods, seems to me the nly one. I am fully convinced that the great eed is that the true Church of Christ as indiiduals and collectively so far as they can, should oldly examine their position as traders and anufacturers to see if it is consistent with the eachings of Christ.

Have we not unconsciously drifted into a stem which we have honestly thought sound, ut which is directly opposed to the sermon on e mount? (Matt. vi. 19 to end).

Is not trade of every kind now based on selfishess, with covetousness for its motive power? hilst we believe that we should love our neighour as ourselves in everything but in business ansactions, how is it we except these, and feel e have a perfect right to get all out of him we an, so that we do it honestly, as honesty is efined in business matters.

In the gradual emergence of the Christian hurch from the darkness into which it had llen, many things thought allowable have een seen to be grievous sins against the laws of od—such as slavery; and is not the time now oming for us to seriously consider our position regard to that system of trade and commerce hich yields us such fruits as are recorded in The Bitter Cry of Outcast London." The time over in which we could as heretofore onopolise the work of the world, and I believe e are about to learn that honest work is the nly way by which people can live, and that any ndeavour to evade this for ourselves or our ildren will only result in failure, if we are not d to act in a manner which is contrary to the achings and spirit of the Bible.

Under a deep sense of the great responsibility of the Church and of individual Christians in this matter at this crisis in the industry of the world I have ventured to write to you who have always been ready to go to the root of the many evils which exist in our day.

FRENCH ART—ENGLISH MORALS.*

I STAND before some of the paintings which Europe is sending for exhibition here. I see presented, in the name of Art, the superficial beauty and the enticing allurements of life. . . . It is the superficial beauty and the tempting allurements which draw; and, strangely enough, it is in the representation of these that the best work is seen.

What of such paintings? They are splendidly painted and life-like. Is not this enough for Art? We must bear in mind that painting is but a language, the perfection of painting the perfection of a given language . . . The language may be very beautiful, the story very deadly. The language may be beautiful, and the fact also truly represented, and yet the story deadly, and in effect false.

Is it not enough, then, to say as these Realists do, We meet with such and such a fact, and here it is faithfully recorded?—I answer, No.

A picture can but represent the passing moment; but life is an endless chain, and conduct has endless consequences. A series of paintings, as with Hogarth, is open to these artists; but they have not availed themselves of this. If they had worked out their story to the end, the bitter end, we might still have questioned the propriety of telling it; we might still have thought that more harm than good had been done. But here they just give us the seductive, the false, the lying chapter of the story, and never unveil the villiany and the deceit of it. In their hands, at least, this boasted Realism is not Reality but Falsehood.

But is it not drawn from life? Yes; and life may deceive us in its separate chapters, though the truth come out in the end. A youth is surrounded by youth and beauty; he is charmed, dazzled, allured. This is one chapter of life; and he has to go through a good many, perhaps, before all the evil is exposed, and the real truth made known. These men seize on the momentary lie, and paint that so prettily as to be equally seductive with the fact itself. This may be Realism; but it is not truth.

Or we may put it thus. There are good and evil in life; and evil does not always appear horrible, but sometimes very enticing. This is a fact. But is this all? These men paint the seductive charms of evil to perfection; but not all that attends and follows it. They are deceivers, then; painters of lies, real lies.

What can these cynics do for England to-day? They help to fill our galleries with paintings which may show Whitechapel how uninteresting is its own lot, and make it envious of idle luxury and gilded indifference, and dissatisfied and dangerous; but can never help in the very smallest degree to render it a safer thing that Whitechapel should have a vote in the affairs of a great empire.

But what of these French pictures? If our galleries are to be thrown open to the people, why should they not see these? And how long will it be before some of our own more skilful and soulless artists begin to tread gingerly in the way of these Frenchmen? How long before a new Grosvenor is started for new men, but with a far lower ideal? And then how long before our Royal Academy opens its arms to the men of the new school? Fearing that all this is possible, I say that now is the time to speak out. Workmen of England! This is a question for you also—for you and your wives and your children. It will not be long before the remaining barriers are removed, and the doors of the Palace of Art thrown wide open before you. But what if, when you enter, you find only a French harem within!

I will still plead for the people. Well do I remember a cheap night at the Liverpool Autumn Exhibition a few years back. I was standing before Fildes' "Widower." Whether our critics have called that a great picture, I do not know; and on such a question I scarcely feel myself competent to judge; but I saw ignorant men who had been discussing the merits and demerits of other works in all the critic's pride of appearing to know, stand silent here and still; and women who looked hard and world-worn, and had been gossiping the latest scandals, were suddenly hushed to tears before that story of a poor man's sorrow. The clatter and chatter went on all around, but here the few words that came were uttered only in whispers, and the people lingered sadly, as if standing by the grave of a friend. There was no laughing for shame of showing sentiment, no turning away for fear of being pained. For a few moments these humble folk, with their faults and their sorrows and their sins, seemed to be lifted out of the degradation of their daily environment, and raised to the sphere of true manhood and womanhood. If one could have read the thoughts that were passing through those poor hearts, which changed all their ignorant chatter to silence or hushed whisperings, what a chapter for the Epic of Life! I say, I do not know whether it was a great work of Art—let the critics tell us that—but believing, as I do, that Art should serve Humanity, and not Humanity Art, I think I would rather have painted just that bright flower on the window-ledge, with the story it told there of sympathy from one who could give a little help, than most of the great works of Art I have seen. I have been told that it was not a fit subject for the artist. Perhaps; but it seemed a fit subject for the people. I have been told that it was carrying Art too low. Perhaps. I know it went too low for some who had paid four times as much to see it in the morning, but it did not descend too low to touch the hearts of those who gazed on it at night. I say, that Art is low, however beautiful, which has nothing in it to elevate; certainly not this which stoops to the lowest to raise them. What insight did one get into the material with which reformers have to deal, as one watched those who passed by that picture in the morning, and the hushed crowd which gathered around it at night!

I do not see how those who tell us that Art must be followed for its own sake can say that these men of the French school are wrong. Let those who have been worshipping the high goddess, regardless of other service, consider whether they can blame those who have painted what they saw, and painted it so beautifully. If Art is to be its own end, judgment on moral and humane grounds seems beside the mark. And yet can a picture which tempts many to evil be really justified by an appeal to artistic canons?

Among our own galleries we look almost in vain for that high principle and healthy vigour, which alone can prevent our Art from being infected by the disease of this French school. Are they not swept and garnished and vacant, ready for the immediate occupation of the spirits of evil?

Then will Art be truly lovable in itself, when it learns heartily to care for and love another.

THE EAST-END LIGHTHOUSE.—The twelfth report of the Old Ford Mission, "Morley Arms" Coffee Palace, Tredegar-road, Bow, speaks of continued success in this work, notwithstanding that the difficulties were increased by the severity of the past winter. The Sunday evening services are well attended, and in connection therewith several pleasant social gatherings have been held, at one of which a substantial meat tea was given to 140 poor families. The Sunday-school is increasing largely in numbers—a very healthy sign. The Band of Hope and Temperance work go steadily forward, while mothers' meetings and evening classes still further aid the good work. The expenses last year amounted to £137 18s. 6d., the smallness of expenditure being accounted for by the fact that all the workers, with the exception of the Bible woman, are entirely unpaid. Such institutions are indeed lighthouses.

NEW TESTAMENT GIVERS.

BY A CHURCH TREASURER.

THERE is a class of people whose first thought, when their income is a little decreased, is to curtail their contributions to the cause of God; but as to reducing their own personal expenditure — why, that thought comes last. It has been well said: "Some men give according to their means, and some according to their meanness." I trust none of the latter ignoble class will be found among us. But it would be well for us all to lift this matter of giving to a higher platform, and view it not as a matter of duty, but as a privilege. We read our Bibles, and cannot but see how earnest all true Christian hearts have been in this most practical work of giving.

We look to the manger-cradle, and see the sages from the sunny East presenting their "gold, and frankincense, and myrrh." We turn to one of the few houses of the Pharisees where Jesus was entertained, and see Mary Magdalene lowly bending as she anoints the Saviour's feet, and unwittingly perfumes herself with her act of devotion. We gaze into the home of Levi, and we find a "great feast" given in honour of the Prophet of Nazareth. We travel through the Galilean cities and villages, and find a band of faithful women, whose holy joy and pure delight were to minister to the "Man of Sorrows." We stand at the Temple door and notice the widow contributing her "two mites," and we measure the greatness of her gift, not by what she gave, but by what she retained for herself—nothing. With her it was all for God and nothing for self. We turn to the leper's house in Bethany on Christ's last Sabbath on earth, and we see Mary breaking the costly box. Only a Judas talks of "waste," while she, in the prodigality of her love, makes the house redolent with a fragrance that the ages still feel. We turn to the Jerusalem streets on the day of the triumphant entry, and see the children welcoming the city's rejected King. Little things, what have they to give? Not much, and so for lack of something better, they raise their clear and ringing voices and sing the hosanna chorus, and thus contribute acclamation and praise. We go outside the city gate to the place of the Cross, and there find a coterie of devoted women, all the way from Galilee, who come to minister "unto the end," and with loving hearts and tender hands to do the last sad work of severed friendship—to smooth the bloodclotted hair, to anoint the racked body, and to lovingly bind it in the "clean linen cloth," and to weep the hot and scalding tears of an irreparable loss.

We notice the wise Nicodemus hurrying with his offering of the "mixture of myrrh and aloes," and giving it for the anointing of this supreme Sufferer, we turn to the garden all abloom with the April flowers, and there find Joseph's rock-hewn tomb consecrated to the slain Christ; and thus all through, from the Bethlehem manger to the Arimathean tomb, we find there were faithful, generous and liberal hearts, who tasted the pure joy of giving to the Lord.

We can no longer thus minister to our Lord; but we can further his cause on earth, and help to maintain his Church. Ours is a question of pounds, shillings, and pence; but these given with true motive and in the right spirit, our offerings will be as precious in his sight as those long ago given to Him, and chronicled on the immortal page of inspiration,

We all can do more than we have done,
And not be a whit the worse!
It never was loving that emptied the heart,
Nor giving that emptied the purse.

My friends, do your best by the Church of God, and in giving to the sacred cause, rest assured that whatever else you may misspend, nothing here but is for ever well spent.

CONSCIOUS CONVERSION.

WE have received a letter from Mr. G. Railton, of the Salvation Army, kindly but warmly criticising some paragraphs in the sketch of Mrs. Isabel Reaney in our issue of July 22. One of his comments seems to us of sufficient importance to warrant a public reply. We handed it to a friend staying with us, and the following are his remarks upon it:—

Our esteemed brother, Mr. Railton, says:

> "THE CHRISTIAN has surely always been the one great champion paper as to conversion and separateness from the world. Now, what possible conclusion can anyone, and especially any child, draw from the paragraphs in the first column of to-day's CHRISTIAN except that it it is quite wrong to insist upon any conscious conversion, and quite wrong to press anybody on the subject? Surely these are not the days for any slackening of testimony on these points . . . One might rather have expected THE CHRISTIAN to come out more strongly than ever on the great themes that have so much distinguished it in the past, and that have been the foundation of all the evangelistic work and successes it has existed to record."

The paragraphs so objectionable to Mr. Railton are those which narrated the simple fact that Mrs. Reaney's religious life is traceable to her early years, and that she did not profess to be able to point to any particular date as the exact period of her conversion. Also the allusion to the well-meant but unwise questionings and affirmations of an earnest friend, who assumed that the little girl before her was still unsaved. Had this soul-winner been "wise" as well as zealous, she would have felt her way to this young disciple's heart, and learned just her spiritual status, that she might have given her "meat in due season," rather than frighten her by uplifting the monitory finger, and assuming that she was still dead in sins.

Our brother Railton need not fear that we have "changed front" (as he says) on this vital point of conversion. We believe, as we have always done, in the reality of conversion. We believe also in wisely "pressing people on the subject." But we believe, as we have always believed, that very many, born and brought up in the sweet atmosphere of a godly home, begin to love and trust the Lord Jesus in their tenderest years; so that their first recollection of spiritual exercises is of a conscious love of that blessed One whose name and story was their lullaby, and whom, as in the case of Mrs. Reaney, they grow up to follow and to serve with peculiar devotedness. The unceasing and emphatic Gospel call that sounds out from Mrs. Reaney's lips week after week, in which she insists upon conversion, and cordially "presses others on the subject," shows where she stands on this vital theme.

We are sure that our brother's fear that even a child would draw conclusions adverse to "conscious conversion," and to the habit of "pressing others on the subject," from the allusion to Mrs. Reaney's early life, is a groundless one. After reading his letter we called to our side a sweet child of thirteen summers, one whose home is in a far-off foreign mission field, where she, as here also, abundantly testifies to the reality of her conversion, by recommending her precious Saviour to others.

We thus questioned her:—

"Tell me, my dear, when were you converted?"

"I do not really know. I've always heard about Jesus, and have always loved Him, as far back as I can remember."

"Then you believe you are converted?"

"Oh, yes."

"Listen, while I read you about Mrs. Reaney from THE CHRISTIAN. As this was her experience and yours, does it seem to you to make it unnecessary for people to be definitely converted?"

"Oh, no. If they have not learned to love the Lord Jesus, and been converted when very young, they must be converted when older."

While we hold fast and hold forth the truth of God as to definite conversion, and the necessity and blessedness of pressing the Gospel on all we meet, let us also equally value and emphasise the very much lost-sight-of line of promises of salvation to the "houses" of the faithful godly. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" is in the heart of every child of God. But how little prominence is given to the "and thy house," which is as much a part of the text as the arm is part of the body. The promise that "thy house" shall be saved is none the less strongly given than that "thou" shalt be saved. Therefore, while we believers say to the ungodly adult or child, who, awakened by the Spirit to his lost condition (for this word is not to the unawakened, as Mrs. Booth has so eloquently insisted upon), "Believe and be saved," let us none the less firmly hold that our own children, and all others such as Isabel Edis, and the little maiden with whom we have just conversed, being "brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," as those for whom a certain promise of salvation is given, will, as their beautiful buds of being unfold, disclose, with their earliest consciousness of spiritual relations, the delightsome fragrance of the name of Jesus. Surely, if this is not "conscious conversion," it is the consciousness of conversion. The writer, for instance, well knows he has been converted; but when in his early years that event occurred he does not know, nor is he troubled thereabout.

ANNA SHIPTON'S BOOKS.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to bear testimony to the value of Anna Shipton's writings. I constantly hear from my co-workers at the Cape, of blessings to souls through them. One has requested in prayer that 100 copies of "Tell Jesus" might be sent her. I could give many instances to show how signally the books are owned of God. A sailor came to our Rest, and declared how, far away at sea, a copy of "The Promise and the Promiser" fell into his hands, and how on opening it the solemn dedication made so profound an impression upon him that his infidel notions vanished.

A lady visiting some of the German immigrants lent a few tracts. Among them was one copy of "Just Like Me," by Anna Shipton. So delighted were these poor people with the little book that several families bespoke the loan of it. I have tried in vain to obtain in London copies in German of this and others by the same authoress.

If workers would help to circulate books so calculated to carry blessings to the recipients this difficulty would doubtless be removed.

Yours truly, M. S. OSBORN,

THE TENT OF MEETING.

"Now Moses used to take the tent and to pitch it without the camp, afar off from the camp; and he called it 'The Tent of Meeting.' And it came to pass that every one which sought the Lord went out unto the tent of meeting which was without the camp. And it came to pass, when Moses went out into the tent, that all the people rose up, and stood, every man at his tent door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone into the tent. And it came to pass, when Moses entered into the tent, the pillar of cloud descended, and stood at the door of the tent; and the Lord spake with Moses. And all the people saw the pillar of cloud stand at the door of the tent, and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man at his tent door. And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."—Ex. xxxiii. 7—11 (R.V).

In connection with my daily reading in Exodus, may I tell of a jewel I think I have found in this passage?

The common name for what we call the tabernacle was "The Tent of Meeting," i.e., the meeting-place of God and his people. But the "Tent of Meeting" here referred to was not the tabernacle. That did not exist as yet. If we look carefully at the dates, we find that Moses had but just come down from receiving the pattern of it during his forty days on the Mount, and that the first announcement of it to the people was made later on (chap. xxxv.), after Moses had been a second time on Sinai, and had brought back the *un*broken tables of the law.

How could he, indeed, communicate the secret of the holy dwelling-place during the sad interval! How begin to prepare for receiving the perpetual presence of the Eternal among a people so sunk in sin! His heart must have been sick, his hopes crushed. A strange and awful cloud must have rested over the whole undertaking. He had come down from the mount of God to be met by the shame and horror of the golden calf. His first work had been purification and vengeance; his one thought had been agonising intercession, again, and again, and again. He must have wondered if God would accept a dwelling-place at the hands of this sinful race. Perhaps it was for this very thing that he prayed: "If thy presence go not with us, carry us not up hence." For God's visible presence was to be associated with the tabernacle, and by that were his people known and separated from all the nations of the earth (Exod. xxxiii. 16). If it were so, it is certain that the people did not move a step onwards until God's presence rested in the Holy of Holies, between the Cherubim. But until the sin was put away, and thoroughly, there must have been for Moses a time of suspense and anguish unspeakable.

And even after the sin was forgiven and the holy work begun, there must be long months of preparation before the golden boards and embroidered curtains could be set up. Till then, was there to be no visible sanctuary?

Moses is filled with the ideal of the Holy Tent which has been set before him. He longs for the day when the Most High will set up a glorious and perfect dwelling. And in the waiting time, what does he do? He takes a tent, probably his own tent, where he lived, he removes it far from the very air of the polluted camp, and, in anticipation of what is to be, he names it "The Tent of Meeting;" and God takes him at his word, and comes to inhabit this tent of Moses.

It is nothing but a poor, dark tent; it may be rough and travel-soiled. No curtains of fine linen adorn it. Everything about it speaks of imperfection, just as afterwards everything about the tabernacle will speak of perfection. Yet because it is separated from sin, and given over to God to be his, God comes and dwells in it as truly as in the gorgeous Temple of Solomon. There needs no attempt to make it fit. Just as it is, in all its poverty, God owns it. Just as it is, because the only place in the world where God visibly rests, which He visibly honours. To it repentant sinners resort for comfort and teaching, as they will do hereafter to the completed tabernacle.

The people who have watched Moses retire into his tent actually see the pillar-cloud moving towards it, and standing at its door, while God talks with Moses face to face.

And they see this not one day, but many days; even until the tabernacle was finished, and God took up his dwelling there, this simple tent remained a witness of the glorious future.

Can anyone mistake the meaning of this beautiful parable?

One day we shall hear the voice, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them." One day we shall see the City descending of which God and the Lamb are the temple. For temple or tabernacle, dwelling-place or tent, all have their fulfilment in the glorified body of Christ. But that day is not yet. And meantime the preparation goes on in secret, and the sin and pollution around us often seem so fearful that we are ready to cry, "Can it ever be?" "Can God in very deed dwell with man?"

Yes. We know it, and are sure of it. Because God does in very deed dwell with men now. Now and then we have seen the tent of some Moses illumined, as the pledge and evidence of what is coming.

Have we only seen it? Only looked on afar off, as the people did in their tent doors? Have we not experienced it and known it each for ourselves? It is for each of us, however little, however dark, to make these bodies of ours like Moses' tent—tents of meeting, tents where God abides.

For (2 Cor. vi. 16) "Ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." (This is a promise taken almost literally from the tabernacle history, Exod. xxix. 42—46, and Lev. xxvi. 11, 12.) And the condition still is, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you." That is, if we do as Moses did, we shall have his reward.

I might quote a hundred passages where God is spoken of as making his people his dwelling, abode, temple; and upon all of these our passage throws light. But I will only repeat these: "If a man love Me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?"

Now, if God has left us, Christians, actually to be the visible dwelling-places of his glory, to be the witnesses to the world of the future perfect tabernacle of God among men, and if we fail in this, shall we wonder if the world despairs of any such tabernacle? If the light of God in us is so faint as to be invisible, shall we blame the world if it denies that God has ever dwelt, or will dwell, among men? Whose fault is it, and where is the remedy?

"FLOODS" OF REVIVAL.

By REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

Should not the normal course amongst the heathen, in this dispensation of the Holy Ghost, be to see multitudes moved and converted, and not merely units? Is not the reason we so seldom see multitudes moved and converted now, the unbelief of us at home, and the little faith of our beloved labourers who are bearing the heat of the day amongst the heathen? "He could not do many mighty works on account of their unbelief." Does not this lack of faith run abreast of a lack of real closet-prayer, and of real conjoint prayer, and of real fasting? Will you ponder the texts that follow, and let us see to it that we do not, so to speak, tie the hand of our wonder-working God by our hindering unbelief?

On this subject I venture to subjoin an extract from a letter just despatched to a dearly loved young missionary, now in the far interior of China.*

EXTRACT.

"The more I ponder it, the more do I consider God's normal plan of acting, so to speak, in heathen lands, would be by 'floods,' and not merely by units: moving by the outpoured Spirit, neighbourhoods, towns, and even provinces, and nations—and converting out of them, not by units, but by flocks and by multitudes—if only we would not stay his hands by our hindering unbelief. Then I think, and I am sure I am with you in this, the individual Christian worker must in solitude stir up himself to take hold upon God, or rather open his mouth wide to receive of God. Then he must make time to be alone with God. Furthermore, while Protestants have hated improper fasting, merit-making fasting, they have too generally forgotten Christ's words, 'By prayer and fasting.' 'When ye fast.' Again, have we not all been in error in not sufficiently looking and praying for the young converts to be immediately endued with power at once to witness for Christ? But this last, although so important, and an agency which I believe was so generally and so vastly used in New Testament times, is not the main subject on which I wish now to lay stress."

THE SPIRIT POURED OUT.

Turn ye to me with all your heart, and with fasting . . . I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen . . . Be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things . . . I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, &c. (Joel ii. 12—32).

For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: . . . And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courses.

Were all filled with the Holy Ghost (Acts ii. 4).

Three thousand (Acts ii. 41).

Many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand (Acts iv. 4).

In those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied (Acts vi. 1).

And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly (Acts vi. 7).

Therefore they that were scattered abroad [say at least ten thousand] went everywhere preaching the word (Acts viii. 4).

And the people with one accord gave heed (Acts viii. 6).

Then had the churches rest . . . were multiplied (Acts ix. 31).

And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord (Acts ix. 35).

While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word (Acts x. 44).

And the hand of the Lord was with them [some of the 10,000 fugitives]: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord (Acts xi. 21).

For he (Barnabas)was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost . . . and much people was added unto the Lord (Acts xi. 24).

But the word of God grew and multiplied (Acts xii. 24).

As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, &c. [After which Barnabas and Saul reap multitudes. Floods were promised, and floods they saw.] (Acts xiii. 2, 3).

Many [evidently believed] . . . Next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God (Acts xiii. 43, 44).

So spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed (Acts xiv. 1).

A great multitude believed (Acts xvii. 4).

Many of them believed (Acts xvii. 12).

And many that believed, came and confessed, and showed their deeds . . . So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed (Acts xix. 18, 19, 20).

Not only at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that they be no gods, which are made with hands (Acts xix. 26).

EARNEST PRAYER, AND PRAYER AND FASTING.

Then shall they fast (Mark ii. 20).

But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly (Matt. vi. 17).

These all continued stedfastly in prayer (R.V.) (Acts i. 14).

But we will continue stedfastly in prayer (Acts vi. 4).

As they ministered to the Lord and fasted [see this text quoted above] (Acts xiii. 2).

Had prayed with fasting (Acts xiv. 23).

Approving ourselves . . . in fastings (2 Cor. vi. 4, 5).

In fastings, often (2 Cor. xi. 27).

GREAT ENCOURAGEMENTS TO ASK, TO BELIEVE, AND TO RECEIVE.

Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss that ye may consume it upon your lusts (James iv. 3).

And whatsoever we ask, we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight (1 John iii. 22).

Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not, &c. (James v. 17). Then (see 1 Kings xviii. 37, 38, 39) he prayed, surrounded by the priests of Baal, that the Lord would turn the hearts of the people back again, and the fire fell, and at once the multitude was turned back again, and their response came forth, "The Lord, He is the God; the Lord, He is the God."

Who through faith subdued kingdoms (Heb. xi. 33).

Is my hand shortened at all that it cannot redeem? (Isa. l. 2).

Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God (Isa. lix. 1).

To these texts from the word of God let me add one short sentence of Mr. Spurgeon's, which I extract from the valuable book, styled "A Missionary Band,"* just published on missions, compiled by Mr. Broomhall, page 108:—

> "And, dear friends, we must get up higher still in praying about missions. I know some men can get anything they like in prayer. Oh for some five hundred Elijahs, each one on his Carmel, crying unto God! and we should soon have the clouds bursting with showers . . . Oh for more prayer—more constant, incessant mention of the mission cause in prayer! and then the blessing will be sure to come."

Y.M.C. ASSOCIATIONS—
WHERE TO DRAW THE LINE.

By our Lord's teaching every disciple is consecrated a missionary. To a band of men, for the most part comparatively young, who had become associated with Himself, He said—

"Ye are the salt of the earth," "Ye are the light of the world."

The Young Men's Christian Associations seek to unite young men who avow themselves disciples of Christ, for the specific and defined object of extending his kingdom amongst young men. To its members, an Association will prove a blessing or the very opposite, according as it helps or hinders them in the fulfilment of the duties of their distinctive calling as Christ's disciples. A first consideration in efforts to win young men to Christ should be to see that the instrument or agency we employ is such as the Holy Spirit can use. If we would "reap of the Spirit" from our members, we must "sow to the Spirit" in them. If we do not make it the work of our Associations to minister to their inner life, we shall strive in vain to achieve spiritual results through them. The Missionary Spirit (John vii. 38, 39), is none other than the Holy Spirit Himself working through those who believe in Christ. There is no other missionary spirit. How it behoves us then (if we desire to see our members "walk in the Spirit," bring forth "the fruit of the Spirit," and prompted and used by the Spirit in active service in behalf of others) patiently to consider, and with godly reverence and prayer to ask and seek to learn what are the circumstances in which, and what are the means and methods by which the Holy Spirit is wont to work. Would that a deep and earnest spirit of inquiry were awakened in our Associations in regard to this matter. Into what prominence this lifts the question, as to the atmosphere which pervades our Associations—the tone of life, of thought, and activity which prevails therein. Do these savour of the acknowledged presence and working of the Holy Spirit? of acknowledged dependence on Him?

Things are allowed and even boasted of as useful agencies in Associations to-day which five years ago would have been regarded by those who have been longest engaged in this work as indicating, on the part of any Associations adopting them, either want of understanding of, or departure from, the principles and lines of Y.M.C.A. work as originally laid down.

With as much light-heartedness as if the work were for the day only, as if the means to be employed were left to our own choosing, and may be changed at discretion with every new fashion, as if the issues were commanded by ourselves, one new agency after another has been added without due consideration whether the principle upon which it operated was in harmony with those of our Associations, or the reverse.

It is clear that these agencies must have exerted some influence upon the spiritual life of the Associations. It is equally clear that up to the present there is no evidence whatever that they have contributed to the strengthening of that life or to the greater usefulness of the spiritual agencies. I do not believe that one Association is to be found in this country in which there is not the fullest intention, on the part of the Committee and officers to, as it is said, "keep first things first," whatever this may mean. But principles are stronger than good intentions. Intentions operate only while men are awake or wide awake. Principles sow while men sleep. The maintenance of a missionary spirit is the antidote to the tendency of Associations, no less than individuals to backslide. The Christian who is fully occupied in service for Christ is never puzzled to find new forms of recreation and amusement. So long as the members are devoting themselves to the real work of the Association, they have their hands full, and do not formulate a demand to be supplied with new forms of amusement. If the missionary spirit does not keep out worldliness from our midst, be assured, worldliness once admitted will drive out the missionary spirit.

A few suggestions are offered as to how the missionary spirit may be maintained.

(1) Let there be a definite recognition in all our arrangements of the transcendent importance of the spiritual life. The large provision made by Associations to supply the wants of the present life tends not a little to render dubious what the answer to the question, "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" should be.

(2) Exercise care that the spiritual atmosphere breathed by those who come within the walls of our Associations, is one of loving, warm, and sympathetic testimony to Christ. If the testimony of the Association itself is somewhat mixed, that of its members is not likely to be very clear.

(3) Honour the Word of God by giving to the members adequate opportunity to meet together to read and study that Word.

(4) Prayerfully seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit, both in regard to the work undertaken and the means employed. It will be well if, as a result, the means employed savour of heavenly direction rather than of human contrivance.

(5) Be careful in admitting members. The Associations which provide classes, restaurants, gymnasia, &c., invariably have "associateship" in addition to membership. There is no excuse therefore for admitting into the membership those whose sole object in joining is to get these advantages. If so admitted, they must become an incubus in our Associations, a sore burden upon those whose aim and desire it is to see the work of God prosper in our midst.

(6) A word of caution as to the constitution of our committees. If a committee is made up of persons, some of whom are chiefly concerned for the success of the educational classes, while others are specially interested in athletics, and others in social reform movements,—even supposing there are an equal number whose sole object is to carry forward the spiritual work, these latter must necessarily, at times, find themselves hampered in their efforts. This is a difficulty incident to the new order of things in our Associations, and all I can advise with regard to it is, that the utmost care be taken in proposing new members of committee to secure persons whose sympathies are decidedly on the side of the spiritual work.

Give the members plenty of direct work to do for Christ. Each is a born missionary, and his connection with our Association should impress this fact deeply upon him.

The Y.M.C.A. is essentially a Missionary Association. If an institution that has borne the name, ceases to be, first of all and most of all, a spiritual agency for the benefit of young men, it loses its right to be so described. If the Associations do not continue to be used of God in the direct work of winning young men to Christ, they will die out for want of helpers, even to carry on their own work; but if through Divine blessing a missionary spirit is maintained in our midst we shall see men raised up, not only to do the work of the Associations, but to be workers in the churches, and to go forth carrying the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour unto the ends of the earth. W. H. Mills.

"BUTTERCUPS AND DAISIES" is the pleasant and suggestive title of a little brochure giving particulars of the work of the Children's Fresh-Air Mission. Not a word is necessary in advocacy of such a Mission, and the good effects of one year's work may be judged from the fact that, in 1885, 1592 children living in Holborn, Clerkenwell, St. Luke's, and other poor districts, were sent into the country for three weeks, at a total expenditure of £1214 6s., or about 15s. 3d. per head. It is well to note that, where possible, parents are expected to co-operate by providing the travelling expenses of the children. We earnestly hope our readers and the public will assist the committee to effect this year, for a still larger number of children, such an excellent exchange as from stuffy homes in close alleys to sweet-smelling homes in the country. The treasurer is Mr. Walter Hazell, 6, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden, London, E.C.

For the Young.

A SEA-SIDE LETTER.

Dear Children,

HOUGH very few would know me if we were even meet one another on the sea-shore here, yet I m going to write you a letter, because—

(1) I love all boys and girls; and like, if I can, help them; and—

(2) There is something very much on my mind which you may be able to help me.

During the last few years I have travelled to any places, and have seen many strange sights. have been in the depths of an Australian gold ine, and at the top of the Great Pyramid, which me think that Melchisedec built; I have been a Maori canoe on a New Zealand river; and ave watched the myriads of bathers and wor- ippers, and the burning of dead bodies on the nks of the Ganges; I have wandered through e streets of Pompeii and Herculaneum; and ave walked miles, perhaps, through picture lleries in Italy and elsewhere.

But one thing I have never seen of which I ave often heard (I wonder whether any of you n tell me where to find it?). In a foreign llery, they say, is a painting of Christ, the auty of which attracts all eyes. And while e gazes on the representation of the Man of rrows, and realises a little what those sorrows ust have been, one's eye is caught by the in- ription above, or below, it—

> "All this I did for thee;
> What art thou doing for Me?"

Perhaps none of you have seen this picture y more than I have; but we can, at all events, e to our hearts the lesson which the painter nted to teach.

"I DID THIS FOR THEE."

What did Jesus do? What is He still doing us? Ah! I need hardly tell you who are ending the Children's Services what Jesus did. While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." ry little children can understand that, even fore they can speak plainly. "I thank you, sus," said one tiny girl, "'cos you was punished ead of me."

And what is He doing now? He is "receiving ts" at God's right hand for us.

' My God shall supply all your need," says St. ul, "according to the riches of his glory in rist Jesus." Now, what do we really "need"? ood, clothes, fire, and home. Yes, and God s given us all these necessities. But He has en us also far more than these. He has iven us richly all things to enjoy."

What special things has He given you to enjoy t lately? I think I can guess at least some of m.

First, there was the coming home from school, freedom from lessons and examinations. en there was the excitement of packing up and rting off for the sea-side; then the railway rney, the first sight of the sea, the first breath salt air, the first tea in the comfortable lodg- s, and the first visit to the shore. Who could r get tired of the sea-shore, with its sand, lls, and sea-weed? And now, too, you have Children's Services there, at which you hear God's best gift of all—of Jesus—for whose sake these other good things are given to you.

WHAT ART THOU DOING FOR HIM, then? I can- tell whether you—the boy or girl who is ding this letter just now—loves Jesus or not; one thing I do know, that if you love Him, want to be doing something for Him and for ers, for the love of Jesus drives selfishness out our hearts.

BUT WHAT can I DO? Did I hear some boy or ask that? That is just the very question I nt to hear, because I told you, you know, at beginning of my letter, that there was some- ng very much on my mind about which you ght be able to help me.

What would you do for Jesus if He were on earth now?" a little boy was asked. "I would run His errands for Him," said he. Ah! there are many ways of running His errands for Him, even as it is. He says, "Whoso shall receive one little child receiveth Me;" "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Yes, one doctor I know, says, "In every little child I see Christ."

And there are hundreds and thousands of poor little children in this and other lands—poor little sick children I am thinking of especially—who want a share of the good things you have. They need to be made well, to be sent into the country, to have gifts of food, books, and warm clothing, and to be told

> "The old, old story,
> Of Jesus and his love."

These and many other good things Medical Missions try to do for them; and I should be very glad if you would join a band of children which has been trying for eleven years to help forward their work. It is not a very large band as yet, so everyone who joins is a real help.

Think about it; and then if you would like to hear more about these Medical Missions, and this Children's Medical Missionary Society, write me a little letter, and you shall have some more news about them.—Believe me, your affectionate Friend, (Miss) Annie R. Butler.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.

Eight years ago I came to Poplar and began a simple homely work amongst women, which, under God's blessing, has succeeded far beyond expectation, by rendering aid to nearly one thousand eight hundred girls and women called lost. There was not a single open door for such in the neighbourhood; now I am thankful to say there are many, and much rescue work of all kinds is done.

The girls are received irrespective of age or condition, and we do the best we can for them according to our judgment and means. But alas! the latter element is sadly wanting, for my large personal acquaintance in the East-end brings numbers to me of all sorts and conditions of women with whom I am unable to deal.

Surely this branch of Christian work is an important one, and has proved its own usefulness. Given the means, I could fill many houses, but wanting them I have had constantly to send away numbers of girls who have come pleading for shelter. It is a serious matter that such girls should, in a Christian country, have to say they were sent from a door professedly open to receive them, not willingly, God knows, but because there was not room to take them in.

Last spring, a man cut the throat of a girl aged nineteen in a house near here. Twenty houses of the kind in the same street were closed within a week, and the inmates scattered. I could have taken thirty girls right off the streets at once, most of them much impressed by the awful fate of their late companion; but I was obliged to let the opportunity pass.

This must often be the case, as houses come to be closed under the working of the new Act, unless more help is given; but I am praying for this, that I may be able to take in any girl who comes, for the sake of Him who spoke such wonderful words to the "woman which was a sinner." Anna Wilkes.

THE SAILORS' REST, NAPLES, which was visited by about a thousand sailors from November, 1884, to May, 1885, has now been re-organised and placed upon a firmer basis. It was reopened on Feb. 12 by the British Consul, as a superior attraction to the wineshops and similar places so often frequented by sailors. Many sailors have expressed their gratitude for the benefits received in connection therewith, and it has proved a valuable auxiliary to the Bethel Ship. It is conducted entirely on unsectarian and temperance principles. An English lady has offered to the committee her gratuitous services, undertaking to live at the Rest and to fulfil the duties of directress. About £100 a year is required to maintain the work in efficiency.

BIBLE STUDIES.—24.

RESULTS OF SEEING THE LORD.

(1) Self-abasement. "Now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes" (Job xlii. 5, 6). "I saw the Lord . . . Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isa. vi. 1, 5).

(2) Salvation. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved" (Isa. xlv. 22). "If a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived" (Num. xxi. 9). "They looked unto Him, and were lightened" (Ps. xxxiv. 5).

(3) Transfiguration. "We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18). "Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while He talked with him" (Exod. xxxiv. 29). "All that sat in the council . . . saw his face as it had been the face of an angel. He saw the glory of God, and Jesus" (Acts vi. 15, vii. 55). "When He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is" (1 John iii. 2).

(4) Separation. "By faith he forsook Egypt . . . seeing Him" (Heb. xi. 27). "When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees. . . . And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all, and followed Him" (Luke v. 8, 11). "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord" (Phil. iii. 8).

(5) No fear of man. "Not fearing the wrath of the king . . . seeing Him" (Heb. xi. 27). "Fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. . . And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha" (2 Kings vi. 17).

(6) Endurance. "He endured, as seeing Him who is invisible" (Heb. xi. 27). "Because He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved" (Psa. xvi. 8). "Consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds" (Heb. xii. 3).

(7) Purity. "Whosoever abideth in Him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth, hath not seen Him, neither known Him" (1 John iii. 6). "He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God" (3 John 11). "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus" (Heb. xii. 1, 2).

(8) Joy. "Thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance" (Ps. xxi. 6, Acts ii. 28). "In thy presence is fulness of joy" (Ps. xvi. 11). "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty" (Isa. xxxiii. 17).

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION ROOMS (Blechynden-street, Notting-hill).—Besides the work amongst adults, much is being done here by way of "feeding the lambs," there is a large Sunday-school, an Evening Shelter, and a Night School for Boys, a Girls' Sewing-class and Night School, Band of Hope, &c. In addition to these, there is an Infant Day Nursery, the attendances last year numbering 2132. It is a pleasure to see such a deserving work so well sustained.

HOME FOR LITTLE GIRLS, EASTBOURNE.—The fifteenth annual report of this pleasant seaside Home for Girls is very satisfactory. The year was closed free of debt, the children had enjoyed good health, and the Home had been established in larger premises, so that now ten more children can be taken. There are thirty in the Home at present, and the public are informed that anyone subscribing £12 per annum can send a fresh child every month if they please. Friends in Eastbourne have very kindly sent numerous gifts of garden produce, and things useful for children, and are taking great interest in the work. Four girls had left the Home for service during the year. The total income for the year was £498 7s. 8d. The Secretary is Miss Lee, Hurst-road, Ocklynge, Eastbourne.

"AS HE WALKED BY THE SEA."

Mark i. 16.

Still Jesus walks beside the sea;
No sacred walls confine
The steppings of his ministry;
He knows no boundary line:
The waves, the pebbly beach, these are
His aisles—his organ heard afar.

Jesus still walks beside the sea,
And calls us one by one,
Lingers in loving sympathy
As He hath often done,
Whispers our names, and gently pleads
That we will follow where He leads.

Sweet to be called beside the sea
By his endearing voice,
Amid the Saviour's works to be Called to that Saviour's choice.
To leave all worldly gain—life's net,
And, following Him, all else forget.

Thy name He speaks! Hast thou not heard
In wind and wave his call?
And wilt thou slight the gentle word?
Shall it unheeded fall?
He walks beside thee! Can it be
Thou wilt refuse his "Follow Me"?

Yes, Jesus walks beside the sea,
And finds new followers there;
Saviour, I hear Thee speak to me,
Oh lead me anywhere:
And, humbly following, let me cast
Thy Gospel net till life is past.

INDIAN NATIVE CHRISTIANS AT PLASHET.

About sixty guests accepted the invitation of D. Henry Fry, Esq., on the 22nd inst., to a garden party at his residence, to meet Mr. Tucker, of the Indian branch of the Salvation Army, who was accompanied by three male and three female native converts.

Mr. Fry writes:—"Colonel Tucker gave a very instructive and telling account of some of his experiences in India. One of the natives—Major Weeresouruja—from Ceylon, was specially interesting, and spiritual in his address, and the simple but earnest manner in which he told of the workings of his own mind, and of his ultimate conversion, seemed almost to cast a spell over the party. The other two native men also spoke, and one of the females. The whole scene was very picturesque. A Turkey carpet was thrown over a large block of wood and a garden seat. Colonel Tucker and the three male converts sat cross-legged on the extemporised platform, and the three women in native dress were seated close by. Thus the party of Europeans, being instructed by these Orientals seated round them, under the shade of an oak tree on the lawn, formed a very unique scene."

SOUTHAMPTON Y.W.C.A.—The annual fete took place in the Deanery grounds on the 13th inst., by kind permission of Rev. Canon Wilberforce, who himself presided, supported by Lord Radstock, Major Poole, Rev. Evan Hopkins, Mr. H. Varley, and others. After hymns and prayer, the Canon heartily commended the endeavour of the Association to befriend and act in a Christian motherly way to young girls who are placed in circumstances of temptation in large towns like Southampton, separated from their families and the purifying influences of home. Rev. Evan Hopkins followed with an impressive address on Christian life and work, urging thoroughness and cheerfulness, and that, not content with their past attainments, they should press on to higher and better things. The Association is now possessed of excellent head-quarters, comfortably furnished, at 3, Lower Moira-place. The heads of several large business establishments in the town are doing what they can to help on its work, in the higher interest of their female assistants.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS.

On the 15th inst. Lincoln House, 12, York-place, W., was publicly dedicated as the Eighth Home for Working Girls in London. Rev. Dr. MacEwan presided. After singing Rev. G. D. Macgregor offered prayer, which was followed by a statement made by Mr. John Shrimpton, the honorary director of the Homes. About a year ago the present building was secured, which was brought about entirely by the suggestion of the Countess of Aberdeen, who stated in The Girl's Own Paper that it was necessary to collect £1000 before any steps could be taken. The lease cost £1750, whilst the needful alterations and furnishing demanded £2000 more. He referred to the class of young women for whom these Homes were provided, and alluded to their trials, hardships, and difficulties. They were toilers in workrooms and other businesses, in whose path there were few turnings, and to whom home life was an ideal, but to whom these Homes became a reality.

The seven Homes which had been established accommodate 345 inmates, and Lincoln House has 70 beds. If the stables in the rear can be secured, room will be made for 30 more. In view of the goodness of God in helping them to succeed so far, Mr. Shrimpton believed it would be most honouring to Him to have a purely religious dedicatory service on the present occasion, for the Homes would be nothing without Jesus Christ.

The whole of the arrangements are permeated with religious influences, and women are placed over the Homes who seek the highest good of the young women without being intrusive.

Rev. Dr. O'Brien then read a portion of Solomon's dedicatory prayer (2 Chron. vi. 12). A telegram was received during the proceedings from the Earl of Aberdeen, from Dublin Castle, expressive of the personal sympathy of the Countess and himself in the work of the Home.

The Chairman then offered the dedicatory prayer, and afterwards expressed his great interest in the work of the Homes. One feature, he said, was the quiet way they were carried on, without blowing of trumpets. While Napoleon was making the world resound with his exploits, a few devoted Christians were forming the British and Foreign Bible Society. The Emperor has disappeared, but the Society is now spread over the world. He was interested in the Homes, because they were for the benefit of women. The country that honoured women was sure to prosper, while the curse of God rested upon those countries which did not put women in their proper place. It was a sign of the times that so much attention was paid to the elevation of women in the social scale. Another reason he gave for supporting these Homes was the Christian atmosphere which pervaded them.

The Hon. A. F. Kinnaird engaged in a thanksgiving prayer, and the proceedings closed with the doxology. The Home was then inspected, and the greatest satisfaction expressed at the arrangements. The rent of bedrooms is 2s. 6d. to 4s. per week, including use of dining and sitting-rooms. Any communications can be addressed to Mr. John Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, London.

THE PADDINGTON HALL AND HYDE-PARK MISSION.—This Mission has long been doing a useful work, and the reality of work done in past years is demonstrated in the report for the past twelvemonth, which relates the case of a man who, with others, formerly annoyed the meetings, but who, nevertheless, was led by the words he heard to see his folly, and, turning to Christ, died rejoicing. Other instances are given of the value of preaching in the park, and of how wonderfully in many cases the word goes home to the heart. A very interesting account is also given of work among the fallen women of Hyde-park, and in the dust-yards of Paddington, showing how blessed are they who "condescend to men of low estate." The address of the Superintendent, Mr. Davidge, is 90, Church-street, Paddington-green, W.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN MELBOURNE.

The following is taken from a letter from Dr. Singleton to Miss Annie R. Butler, of the Children's Medical Missionary Society, London, dated March 22, 1886:—

My dear wife is gradually failing. We are each in our seventy-ninth year, and have had a most happy life. "Oh, to grace, how great a debtor!" "We have a house, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens;" and good title-deeds. "These cannot be shaken." I thank God for inclining my heart to work in his vineyard, and giving me the work. Oh, blessed work! I still go through my five Bible-classes, the various mission works to the Watchhouse Gaol and "slums" of Melbourne, and low lodging-houses, 400 in one, where I hold an evangelistic service on Sunday mornings, and two or three days at the dispensary, where God the Holy Spirit opens many hearts to receive the Truth.

I feel my time is short. I am getting fellow-labourers trained for the various parts of the work, to continue when I am called home! "We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us!"

I ought to be helping you with young persons collecting, but perhaps I might get others to organise on your model the good work among children. Your books are so interesting. You have a happy way of opening children's hearts to good things.

In the Mission House next the dispensary some 1500 have been brought to Christ since you were in Melbourne, and over 35,000 attended the Free Medical Dispensary since then. . . The Medical Mission prospers much. I have not yet been able to form a Children's Mission, after your noble and successful work which God has so blessed.—Your fellow-worker in Christ,

John Singleton.

An extract from the close of Dr. Singleton's last report, in reference to one of his helpers, states: "The infidel, with all the modern discoveries of science, who would break down the safeguards of our blessed Christianity, can offer nothing worth having as a substitute or in exchange for the perfect peace it imparts, nor could all the powers and boastings of Materialism or Scepticism induce a man or woman so unselfishly and incessantly and lovingly, for consecutive years, to raise the fallen, reclaim the drunkard, make the widows' and the orphans' hearts to sing for joy, and bring peace and comfort to the dying bed of the friendless poor, as this single-hearted Christian man has from love to his Redeemer alone."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN IN LIMEHOUSE.—Dear Sir,—I heartily thank the kind friends who responded to my appeal, on July 15, for friendless girls in Limehouse, and hope to report real, true work done for the Master. Meanwhile will friends pray that grace and wisdom may abound where sin and ignorance are so rampant.

Yours truly, Ada Forsaith.

INVALID LADIES' HOMES.—Among the many useful institutions, these take a high place. Many ladies of limited means creditably endeavour to maintain an independence by various efforts; but when in addition to failing resources there is added continual illness, their case is deserving of much sympathy. To enable such to recruit and recover health, Homes have been opened in different places in England and on the Continent. These are conducted on such principles as are found best by the experience of the managers. That all are not satisfied with the regulations is only to be expected. Still, on the whole, the kind superintendents do all in their power to render the Homes comfortable and conducive to the health of the inmates, as we can testify from visits to the institutions and conversation with those who have benefited by them. At Cannes there is the old Asile Evangelique and the New Ladies' Home. At Mentone, Villa Helvetia, and at San Remo, Villa Emily receive a number of invalid ladies at moderate rates. Necessarily these Homes require to be supplemented by the contributions of the benevolent, and they are well worthy of increased support.

ISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

R,—The public can scarcely be aware how uch real good has been effected by the agency the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, or I elieve not many days would elapse before the y for more mission vessels, for fleets as yet nsupplied, would be liberally and fully re- onded to.

The six vessels now commissioned have been e means of conferring immense benefit upon ndreds of smacksmen, while pursuing for two onths at a stretch, and at all seasons of the ear, their perilous calling on the high seas, and e men hail these vessels as houses of God and ouses of mercy, wherein they can obtain what ey need, both for soul and body.

Not only are six more Mission vessels needed, order that one may be stationed with every eet, but the current expenses involved in effi- ently maintaining the various agencies of help d healing are exceedingly heavy.

Before this Mission was established, if a fisher- an fell ill, or met with any accident in the pur- it of his calling, several days elapsed before he uld be taken to the hospital ashore, and fre- ently, when he reached it, the doctor had to ake his head, and say, "Too late." But the ippers of these Mission vessels go through a urse of training to qualify them for the certifi- tes of the St. John's Ambulance Association d the National Health Society, and thus are le promptly to minister health and healing to ose who, from the nature of their vocation, are nstantly exposed to risks unknown to us who dwell at home at ease." Thus has much ffering been alleviated, and many men have turned from visiting the dispensary on board e Mission Ship with new desires, new resolves, d new hopes for this world and the world to me.

Books and other means of recreation are ovided, and a most important and success- l crusade has been carried on against the ischievous foreign "copers." Not only ve numbers of smacksmen become pledged stainers, but the supply of tobacco at 1s. per . by the Mission vessels has effectually check- ated these pests of the North Sea, and com- lled, in several instances, a discontinuance of eir vile trade.

I have myself heard smacksmen speak in ost grateful terms of what the Mission has ne for their class; and I recently heard one the largest owners state publicly that his nployes had become "better servants, better en, better husbands and fathers, better in ery way," through the work carried on nongst them while at sea.

If the small pamphlet, entitled, "The Price of ish," could be reprinted by every newspaper in e land, people would learn with interest what es on in the little floating world of fishermen -their labours, their privations, and their ials—and it would not be long before more of ese mission vessels would be fitted out to nvey joy, and peace, and comfort to the ousands who are risking their lives for us at a.

If your readers will communicate with E. J. ather, Esq., Founder and Director of the ission, at the Offices, 181, Queen Victoria- reet, E.C., I am sure he will gladly give every formation, and also explain what a real work charity is going on.—I am, Sir, your obedient rvant, GRAFTON, Vice-President.

Skipper White, of the Cholmondeley, writes from e Short-Blue Fleet, under date of May 30:— We have had a glorious day to-day, and felt e Lord very near to us. We had thirty-eight board this morning, and thirty-three this ternoon. Bless God! fourteen out of the irty-three stood up and testified to the saving ower of Christ."

On May 31, Skipper Jones, of the Edward uriol, writes from the Grimsby steam trawling eet:—"After leaving the Short-Blue Fleet we ade for the Grimsby Ice Fleet, and arrived at the ground that White had told me of. We looked about for them three days, and then heard that the Grimsby fleet were at the Light. When we got here we found that it was not the Ice Company's fleet, but another, the fleet of Grimsby and Scarborough and Brixham vessels, about 140 in all, besides one or two other little fleets, with the 'Red Cross' close at hand; so there is work here for a week or so. Yesterday we had three meetings on board. It was a good day, about seventy in all came, five for medicine. Many were the prayers that ascended on behalf of the ladies and gentlemen that are so good to the fishermen. Some heard the Gospel yesterday that had not entered a place of worship for a long time. We gave away 1000 tracts and magazines."

Skipper Goodchild, of the Thomas Gray, writes from the Grimsby Ice Fleet under date June 16:—"Since I have been in this fleet this time our efforts have been blessed by God. We have had two fresh ones come out for the Lord. We had a glorious day the last Sabbath. I do think it grand to hear my rough and hardy brothers telling us what God has done for them, and how their wives and children asked God to bless and prosper the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen."—Toilers of the Deep.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE work done since the opening of the Anchorage House in June, 1882, is comprised under two heads. 323 respectable young women have been variously dealt with, 173 being received into the House, 73 placed with some member of the family, or with some respectable person in the country, while 48 were placed in other institutions. Of these many were the daughters of those in a good position in life, and as such received special treatment. Under the other head, 603 poor creatures have been rescued from the lowest depths of sin, and of these the greater proportion have been cases of real and permanent rescue. Help, it is good to write, is given to former inmates of the House in the way of clothing, towards payment for the nursing of their infants, &c., the Committee feeling there is no use in taking up such difficult cases unless prepared to go through with them faithfully to the end. Over and above all, the main object of the Mission is the winning of souls for Christ; and from the changed life and conversation of many, and extracts from letters written by those who have left the Home, it is believed that this grand result has been largely attained. A very important point also is the reconciliation of girls to their parents, and the efforts of the Committee in this direction have been attended with the happiest results. "The Lord hath need" of a work such as this, as the president, Colonel Stuart Wortley, says in his concluding remarks, "God has blessed in a very marked degree the work that He has privileged us to carry out together in Christian brotherhood."

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS.

INCLUDING Tyndall House, Chelsea, there are eight of these Homes now open in different parts of London, and the 320 beds they contain were nearly all occupied at the close of the year. The weekly payment for lodging, in addition to 4s. 6d. for food, which covers the cost, is 1s. for boys whose weekly wages do not exceed 6s., those who earn more being charged an additional 2d. in the shilling. Each boy, however, costs the Institution about £6 per annum, so that the total expense is about £2000; but the result achieved, that of providing a Home for so many boys, who would otherwise be subjected in nearly every case to the very worst influences, may well excite the liberality of the Christian public. The reports of the different Homes are all that could be wished, and tell of the appreciation on the part of the boys, and of much enjoyment in their Homes, where all that can minister to their well-being is provided for them. The annual excursion naturally forms a red-letter day.

MR. J. B. WOOKEY has resigned the secretaryship of the Gospel Purity Association, though remaining on their staff as lecturer. As, however, his whole time will not be thus occupied, he is open to engagements for preaching the Gospel in London or the provinces. His address is 90, Almack-road, Clapton Park, E.

MRS. BUTLER'S HOUSE OF REST.

THE character of the work during the past year has been slightly modified. We have had so many calls and visits from friends, either engaged in rescue or hospital work, or themselves requiring help and spiritual teaching, that we seem to have been providentially led to make our House in a more general sense a House of Rest. I have, therefore, had some rooms fitted up with a tolerable degree of comfort, either for a single inmate or for two. A large room has also been furnished as a drawing-room for common use. Besides this we have our dormitory apartment for the poor girls who come to us. It would be difficult to describe, without giving special instances, the character of the cases which we receive; occasionally a poor governess, sometimes of the better class in life, who has fallen into terrible snares and sin; sometimes a desolate, friendless being, who wishes to be strengthened in faith, or in general health, before trying for a situation or work in life. Again, we have visits from most valued friends—religious teachers, both ladies and gentlemen occasionally, and for these there is reserved "a prophet's chamber." You will thus see that our House is not entirely as it was at the beginning—a hospital.

Our good matron has suffered in health, and is getting on in years, and the care exclusively of these poor patients, afflicted often with terrible maladies, became too much for her. It lightens her work, in fact, to have such a variety as I have described introduced into it. I believe I can say that our little House has been, and is, a centre of blessing. Our largest room (and our little garden during the summer) is open for meetings for the advancement of the higher spiritual life, and also for meetings into which are drawn the worst and most wretched of the fallen class. You will thus see that it is difficult to give an exact name to the work done, but I trust that friends disposed to support it for another year will be assured that it is a work upon which God's blessing rests.

The rent of the House is £50, and as I may have to accompany Canon Butler from home for a change after his long and severe illness, it would make me very happy to see, before leaving Winchester, the work prospering free of debt. It will be under efficient superintendence during my enforced absence. Letters in reply to this may be addressed to Miss Humbert, House of Rest, Canon-street, Winchester.—I remain, yours truly, JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

The Close, Winchester.

PRAYER FOR TEMPERANCE.—Many members of the British and Colonial Temperance Congress express their wish that Sunday, August 1, should be observed as a day of special prayer for the Temperance movement throughout the world; that the new British Parliament may enact such legislation as will most promote the success of the Temperance movement throughout Her Majesty's dominions. We trust our readers will bear this in mind.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENT.—At a special meeting of the Committee of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association on the 19th inst., Mr. James Halford in the chair, it was reported by the secretary, Mr. Charles Hill, that the Great Eastern steamship was illegally opened on Sundays with concerts, &c., as a place of amusement for money payment, and that a large amount of Sunday trading and Sunday labour was carried on from 10 a.m. till 8 p.m. every Sunday. Counsel's opinion had been taken on the subject, and the managers refused to observe the law.—Mr. Watts, millwright, moved, and Mr. Williams, packer, seconded, "That for the protection of the large number of working people who are employed in connection with places of amusement and whose Sunday rest is endangered by the Sunday opening of the Great Eastern steamship as a place of amusement, instructions be given to the solicitors to the association to institute legal proceedings at once against the managers of the company." The latter, however, welcome this action as tending to revive acquaintance with an all but obsolete law, which, they maintain, requires but to be known to be resented and ultimately repealed.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait and sketch of Rev. Canon Hoare, of Tunbridge Wells.

We are glad to learn that Richard Weaver is better, and could take a few engagements, not too heavy.

We are exceedingly glad to know that, at the time of going to press, the improvement in Mr. Samuel Morley's condition was being maintained.

We greatly regret to say that our dear friend, Mr. George Pearse, of Algeria, is lying at Paris dangerously ill of African fever. Will our readers pray that, if it be the will of God, he may be speedily restored?

The twenty-fourth annual Conference at Perth will be held in the City Hall, from September 14 to 16. Information as to the general business of the Conference will be furnished by Mr. James Mudie, of Montrose; and particulars regarding lodgings, &c., will be furnished by Mr. Charles Logan, 12, King-street, Perth, N.B.

The Annual Christian Conference, having again for its subject "The Evangelisation of the World at Home and Abroad," only giving more prominence to Home Evangelisation, is fixed for November 9 and 10. The Conference Committee includes such well-known names as Reginald Radcliffe, Rev. Prebendary Macdonald, Rev. Canon Stowell, Isaac Hoyle, Esq., M.P., W. H. Houldsworth, Esq., M.P., Herbert Philips, J.P., F. W. Crossley, Esq., J.P. The conveners are hoping for the presence of the leading workers for God, both at home and on the Continent and they ask the prayers of the Lord's people everywhere.

All communications to the Conference Secretaries: Messrs. Leonard K. Shaw, J. Wakefield MacGill, Gilbert R. Kirlew, Central Refuge and Home, Frances-street, Strangeways, Manchester.

We have no disposition to add to the numerous articles which have been written on the revelations of gross vice made before Sir James Hannen last week. But we cannot help asking how much of this kind of thing is there among the wealthy classes? Is this a hideously exceptional episode, or an indication of the direction of the current? In its coarsest details probably the former; in its less satyrish developments we fear the latter. In 2 Tim. iii. 1—5, the Apostle enumerates some characteristics of the perilous times of the last days, few of which have been lacking in the self-loving, unholy, truce-breaking lovers of pleasure, who were concerned in those shameful proceedings.

God will know how to award to each according to their doings. But it becomes his people to humble themselves on account of a state of society in which such things are possible. Our moral and social, no less than our political condition requires that the nation should humble itself before Almighty God, and we would here repeat what a correspondent recently suggested, that petitions should be poured in upon Her Majesty, praying that a day may be set apart for national humiliation, confession, and prayer.

Consequent upon Monday next being a Bank Holiday, necessitating our going to press earlier than usual, all advertisements and communications for next issue should reach the office not later than first post on Friday morning.

Lectures on "Nature and the Bible" have been delivered in Bonn by Dr. Reusch, the Roman Catholic Professor of Theology. They go carefully into the interpretation of the first and second chapters of Genesis, and, in the light of the most advanced science, maintain their inspiration. Dr. Reusch rejects the Darwinian theory of man's origin; pronounces as unsatisfactory what has been written on Natural Selection, and shows that modern investigations proceed in every direction in favour of the human race having descended from one pair. He conceives that the six periods of Genesis were so many thoughts or ideas realised in the mind of the Creator, and that the length of time occupied is of no religious importance. The Divine teaching is—that all were separate and world-forming acts of God.

Canon Liddon's recent sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral, after his return from the East, took very firm ground as to the narrative in the Book of Judges concerning Deborah, Jael, and Sisera. This has long formed a stock argument with infidels. The Canon contended that Jael was a true child of the desert; she had not our ideas of treachery; she saw in Sisera the enemy of the truth, and the foul oppressor who was to be entrapped and killed like any wild beast. Deborah saw in Sisera the enemy of God, who represented an inhuman idolatry which had been divinely sentenced to extermination, and she pronounced Jael blessed among "women in the tent," i.e., women who lead such a wandering life as the Arabs led. We confess our conviction that this method of grappling with a difficulty is far better than a modern habit of apologising for the narrative of the Bible wherein it occurs.

Dean Oakley sometimes says rash things, but his paper on the "Clergy and the Poor," read before the meeting of the Additional Curates' Society, strikes a timely note. He contended that the churches were for the many, not the few; that brotherhood should be translated into act; that pains should be taken for the poor, and as much respect shown for them as for the wealthy; and that attempts to understand and benefit them must be on equal terms. There seems to have been too much silence after the reading of the paper on the substance of it. Few subjects are just now more vital than this to national well-being.

Meetings of the clergy, discussions, and conferences, have lately filled many of the columns of the Church journals. They deserve note for their eminently practical nature. A variety of topics relating to the real work of the clergy and the social aspects of the times have been brought to the front, and have been discussed with a sense of their growing importance. It will be well if among all religious bodies mere clerical talk, which has little to do with the life of the nation, and passing resolutions which come to nothing, are to be reckoned among the things that are past.

If the newspaper reports are to be relied upon, a great preacher has arisen in Italy, preaching "the faith of the Apostles," and swaying his audiences as did Savanarola four centuries ago at Brescia and Florence. It is stated that during a mission at Pisa, conducted by this Franciscan monk, work has been almost entirely suspended, labourers, operatives, and professional men alike flocking to hear the old, old story; and that when the preacher left the town, thirty thousand people gathered to escort him to the station.

There is room in Italy, not only for another Savanarola, but for many. History repeats itself, however, and Fra Agostino de Montafeltro need not be surprised if Rome sets itself to crush him, as it did his great predecessor, if he ventures to preach the simple truth as it is in Jesus, and to point his hearers, not to the crucifix with its dead Christ, but to the living, risen Saviour, the one and only Mediator. In her conflicts with individuals, however, the Romish Apostasy has by no means invariably been victorious, and in some of those instances where she has seemed to conquer victory has been less profitable to her than defeat, and it may be that should she close her eyes to the lessons of the past, and attack this new leader, she may find that already he has an army behind him of those whom the truth has made free.

An Irish contemporary expresses the belief that, "whatever may be the issue of impending changes, times of greater light and blessing are coming to Ireland," and that "these agitations, which are shaking all the great institutions of the land to their very foundations, are liberating the mind of the people from many a slavery. There has been an awakening of the national mind which in the main fills us with hope, for it is not for trivial results that the God of providence has brought about changes which have already transformed the face of the country. There may be trouble before us, but we have no fear of the result. The truth of God is imperishable."

To some of our readers in the sister island these words may seem too optimistic, but the view which they express seems to be supported by a report of one of the Colportage Societies at work in Ireland, from which we learn that during the past year the portions of the Holy Scriptures sold to Roman Catholics exceeded by 2000 the number in 1888. There is in this simple fact much ground for thankfulness, for have we not the Divine assurance, "My Word shall not return unto Me void"?

A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette, July 18, writes:—

> Can nothing be done to vindicate our civilisation in face of the bull-fighting that goes on at Linea, entirely kept up by the patronage of the British garrison at Gibraltar? Some English ladies, even, have been there this season, and on one occasion at Algeciras not only sat through the killing of seven bulls, but returned to the shambles next day. English people, of both sexes, would, doubtless, frown at anyone who proposed that they should haunt the slaughter-houses in their own country, where the cattle are knocked on the head secundum artem, to provide for man's necessities. But they will flock time and again to a place where animals are put to death by slow tortures for the amusement of a brutal crowd.

There is little room for English men and women to boast of their superiority over Spain, so long as, notwithstanding their greater advantages, they indulge themselves in the same low pleasures.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Orphan and Destitute Children."

Opening of the New Infants' Home,

HAWKHURST, "BABIES' CASTLE," KENT.

H.R.H. PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE (Duchess of Teck)

HAS MOST KINDLY NAMED

MONDAY, AUGUST 9, (D.V.)

For the opening of this new Branch for the reception of Infant Children.

Purses containing not less than £10 towards the funds of "BABIES' CASTLE" may be presented to Her Royal Highness on the occasion.

Ladies or children desiring to offer such gifts are invited to communicate with Dr. Barnardo at once, who will forward empty purses to be filled.

A Special Train will (D.V.) leave Charing Cross on Monday, the 9th August, to convey Visitors to "BABIES' CASTLE." The times of departure of this Train are as follows:—

It will leave Charing Cross at 1.10 p.m.
" " Cannon-street " 1.18 "
" " London Bridge " 1.22 "
arriving at Etchingham at 2.54 p.m.
It will leave Chislehurst at 1.41 p.m.
" " Sevenoaks " 2.0 "
" " Tunbridge Wells " 2.23 "

The return train will leave Etchingham at 7.0 p.m.

At Etchingham, passengers by this train holding Special Tickets, will be met by Carriages to convey the whole party to the pretty little country village of HAWKHURST, six miles distant, where "BABIES' CASTLE" stands.

By an arrangement with the Railway Companies, and with Carriage Proprietors, fares have been fixed at the lowest possible return rates, which include Railway and Carriage Fares both ways. They are as follows:—From either of the three LONDON Stations to ETCHINGHAM and back, including the return journey by road to Hawkhurst: First Class, 15s. 6d.; Second Class, 11s. 6d.; Third Class, 7s. 6d. (By an error these fares were quoted in last week's announcements 1s. lower).

" Sevenoaks "	...	" 9s. 9d.	" 7s. 8d.	" 5s. 8d.
" Tunbridge Wells "	...	" 6s. 6d.	" 5s. 6d.	" 4s. 7d.

Arrangements have also been made by which Visitors from HASTINGS, EASTBOURNE and BRIGHTON by certain trains can obtain Return Tickets (including carriage conveyance to Hawkhurst) at greatly reduced prices.

The times of the trains, and the return fares, are as below:—

From HASTINGS 1.40 p.m., arriving at Etchingham at 2.14 p.m. Fares—First Class, 7s.; Second Class, 5s. 10d.; Third Class, 4s. 9d.

From EASTBOURNE to Hastings, 12.54 p.m. Leave Hastings 1.40 p.m., arriving at Etchingham at 2.14 p.m. Fares—First Class, 9s. 7d.; Second Class, 8s.; Third Class, 6s. 6d.

From BRIGHTON to Hastings, 11.35 a.m. Leave Hastings 1.40 p.m., arriving at Etchingham at 2.14 p.m. Fares—First Class, 11s. 6d.; Second Class, 9s. 7d.; Third Class, 7s. 9d.

Passengers for Hastings Eastbourne and Brighton will leave Etchingham by train at 7.20 p.m.

All these tickets must be obtained beforehand from the Office of the Institutions, as below; and as, owing to the situation of the village, arrangements have to be made well in advance, no tickets can be supplied at these Special Rates, or to include Carriage conveyance, the orders for which arrive later than by the first post on Friday, August 6.

REFRESHMENTS will be provided on the grounds at moderate rates for all not having Tickets for the COLLATION.

Friends proposing to be present will very much oblige and greatly facilitate arrangements, by sending AT ONCE for their Tickets, which are now being issued in the order of application. Letters ordering Tickets should contain a P.O.O., or Cheque in payment for the same.

To avoid delay, all communications on the subject of Tickets should be addressed to—

ORPHANAGE FUND.

THE SPEZIA MISSION FOR ITALY AND THE LEVANT.

At a meeting recently convened at the Bank of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., J. G. Barclay, Esq., in the chair, it was felt that, while the Spezia Mission for Italy was doing such excellent work in the country among the young and adult population, it was now most desirable that a Mission so signally blessed of God, which had entered on its 21st year of Christian labour, and which had gradually secured such hearty co-operation of Christians of various denominations, should now become more extensively known as an Agency largely adapted to be a blessing to the Italian people. It was also considered that—as the orphans Mr. Clarke took on himself the responsibility of supporting after the visitation of the cholera some two years since are not as yet able to enter the Home, because it is yet unfinished for lack of the requisite means—it is most important to make known this fact, and to urge the importance of soon raising the remaining sum of about £1,000 for the finishing the Home, the building the necessary School-rooms, and the furnishing of the same, &c.

The friends of the orphan, friends of Italy, and the friends of the necessitous, will rejoice to learn that in God's providence persons eminently fitted to superintend the Orphanage have been raised up to undertake this duty as soon as required.

Subscriptions towards this work of mercy will be thankfully received by

F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, City, London;

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS.

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every Fleet.

Rev. Daniel Wilson, the venerable and God-fearing vicar of Islington, whom God has recently called to his rest, is thus spoken of by The Church Times:—

> Gatherings of the London clergy, and especially of the clergy who affect Low Church views, will in future lack one well-known face. Rev. Daniel Wilson, who had been vicar of Islington since 1832, died somewhat suddenly on Tuesday night. In his way Mr. Wilson was a highly respectable clergyman, but his way was not a good one. In his evidence before the Ritual Commission, he boasted that under him, his father (the late Bishop of Calcutta), and his father's predecessor, Islington had been for a hundred years under the dominion of the same school of thought. Unhappily the patronage of the parish is in hands which forbid the hope of much improvement in its condition.

Whatever improvement may be desirable in Islington, we trust that it may be preserved from improvement on the lines of the Romanising school represented by The Church Times. In very grateful contrast to the above we commend to our readers the memorial articles in last week's Record. We hope to give a sketch and portrait of this good man in an early number.

Only ninety-five years have passed since the first English missionary went out to carry the Gospel to the heathen, and to-day there are "Christian communities more than three million strong, led by two thousand five hundred ministers of their own speech." In India alone, says a writer in The Quarterly Review, the last census showed nearly two million Christians.

Is it not a striking fact that the number of ordained native ministers is nearly equal to that of the foreign missionaries, and does it not bring irresistibly to the mind the declaration and promise of Christ, "I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto Me"?

> "I have always done my best to maintain that stage dancing was a beautiful art and an honourable calling, that the religious world had in the past done grievous harm by adopting a policy of isolation towards it, and that the leaders in the Christian Church owe it a debt of reparation which it will take long to repay. . . . I maintain, therefore, against two Bishops of London, and The Rock, and the religious world generally, that the dancers are in—not in spite of, but in—their vocation and ministry truly serving God. . . . If it is the whole of human life, every human faculty, which Jesus Christ by his incarnation has sanctified, then surely those artists who give pleasure directly, who amuse even more than they educate, are doing an important work equally with others."

These remarkable words form part of an article on "The Moral Ministry of the Ballet," which appeared only a week ago, and which might have been accepted as clever satire had not the writer's official connection with the "Church and Stage Guild" been widely known. That a clergyman in this nineteenth century should disseminate such views, and advocate attendance at places of so-called amusement which have become proverbial as haunts of indecency, is indeed a lamentable sign of the times, and the only comfort is, that Rev. Stewart D. Headlam seems to stand alone in his defence of an "amusement" which, to say nothing of its effect upon the performer, certainly does much to degrade the spectator. We should have thought that in a city like London, with men and women dying in every court, it would not have been difficult for a minister of Christ to find other and nobler work than that of writing up doubtful places and pursuits, and we heartily say Amen to the prayer of the late Bishop of London, that the writer of the paper we have quoted from, and of other similar articles, "may not have to meet before the judgment-seat those whom his encouragement first led to places where they lost the blush of shame, and took the first downward step to vice and misery."

The following letter relates to the People's Palace for East London:—

> SIR,—I have been asked to make a suggestion in your columns. It is that those of your readers who contribute to the funds being raised for the People's Palace should give on the condition that the Palace is not opened on Sundays. There are some who are taking an active part in the Palace who will leave no stone unturned to open it on Sundays: should they succeed the place will be a curse and not a blessing to East London, detrimental to the spiritual and best interests of the people. Under the cover of the word "sacred" the most determined efforts are being made by speculative companies to institute concerts and open exhibitions on Sundays. These companies are backed up by the Sunday Opening societies, by Secularists, and unfortunately by a few erratic clergymen. I earnestly ask the co-operation of your readers in an effort to preserve the Sabbath day.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Mr. Charrington wrote to the Secretary, asking whether the People's Palace would be open on the Lord's day, and whether intoxicating drinks would be sold. The reply was to the effect that while £30,000 remained to be collected, it would be premature to discuss these questions. On the contrary, £70,000 had already been subscribed, and these questions ought to have been discussed before that large amount was raised. Mr. Charrington has had a good many letters sympathising with his protest, and the suggestion has been made that a monster petition should be got up to be presented to the Queen, praying Her Majesty not to consent to open the Palace unless the trustees put a clause in the Trust Deed prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks on the premises. The British Women's Temperance Association and other organisations are already taking the matter up very warmly, and one gentleman has offered £500 towards the money required on condition that no drink is to be sold there.

From a singularly interesting paper in the current number of The National Review much information may be gathered with regard to the difficulties experienced by the labouring poor in their endeavour to make "both ends meet." The article, "National Enemies and National Defences," deals with "Ignorance, Greed of certain individuals or classes, Disease;" and the array of facts, figures, and illustrations throws a strong light upon one of the most pressing questions of the day, that of the amelioration of the lot of the poor, who are just hovering between a bare existence out of, and a repulsive existence within, the workhouse —the class who live almost literally from hand to mouth. It is wholesome to step out of the regions of sentiment to the study of a paper like Mr. Barnett's, with its keenly practical termination, and we commend its perusal to those of our many readers who are interested in the struggles of the deserving poor, and who desire to see them elevated into a purer atmosphere physically and socially.

It has been wisely said that in many cases the Christian life is like a mountain rill, all excitement and bubble and foam at first, but which, when it gets to level ground, becomes slower, and sometimes looks as if it were almost stagnant. There may be in the brook and the stream less visible life and motion than there is in the rill rippling over pebbles and trickling down to the plains, but if there has been loss in surface movement there has been gain in depth and volume, and the river no less than the rill flows on to the sea. Many people, looking back upon the emotional freshness of their feelings immediately after conversion, do so with regretful longings, under an impression that they have left something behind which ought to have been retained and carried into the more mature life; but such retrospection is based upon a fallacy where there is living faith, for the blossom of the spring has simply given way before the fruit of summer or autumn, and restless impulsiveness made a place for the fulness of peace.

However much we may depend upon money for our temporal comforts, "money is not required to buy one necessary of the soul." In this respect, therefore, as in others, poor and rich are alike before God, the fountain of eternal life being open to all who are willing to stoop to drink of its waters; God's goodness being shown in this, that the things which moth and rust cannot corrupt, are to be obtained "without money and without price."

There is a noble thought in the concluding words of the quaint old Morte D'Arthur, printed by Caxton: "For this book was finished the ninth year of the reign of King Edward the Fourth, by Sir Thomas Malory Knight, as Jesu help me, for his great might, as he is the servant of Jesu both day and night." In these days of hurried labour there is a temptation to look upon sleep merely as something which breaks in upon our occupations, and to forget that even in taking sleep we may serve God, going to it and rising from it with thankfulness, and asking Him, in the words of the old hymn,

> O may my soul on Thee repose,
> And may sweet sleep mine eyelids close,
> Sleep that shall me more vigorous make
> To serve my God when I awake.

We have more than once warned ladies advertising for servants against "a respectable-looking woman" who represents herself as the mother of a girl suitable for the place advertised, — gives references, and then says she must walk home, having already spent 4s. or 5s. on her philanthropic journey; whereupon the lady generally pays her fare to and fro. Instead of this, wire to the clergyman or gentleman to whom she refers. She will be found an impostor. The law was made for such (1 Tim. i. 9).

MARSEILLES.—Mr. C. E. Faithfull, whose work amongst seamen at this port has been gradually increasing since it was started in 1879, is now about to purchase a small vessel to enable him to extend the work. He has in view a yacht of 70 tons, which on deck would accommodate about 150 persons, the interior holding about the same number, and if used as a Home, from thirty to fifty persons might live on board, most of them sleeping in hammocks. It would thus serve the purpose of a Sailors' Home in any Mediterranean port, or could cruise about amongst other vessels as desired. A sea captain and his wife, who speak four languages, have offered their services without any remuneration, living on board the vessel, and keeping it in good order. This scheme will cost about £800. A friend has promised £50, on the condition that the rest be raised, and another has given £50. Mr. Faithfull's address is Le Repos, 71, Rue de la Darse, Marseilles.

TO CHRISTIAN TOURISTS.

Now the season for summer tours has again come round, will you kindly remind Christian tourists that whilst going from place to place they have a grand chance of scattering broadcast the Word of God, as well as various papers and Gospel leaflets, which are nearly always thankfully received, and can be obtained in all the European languages at many depôts both in England and on the Continent. Thus, whilst deriving personal good from their holiday, they may, under God's blessing, be doing good to the souls of others.

Allow me to add the address of some of the firms who supply what is needed, viz., The Religious Tract Society (Paternoster Row, London), and the Drummond Tract Depôt (Stirling, Scotland), who issue coloured cards with texts, which are most highly appreciated, and tracts. Mr. Josiah Spiers (48, Paternoster-row) sends well-illustrated children's leaflets. Mrs. Grimkè (Prestwich, Manchester) supplies very pretty coloured cards with texts. Baron Von Gemmingen (Gernsbach, Duchy of Baden), supplies French and German tracts, as well as Bibles, &c. Messrs. Spittler (4, Stapfelberg, Basle), sends tracts or Gospels, in either French, German, or Italian, to any part of Switzerland contre remboursement through the post, which is a great saving of trouble.

As during a trip wet weather will sometimes cause a halt, allow me to suggest the spare hours may be well employed when it is often difficult to find something to do, by printing or writing texts for the Hospital Flower Mission, of Mildmay, or 110, Cannon-street, London, who also supply cards at 1s. per 100 for printing the texts on. A little painting of a view, or a flower, or insect around the text makes it much more attractive, and, if nicely done, is highly valued, and makes the recipient often take care of the card after leaving the hospital. Messrs. Hadlow, lithographers, of Brighton, also supply cards for the above work of the form of a shield at 8d. to 1s. 2d. the 100, according to the colour. I perhaps ought to mention that the Cannon-street Flower Mission issue free a list of texts which they prefer to have done.

Hoping you will excuse the trouble I am giving you,
I remain, yours truly,
T. R. Fothergill.

St. Gothard, Andermatt, Switzerland.

P.S.—Travellers sometimes bring out books to read, which, when done with, might be left (if of a useful character) in the saloons of the hotels for the use of visitors, and may often do much good.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

THE report for the past year states that fifty-one meetings were held in London and the country, at which there was an average attendance of fifty-one women. The results were most encouraging, many, at their own request, being immediately taken away by friends to Refuges or Homes; while others call afterwards at the Society's office, and are sent to institutions suitable for them, and, in a variety of other ways, are led back to the paths of virtue. The full story of the work done at the different meetings, and in the streets by the agent, who traverses the metropolis from end to end during the hours of night, conversing and leaving with them copies of the Gospels or suitable tracts, is most touching and sufficiently convincing, both of the necessity for and the blessing attending such effort on behalf of a class, of whom it might have been said, but a short time since, "No man careth for their souls."

COATBRIDGE, N.B.—A series of three weeks' most successful meetings have been held here, under the auspices of the Evangelistic Association, by Mr. W. W. Dunn, in the Temperance Hall. This Association is composed of the various ministers in the town, with an elder or deacon representing nearly every congregation. The meetings were well patronised by the ministers of the town. Mr. Dunn is a great favourite with the Christians of Coatbridge, and deservedly so, as his labours here in the past have been signally blessed.

"SAVE THE CHILDREN."

With this striking motto, one which must touch the heart as could few others, the Reformatory and Refuge Union have for thirty years been diligently and perseveringly striving to interest public feeling on behalf of these little outcasts of society, of whom, though many are depraved and degraded, it may truly be said they are more sinned against than sinning. But, though little had been done before that time, much has been done since, on behalf of this unhappy class. And in the last few years, the national conscience has been awakened to some sense of the duty of protecting young girls who were the prey of men lost to everything but the gratification of their own lust. Earnest work has been done, as our columns have often borne witness, in this direction; and to Miss Ellice Hopkins is due the credit of having been instrumental in establishing, within the last three or four years, upwards of fifty institutions or associations for the care of friendless girls. The Council of this Union express the opinion that the Criminal Law Amendment Act will, from its penal character, have a beneficial preventive influence, but its usefulness in regard to the rescue and training of neglected children remains to be proved.

During the year 169 children have been removed from vicious surroundings, sixty-two being placed in certified industrial schools, until they are sixteen years of age; and since the institution of this part of the work, 1072 cases have been rescued or investigated. But this has not been done without difficulty, for, strangely enough, some of the magistrates have resolutely opposed the enforcement of the Industrial Schools' Act Amendment Act, under which proceedings are taken. In the year also the Boys' Beadle and the Shoeblacks' Beadle have together dealt with 890 children, of whom 171 have been placed in certified or voluntary homes, and altogether the cases of 8651 children have been investigated since the formation of the Union. The grants made to the several institutions where the children are placed amounted for 1885 to £824 18s. 2d.

The work of the Female Mission associated with the Union is also a most important one, and it is gratifying to know that no penitent woman is refused help. The houses of the Union are in different parts of the Metropolis, and during the year 1150 fallen women were assisted, no less than 18,754 from the formation of the Union. It is thankfully noted that now there are many Christian women ready to seek out the lost, and lead them, with sisterly sympathy, to a brighter hope, and that many associations have been formed for befriending the fallen. The work of the Union is indeed a Christianlike work in both its branches, and we again commend it to the cordial sympathy of our readers.

OBITUARY.

Mr. George Wilkins, of Derby, on the 21st instant, aged 55, after a protracted illness. Mr. Wilkins devoted himself not only to his business affairs, but also to the religious revivalist movement—first, in co-operation with Mr. George Mee, and afterwards, by himself, at the Theatre Gospel-hall. He was throughout his career Godfearing and zealous in promoting the spiritual welfare of his fellow-townsmen, and the number of them who owe their preservation from folly and vice, if not from crime itself, to his counsel and persuasion, is by no means small.—Derby and Derbyshire Gazette.

[We know that all this is true, and deeply regret the comparatively early decease of our beloved friend and brother. We exchanged portraits with him a few months ago, and were pained to see how worn and prematurely old he had become.—Ed.]

WORLD-WIDE PRAYER UNION.—At a meeting of the Union held at Clapham-road Conference Hall, it was decided to issue a circular calling upon all its members to pray for one fortnight commencing August 1, "that the Holy Spirit may open the eyes of ministers of all denominations to the blessed truth of the pre-millennial advent of our Lord, and that they may be led to preach the same instantly and constantly all over the world."

SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.

A meeting was held in furtherance of the movement for providing special religious services for the people in theatres, halls, and mission-rooms, by invitation of Mr. G. H. Powell and Miss Powell, at Cedar House, Hampstead Heath, on July 17, when it was stated that services had been held in fifteen public buildings, the lay preachers giving their services gratuitously; and it was a fact that those places of amusement which were most frequented during the week were best attended at the Sunday services. Grants were made to a large number of mission halls in aid of the services. The cost of the work last season was about £3000, towards which some £2300 was received, leaving about £700 to be raised. The poor districts of London were becoming poorer every year, through the well-to-do removing further afield, and it was on behalf of those who were compelled to remain that this work was done, and support sought from those who removed from the centre.

One speaker said he thought there never was a time when there was such an earnest seeking after truth as at present, men being dissatisfied with the negations offered to them, and the difficulties raised upon points in the Bible—raised too, as a rule by those who were most ignorant of that book. What was wanted was plain, earnest, intelligent preaching of the Gospel. There was a vast harvest to be reaped by such services as these.

The object of the movement is to wean people from going to objectionable places on week-days, and bring them to Christ. The secretary is Mr. C. Sawell.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Upper Burmah, since its annexation, has become a dreadful place for cheap drink and heavy crime.

A Conference, under the auspices of the Scotch Temperance League, is to be held on August 4, at Stranraer.

The new Dean of Armagh, Rev. G. A. Chadwick, D.D., is an abstainer, and has long been an earnest temperance worker.

The Times correspondent, in Philadelphia, states, the Pennsylvania Republican Convention is cultivating the temperance vote.

M. Pasteur says, habitual users of intoxicants, if bitten by a mad dog, are more difficult to cure than temperate persons.

It is stated that in Rio Janeiro, the punishment for drunkenness is a tin mask placed over the face and fastened behind with a lock.

At the recent Assizes, at Limerick, the judge said, intoxication had diminished by one-third, owing, not to want, but to increased sobriety.

A Sunday Closing Law has been passed for the city of New Orleans. The penalties range from 25 to 250 dollars, or 10 to 30 days in prison.

In Queensland, the Women's Christian Temperance Union is trying to secure the introduction of Dr. Richardson's Temperance Lesson Book into the schools.

A Provisional Committee has been formed to arrange for a United Temperance Fête in connection with the proposed International Exhibition, at Manchester, next year.

Mr. Noble has had a good time in New Zealand. He had immense audiences, and a local paper styles him "Successor to the late J. B. Gough." It is believed great good was done.

At Jaffna, Ceylon, Miss Leitch, an American lady, reports 1500 members of the Blue Ribbon Army. The singing of temperance songs in Tamil is an interesting feature of the meetings.

A federation of off-licence holders was formed, recently, at a meeting of delegates at Manchester. The object is, the defence of the trade against legislation detrimental to the trade.

The centennial of Portland, Maine, was held on July 4. Natives of the city were present from all parts as invited guests. The crowds were enormous, yet there was only one case of intoxication.

Rev. G. M. Murphy has attended 20,000 meetings, distributed a million and a half of tracts, and, assisted by fellow-workers, taken 50,000 temperance pledges. He has just finished thirty years work in London.

In his recent candidature, Mr. Arnold White said, he was in South Africa last year with Sir Charles Warren. He found five native tribes near the Zambesi. The furthest of them from the English colony were a magnificent set of temperate and chaste men, and in proportion to the nearness of the others to the English was their degradation by drink and foul disease.

At Stockport, recently, a publican was fined for supplying a girl under sixteen with spirits. The defendant had frequently supplied drink to children, and in the present instance five were drinking in his house till nearly eleven o'clock at night. The Mayor said, "the offence revealed a public scandal." We fear the police, generally, might find many similar scandals.

Letters to the Editor.

"BLOTTING OUT GOD" IN FRANCE.

SIR,—As my poem "Blotting out God," in THE CHRISTIAN of June 10, has attracted more than ordinary attention in France, and as one writer suggests that I have dealt unfairly with the Municipality of Paris in my condemnation of Modern Atheism, I would remind the defenders of French ways and opinions that telegrams in most of the London papers reported the anti-Christian decision which I denounced. Letters from France endorsed what I wrote; and the "Agnosticism" of beautiful, godless Paris is proverbial.

Eastbourne, Sussex. JOHN T. MARKELY.

DEAR SIR,—I cannot help feeling a little jubilant that Mr. Webber's criticisms on my letter of the 10th of June should reach me on the very day the French papers are recording another enthusiastic celebration of the Fête of the Republic.

What was the purport of that letter? To protest against the calumnies which are constantly being published in the London press against France and its Republic. This from The Echo about "Blotting out God" was a flagrant example. I pointed out its absurdity, and in so doing was led to say a word in favour of a body whose proceedings had been so carelessly misrepresented. The form of my letter and the warmth of some of its expressions show how little I expected it to be published.

Had I thought that I was writing for the press, I should have ordered my words with more precision. Thus the word "allow" in the first paragraph of the postscript conveys the impression that the legal authority to refuse or permit the McAll meetings rests with the Municipal Council of Paris. A recollection of the law of June 30, 1881, the articles of which I detailed in THE CHRISTIAN of January 12, 1882, would have caused me to express my contention in a way less open to criticism, and would have enabled me to make another claim to the gratitude with which the friends of the Gospel ought to regard the Third Republic, since it is to it they owe the right of public meeting, secured to all who conform to a few formalities and take care not to contravene public order and good morals.

As regards the Municipal Council of Paris, this explanation makes my case stronger, since it certainly proves a better attitude towards the Evangelical propaganda to refrain from irresponsible opposition, than to have simply been unwilling to walk in the footsteps of the Roman Church. For it is plain that a body, which to so great an extent has the confidence of the Parisian democracy, could have easily aroused such a feeling in Paris as would have obliged the promoters of the McAll and other kindred movements to close their doors. That nothing of the kind has occurred, or is really feared, shows the Municipal Council and the Parisian democracy know how to distinguish between a simple Gospel preached by those who have no political purpose to serve, and a Church whose great aim is to thwart, and if possible, crush the Revolution. To mix up these two causes, and to represent the Parisian democracy by their organ the Municipal Council, as entertaining the same animosity towards both, simply because they represent religionists, does the greatest possible disservice to the cause of evangelical religion in France, and appears to me an act the nature of which I cannot trust myself to describe.

Many who are working for that cause feel, I am confident, deep regret at the unjust things continually published in this country about France. Since my letter appeared it has brought me a highly-prized visit from Mons. Theodore Monod, and several letters from Christian workers in France, or who know the country, energetically thanking me for the protest made against these repeated calumnies of France and her beneficent institutions.

One pastor writes: "As a city, Paris, I know, needs constantly to improve; but it is always painful to read that you do wrong when positively you are in the right path. "Some of the books written according to the official programme contain the Divine Name. See pp. 124, 125, 'Instruction Morale et Civique.' Autorisé pour les Écoles de la Ville de Paris, medaille d'honneur, &c. (Paris: Fauvé et Nathan)."

I possess this book, and know with some intimacy its excellent author. If I were to send you a translation of the pages referred to you would be much surprised, and still more if you could know the writer, who is Deputy for the Gironde, and a style of man sadly wanting in the English Parliament and the American Congress.

RICHARD HEATH.

TO THOSE ABOUT TO MARRY: A SUGGESTION.

DEAR SIR,—Last week, a gentleman, a complete stranger, paid me a visit, and in the course of conversation gave me the interesting information that he was about to be married. The lady and he, it seemed, had been talking matters over, with the result that, instead of spending a lot of money on their tour, they resolved to use part for the purpose of sending poor children into the country for a fortnight's holiday. £10 was at once handed over, which I very gladly received, as my missionaries and district visitors come in contact with a large number of poor bairns who sadly need a breath of fresh air.

The kind act seemed so peculiarly excellent, that I thought the example ought not to be lost. Folks about to marry generally need a good deal of advice; here at all events they may find a suggestion. The honeymoon would be all the happier, and the after-life of more promise, if the needs of the destitute and weary were at the outset thus lovingly considered.

Faithfully yours,
W. EVANS HURNDALL.

THE INQUISITION.

DEAR SIR,—You may not be aware that what I see from your Notes and Comments, July 15, Father Anderdon is setting himself to do in England—viz., to defend the Inquisition—was done in Paris three years ago by the Dominican preacher, the Père Monsabré, during Holy Week in the Cathedral of Notre Dame. From what you gave of F. A.'s arguments, it is evidently much the same discourse in an English dress. The interesting side of the matter was that Monsabré declared the Church had never condemned before first meeting her adversaries on the fair field of argument, and securing the triumph of the truth in public disputations. To this Father Hyacinthe replied by sending a challenge to Mousabré to a public disputation, which, as a matter of course, the latter declined to accept. Father Hyacinthe, however, replied in the Cirque d'Hiver before an audience of five thousand people, and his discourse was printed. It would be well if someone valiant for the truth, and who has the means to do it, would get that discourse translated and circulated by hundreds as an antidote wherever the crafty Jesuit may be seeking by fair speeches to deceive the simple.

Perhaps you may care to call attention to this fact in a note. If I were in Paris I would send you the address, but it can easily be procured at Grassart's, Rue de la Paix.

SOUND LITERATURE FOR CALCUTTA.

SIR,—The rapid spread of the knowledge of the English language in India is creating a demand for English literature. The demand is met at present, in a great measure, by Unitarian and other literature in greater or less degree antagonistic to Christianity; and, what, perhaps, is worse still, low-class English novels, and sixpenny editions of such books as the "Mysteries of London," are largely read by almost every English-speaking native of Bengal.

We feel sure that every true friend of India must desire that the demand should be supplied in a healthier way. It is of immense importance that young men should have the opportunity given them of reading good books, and something that will raise their moral tone, and, we trust, lead them nearer to the Saviour of all men. With this object in view, we intend opening a free library in Calcutta and Burdwan for the use of non-Christian students and others.

We are also hoping that this library may be the means of bringing us into contact with many young men, and so lead to the formation of Bible classes, &c. Perhaps some of your readers can send some good, useful and readable books, which may be sent to the "Church Missionary Society, Book Depôt, Calcutta," care of Messrs. Elliot Stock & Co., 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Yours faithfully, W. H. BALL.

RAILWAY TRAVELLERS.—DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers who travel at this season of the year can serve the Lord by speaking a kind word to the railway servants, and giving them suitable literature. In past years many have written us for copies of The Railway Signal for that purpose. I should be glad if they would continue this service, and so help to extend our work amongst a worthy class.

The Book World.

THE SPRINKLED BLOOD. By Rev. ALEXANDER LUKE. Edinburgh: A. Stevenson. Mr. Luke is thoroughly true to the old Gospel. He writes with point and vigour, and emphasises the spiritual lessons taught by the Paschal feast.

MADDALENA, THE WALDENSIAN MAIDEN. Given in English by JULIE SUTTER. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. Young people who would like to know about the Waldensians, and the times in which they lived, should read this story. Its value is greatly increased by numerous quotations from Waldensian manuscripts.

THE ANTI-INFIDEL. Conducted by W. R. BRADLAUGH. Vol. I. 1s. 6d. John Snow & Co. The articles are short and interesting; the spirit is decidedly Christian; and the expositions of difficult passages are very helpful. The magazine should be useful to those workers for Christ who have to contend with infidelity.

THE EXPOSITION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By MATTHEW HENRY. Vol. iv. 4s. Jack & Co. A favourable opportunity is now offered to any desiring to obtain this valuable expository work. It is a cheap, well printed, and attractively bound edition. Capital engravings add to its usefulness. This volume embraces from Luke xvii. to John viii.

CLASSIFIED GEMS OF THOUGHT. By Rev. F. B. PROCTOR, M.A. 10s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. We have seen several treasuries of things new and old, but we have never met with one equal to this. It is not the work of scissors and paste, but the fruit of twenty-five years' intelligent study. Mr. Proctor has mastered many books, and he now gives to the public the cream of what he has read. Weary pastors will find here fresh and striking seed-thoughts, which should develop into useful discourses.

THE EVENING OF OUR LORD'S MINISTRY. By Dr. CHARLES STANFORD. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The gifted preacher of these remarkable homilies is dead, but he "being dead yet speaketh." His written words perpetuate his influence. His last book is in every respect worthy of its predecessors. It has learning, a bright play of fancy, heart-moving eloquence, and rare unction. There is a pathetic fitness in the fact that the closing days of the saintly ministry at Camberwell should be devoted to a study of the evening of our Lord's ministry.

HOME NURSING. By RACHEL A. NEUMAN. Dedicated, by permission, to H.R.H. the Princess Christian. 1s. 6d. W. & R. Chambers. This little book, under an unpretentious title, gives a great deal of useful information. Practical advice is given on nursing, administering food and medicine, and preventing infection. The chapters on "invalid appliances," and "sick-room cookery," are admirable. Though the book cannot and is not intended to supersede more scientific books written to assist professional nurses, it will be a real help to the numerous wives and daughters who are suddenly called to duties for which they have no fitness beyond a quick eye and a skilful hand.

On the 24th inst. The Graphic published a large Map of the World, showing by colours the extent of the British Empire. A large amount of valuable information, provided by Captain Colomb, M.P., is attached to each group of Colonies, showing the extraordinary growth in the population and trade of each.

A MIDNIGHT MEAL AND FLOWER SERVICE was arranged in May in the heart of our populous town. Cards of invitation were distributed in the streets between nine and twelve o'clock. Forty-four women and girls responded, and many were touched by the earnest friendly spirit of the meeting, God speaking to their hearts through the hymns, prayers, &c. Out of this number six at least have been restored to friends, or in other ways assisted, and kept from returning to their former life. A Cottage Home has been opened, where temporary care and Christian guardianship are give to those wishing to start afresh; and here it is the most pressing need for help is felt. Of the five girls who have been in the Home some weeks, four are now ready for service if any Christian friends could be found who would be willing to give them a trial. The dangers and difficulties are greater here, where they are known and beset by old companions, than they would be in another place. The girls are anxious to work; some have been tried as temporary helps, and proved themselves respectful and useful. Further information will be gladly sent by

THE SPEZIA MISSION FOR ITALY.

Like many other fruitful trees this Mission sprang from a small seed, but that seed was sown in faith and self-denial, and watered by prayer, and the blessing of God has very signally rested on it.

About twenty years ago Mr. E. Clarke sailed for Italy, having sold nearly all he possessed, including most of his books, to enable him to settle in a land of strangers with whose language he was not familiar, but among whom he was convinced that his path of future service lay. He has established eight Bible day-schools, with over 400 scholars; over twenty stations and twenty sub-stations; 200 Sunday scholars, directed by most zealous teachers; while Y.M. and Y.W.C. Associations, colportage, and work among the soldier and the sailor, all contribute as means to the great end of helping Italy, at a period when the Gospel is specially needed to enlighten her sons and daughters.

For some time it has been proposed to establish an Orphan Home, where children might not only be cared for, but also prepared for the battle of life, by learning the means of self-support, while being trained in Christian truth. It is an interesting fact that the care of orphan children in Italy appears to have specially occupied the heart of her great statesman, Cavour. An opportunity unexpectedly presented itself of buying a suitable house and grounds near Spezia, and a few noble friends of Italy and of the Spezia Mission came forward with the funds to secure the building, on condition that it should not be opened until the needful sum had been raised to purchase the house, fit it up, and leave a small amount in hand for working expenses.

Shortly after, the cholera threw several orphan children on Mr. Clarke's care. Fears were expressed by some hearty lovers of the Spezia Mission lest its extension in the way of an Orphanage might interfere with the proper sustentation of existing work. We are happy to say that such fears have been set at rest by actual experience since the extension has been proposed.

THE Y.M.C.A., PORTSMOUTH, will soon stand on a new footing. A site has been purchased for £1650 in an advantageous position, which will materially add to the usefulness of the institution. The building will cost £2500, exclusive of furnishing. Help is solicited by the secretary, Mr. Ernest Birch.

INDUSTRIAL HOMES, FOREST-HILL.—There are now thirty-nine boys and fifteen girls in these Homes, and good progress has been made during the past year. Unfortunately, the account of the Girls' Home shows a heavy loss, whilst the Boys' Home has been a success. The cost of maintenance, education, and clothing is about the same—£20 17s. in the one case as against £20 14s. 6d. in the other; but the boys earn much more, £3 17s. 8d., the girls only reaching £1 6s. 1d. The education reports are good, and much is done for the recreation and training, bodily and spiritually, of the children.

OUR MILITARY PRISONERS.—On Brixton-hill frequently you may see men set at liberty from the military prison there without a friend. One morning my attention was called to a tall young man just released, but an evident stranger. Passing a public-house, some loungers outside got hold of him. I need not say how he fared in such company. Are there not some Christian ladies in the neighbourhood who would take this matter up, and give advice and help to those poor fellows before getting into the hands of the depraved—help and advice which at that critical time are invaluable?

C. P. H.

THE SERVANTS' MISSION (14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea) has just issued a very satisfactory report—the nineteenth. A good deal is done by giving Gospel books to footmen and coachmen whilst they are waiting at various entertainments, and conversation is thus encouraged, with the result that sometimes witnesses for God stand out to confirm the testimony given. About 250 godly men and women are banded together in the Christian Servants' Association. Both the Men's and the Women's Home have again been most valuable aids. Two hundred and eight men passed through the former, and 230 women through the latter, to the blessing, no doubt, of many.

Mission and other Appeals.

Summerbank Home.—Funds are at present urgently required to feed, educate, and clothe sixteen destitute little children. The Home, which is entirely supported by voluntary subscriptions, is conducted most economically, each child's food costing about fourpence per day. There being no paid treasurer or collectors, every penny given goes directly to the support of the children. £50 would greatly help, and £100 would remove all anxiety. —(Miss) Agnes M. Logan, 26, E. Claremont-street, Edinburgh.

The Hospital for Affections of the Speech (22, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C.) is the only charity in the Metropolis devoted to the treatment of poor persons suffering from the very numerous affections connected with the delicate and sensitive organs of speech, often totally incapacitating the unfortunate sufferers for their ordinary duties, and always productive of great pain and distress. It has, with very moderate Christian support during past years, effected a large amount of benefit amongst this class of sufferers, and many patients are now waiting for admission. We are not, however, in a position to receive these deserving applicants, and for lack of support shall be most reluctantly compelled to reduce the extent of our operations.—Joseph E. Allen, Hon. Secretary.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—August 1, Acts xxiv. 1—16; August 2, xxiv. 17—27; August 3, xxv. 1—12; August 4, xxv. 13—27; August 5, xxvi. 1—18; August 6, xxvi. 19—32; August 7, xxvii. 1—17.

SHEFFIELD.—In connection with the Rescue and Evangelisation Mission a new hall was opened on the 10th inst. by Mrs. Cobley, of Leicester, who assisted in special services held by Messrs. William Corbridge and David Full in the Surrey-street Music Hall, at which the power of God unto salvation was manifested in many souls.

REV. DR. SOMERVILLE'S evangelistic tour in the Highlands has met with a most happy reception at Campbeltown, where great success has attended the services. Rev. D. F. Mackenzie writes:—It is great cause of thankfulness that Dr. Somerville's mission to the Highlands of Scotland should have had a beginning so full of comfort and promise, and we have no doubt that if the Christian people throughout the regions to be visited will unite and meet to pray to God for the preparation of the heart, and a blessing on his aged servant's mission to them, that blessing will be abundantly received, and a time of refreshing joy in the Lord will pass over the Highlands that will not soon be forgotten.

THE BAPTIST CONGO MISSION.—The rite of believers' baptism was administered for the first time last March. The candidate was a boy, William Mantu Parkinson. "He has been a consistent Christian," says Mr. Comber, "for two years or more, and was very glad when I proposed that he should confess Christ by being baptized. The ordinance was celebrated at a spot near San Salvador, where there is a suitable piece of water. Several hymns were sung, and a few words spoken on the subject of following and serving Christ. I am sure from what William told me afterwards, that this first instance of administering baptism in Congo has set many people thinking. Oh for the time when 'the little one shall become a thousand, and the small one a strong nation!' There are two other lads, of the reality of whose piety the missionaries entertain no doubt, and whom, had circumstances permitted, they would have baptized at the same time. Such tidings should fill our hearts with thankfulness and hope, when not only the present success, but also the future prospects of this mission are centred in the youths of Congo-land!"

CONTINENTAL and FOREIGN NOTES.

CANNES.—The Y.M.C.A. of this town provides the coachmen with good and pleasant reading. Journals and books are circulated among them, and from time to time the men are invited to social evenings.

THE FIFTY-ONE COLPORTEURS belonging to the "Evangelical Society of Geneva," have during the seven winter months, visited thirty-three French departments, Canton Berne, and some Italian valleys, in which they have distributed 4000 Bibles, 21,000 New Testaments, 3000 Scripture portions, 120,000 Gospel Almanacs, and 73,000 other books. The colporteurs do not enter into controversy unless they are obliged to do so.—Le Christianisme.

PARIS Y.W.C.A.—New and larger accommodation has been provided for young girls in shops at 27, Rue Jean Jacques Rousseau, superintended by the devoted Mdlle. Guinand. At the opening Pastors Th. Monod, Appia, &c., took part, and about sixty young ladies, mostly Catholics, were present. The young people are heartily welcomed to the rooms, where they find a piano, harmonium, and library; gratuitous instruction in English is also provided. The rooms are open from noon till 10 o'clock every day, and on Sunday a friendly religious meeting is held at 3 o'clock.—Le Christianisme.

CANTON DE VAUD.—M. Dardier, president of the colportage branch of the Evangelical Society of Geneva, sent last winter 100 copies of Finney's "Revivals of Religion," printed in French by himself, to various pastors and evangelists in France and Switzerland. These brought some hundred letters of warmest thanks, showing that God's blessing had rested on the novel effort, with the result that Bible-readings, prayer and Gospel meetings had been inaugurated by nearly all the recipients. It is desired to send out 200 more which, with postage, will cost nearly £12. Any friends interested in the movement, may communicate with Pasteurs Fauvre and Budry, Lutry et Cully, Lausanne.

INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOL.—Since the missionaries have settled in a new house, situated in the heart of the native city of Patna, a circular entitled "Necessary Information!" has been published and distributed by a Mohammedan, warning the inhabitants against allowing Christian ladies to instruct the wives and mothers of the native community. "I have no wish," he says, "to say any evil of the men sahibs—they think they are doing a good work. But where is the honour of our race, that it allows us to see our women becoming Christians whilst we sit silent?" Then giving sage advice on politely dismissing the ladies, on the Moslem fraternity making a solemn compact not to allow their children to be taught by Christians, the Mussulman concludes: "As for the unfortunate one who breaks his promise, we will sever all connection with him, and will take no part in his burial."

SALVATION ARMY FAREWELL MEETINGS.—We had a farewell to forty officers sailing for America last night (July 20). We shall have a farewell meeting for another forty at Camberwell next Thursday (29th), and farewell to thirty or forty leaving for India on August 11. We have also promised to send officers to Australia, St. Helena, and Jamaica.

G. Railton.

NIAGARA GROVE CONFERENCE.—When out here last year I gave your readers a description of this beautiful Grove, with its new four-story wooden hotel, facing the Falls. The meetings now being held daily and nightly in the Grove are conducted by Rev. D. Savage, of the Canada Methodist Church, assisted by a band of workers. About fifty families live in tents in the Grove, and the meetings are also well attended by the inhabitants of the neighbouring villages. Quite a number of converts have testified to good received. These meetings will be followed by a Sunday-school assembly; then there will be a Temperance Convention, then Union Missionary Conferences, at which Bishop Hurst is expected; and then Camp meetings held by the National Association for the Promotion of Christian Holiness. I have visited a number of farming districts throughout Ontario before going again to the North-west, and am much pleased with the general prosperous condition of the farmers. I also find that very many farmers are willing to receive the kind of young men I have been sending out for some years, able and ready to work hard to get necessary experience.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 1.—2 SAMUEL XXIII.

1.—The last words of David.—I.e., "His last psalm, his last words of song."—Sp. Com.

2—7.—"The aged monarch, who was not generally endowed with the gift of prophecy, was moved by the Spirit of God at the close of his life, and beheld a just ruler in the fear of God, under whose reign blessing and salvation sprang up for the righteous, and all the wicked were overcome. The pledge of this was the eternal covenant."—Tholuck.

This is one of many scriptures which set forth the Divine beauty of justice between man and man (see Micah vi. 8, and Ps. lxxii. 2; 4, &c.). The slightest taint of injustice goes far to mar the fairest Christian profession; and yet how hard is it to be truly just to children and servants, in business and society, in politics or in the Church! Although my house be not so with God, &c.—"Neither as a man, nor as a king, was he what he ought to be. He looked into the mirror of God's perfect law, and saw therein his own deformity; he then turned round and looked at God's covenant, ordered in all things and sure; there he rested. Though David's house was not ordered in all things, yet God's covenant was. He had learnt to look away from himself and his house, straight to God and his everlasting covenant."—C. H. M.

"There were two things to cheer and comfort David's heart, viz., the faithfulness of God and the devotedness of his servants."—C. H. M.

13—17.—We cannot fail to be moved by the splendid devotion to the person of David, and the brave enthusiasm of these three heroes to do his will. Shame be to us if we fail of the same spirit! We, too, may fetch water for our king from wells that are fenced with armed foes, if only we are as true and bold as they. In every deed of self-denying love to his people, and especially in the leading of the lost back to Him, He is personally refreshed. Such things give Him greater joy than water ever brought to thirsting souls.

MONDAY, AUGUST 2.—2 SAMUEL XXIV.

1.—The anger of the Lord was kindled, and He moved, &c.—"The primary and real cause of the pestilence is to be found in this verse. The anger of the Lord could only be awakened by unfaithfulness and evil-doing; and that was the real cause of the calamity."—Kitto. "The people themselves had sinned grievously against God and their king through the two rebellions headed by Absalom and Sheba." He moved, &c.—The subject of the verb is Jehovah. The nation had sinned and incurred his anger, and he instigated David to an act which brought down a sharp punishment on the nation. The statement that God incited David to do what was afterwards condemned and punished as a heinous sin, cannot, of course, mean that He compelled David to sin, but in order to test and prove his character He allowed the temptation to assault him. While 'God Himself tempteth no man' (Jas. i. 13), we pray 'Bring us not into temptation.' In 1 Chron. xxi. 1, we read: 'Satan . . . moved David to number Israel.' The older record speaks only of God's permissive action; the latter tells us of the malicious instrumentality of Satan. The case is like that of Job (i. 12, ii. 10)."—Cam. Bible.

10.—David said, . . . I have sinned.—"The true kernel of David's sin was to be found in self-exaltation, inasmuch as he sought for the strength and glory of his kingdom in the number of the people, and their readiness for war."—Keil and Delitzsch. "It was a momentary apostasy from Jehovah; an oblivion of that spirit of dependence which was the duty and the glory of the kings of Israel: the sin denounced in Jer. xvii. 5." In itself, the mere numbering of the people was no sin. See Exod. xxx. 12, &c., xxxviii. 26; Num. i. 2 and 3, and xxvi. 1, &c.

11.—For when David was up.—Read rather, And when, &c." David's penitence preceded God's visit, and was not the result of that visit, as the A.V. seems to teach.

24.—Neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing.—A grand motto for everybody! Selfish givers and slovenly workers are the bane of many a Christian activity. Giving that costs, labour that costs, is what we need. There should be more order, promptitude, care, and pains, in Christian work than in any other.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 3.—I KINGS I.

1—4.—David was now about seventy years old—"older than Moses at a hundred and twenty, and than many persons are now at eighty and upwards." "The Jews at this time were not long-lived." We must not accuse David or his advisers of sin in making this arrangement. Polygamy was permitted by Moses, and we find from the subsequent history that Abishag was acknowledged as a secondary wife.

Adonijah's attempted usurpation is not to be classed with Absalom's. The latter would have seized the throne even from David his father. He went so far as to seek his father's life. The former only tried to secure the succession to the throne. No direct rebellion against David was intended. Amnon and Absalom were dead; and, in all likelihood, Chileab also, for he is not mentioned again. Adonijah, therefore, was the heir according to hereditary usage. Moreover, he was handsome and kingly in appearance, which went a long way in that simple age. He was also in his prime (from thirty five to forty), while Solomon, probably, was not out of his teens. Add to all this the fact that faithful old servants of the crown like Joab and Abiathar, and almost all the royal family, favoured his claim, and we see how plausible it was.

And yet Adonijah committed a great evil. He knew, or should have known, that Jehovah alone was the true King of Israel, and that with Him lay the choice of a king. He must have known, too, that Solomon had been nominated for the throne, not by David only, but by the Lord (see ii. 15). His sin, then, was twofold. He paid no regard to his father's choice; he also disregarded the will of God. He went wrong because he did not take into account the higher claims of morality and of religion. He reasoned on too low, and therefore too narrow a basis. His standpoint was purely worldly. It did not allow him to see aright the sacred duty of respect for his father's choice, and, above all, for the choice of God. Is it not our constant temptation to view life from a view-point so worldly and selfish that we, too, are unable to see aright the sacred claims of justice and charity towards men, and of reverence toward God?

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4.—I KINGS II.

1 Chron. xxviii. and xxix. should be read here as coming between this and the last chapter.

2.—Shew thyself a man.—"For a youth of nineteen or twenty, known to be of a pacific disposition (1 Chron. xxii. 9), to have to rule over the warlike and turbulent Hebrew nation, with a strong party opposed to him, and brothers of full age ready to lead it, was a most difficult task. Hence he is exhorted, though in years a boy, to show himself in spirit a man."—Sp. Com.

3.—The charge.—See Deut. xvii. 18—20.

4.—There shall not fail thee a man, &c.—A promise confirmed to Solomon at the consecration of the Temple (viii. 25, and ix. 5), and repeated by Jeremiah (xxxiii. 17), in spite of the destruction of the Temple and the captivity.

5, 6.—Joab, &c.—"We must not expect Gospel morality from the saints of the Old Testament. They were only the best men of their several ages and nations. The maxim of 'them of old time' was, 'Love your friends and hate your enemies' (Matt. v. 43); and David perhaps was not in this respect in advance of his age."—Sp. Com. "The sentiment continually set forth in the Old Testament is, that innocent blood cries to God from the ground for vengeance; and that, if suffered to go unpunished, it brings down a curse and judgment upon the land."—Kitto.

13—34.—"To ask for Abishag is to ask for the kingdom. There was such a close connection in public opinion between the title to the crown and the possession of the deceased monarch's wives, that to have granted Adonijah's request would have been the strongest encouragement to his pretensions. Solomon concludes that there has been a fresh plot, that Abiathar and Joab are privy to it, and that the severest measures are necessary to crush the new treason."—Sp. Com.

And Joab fled unto the tabernacle, &c.—"It is the fashion of our foolish presumption to look for protection where we have not cared to yield obedience. Even a Joab clings to God's altar in his extremity, which in his prosperity he regarded not."—Bishop Hall. See Exod. xxi. 14.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5.—I KINGS III.

2.—Only the people sacrificed, &c.—"The law did not forbid 'high places' directly, but only by implication. It required the utter destruction of all the high places which had been polluted by idolatrous rites (Deut xii. 2). The injunction to offer sacrifices nowhere except at the door of the tabernacle (Lev. xvii. 3—5) was an indirect prohibition of high places; but there was some real reason to question whether this was a command intended to come into force until the 'place' was chosen 'where the Lord would cause his name to dwell' (Deut. xii. 11—14). The result was that high places were used for the worship of Jehovah from the time of the Judges downwards And God so far 'winked' at this ignorance that He accepted the worship thus offered Him (compare vv. 4 and 5) There were two reasons for the prohibition of high places; first, the danger of the old idolatry creeping back if the old localities were retained for worship; and secondly, the danger to the unity of the nation if there should be more than one legitimate religious centre."—Sp. Com.

5—15.—Solomon's request.—"The terms of his request indicate the nature of the wisdom he required. That divine wisdom in spiritual things—that heart religion, which the Jews sometimes denoted by this name, is not intended. The wisdom which he craved was that of which he had already enough to be able to appreciate the value of its increase—practical wisdom, sagacity, clearness of judgment and intellect, . . . with an aptitude for the acquisition and use of the higher branches of philosophical knowledge, natural and moral, which constituted the learning of his age."—Kitto. I am but a little child, &c.—The responsibility of the kingdom weighed heavily upon the young king. The need of wisdom in practical judgments was felt especially. There is a suggestive connection between this strong sense of responsibility and need, and the remarkable ability that made his reign so memorable. Had he been as much awake to his spiritual as he was to his moral and intellectual wants, what a sublime history his would have been.

14.—I will lengthen thy days.—"The promise is only conditional. The condition was not observed (1 Kings xi. 1—8), and it was not fulfilled. Solomon can scarcely have been more than fifty-nine or sixty at his death."—Sp. Com.

God's answer to Solomon's request is a fine illustration (1) of Matt. vi. 33: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," &c.; and (2) of God's glorious generosity. To those who take up a right attitude towards Him, He gives them more they ask or think. It is his joy to surprise his people with unexpected and surpassing loving-kindness.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 6.—I KINGS IV.

21.—Solomon reigned over all kingdoms.—"Solomon's empire, like all the great empires of Asia, down to the times of the Persians, consisted of a congeries of small kingdoms, all ruled by their own kings, who admitted the suzerainty of the Jewish monarch, and paid him an annual tribute." From the river unto the land, &c.—"By 'the river,' we must understand the Euphrates, the 'great river' of Western Asia (Gen. xv. 18; Josh. i. 4; compare Exod. xxiii. 31; Num. xxii. 5; 2 Sam. x. 16, &c.). The writer here draws attention to the fact that the extent of Solomon's kingdom was in accordance with the promises made to Abraham, Moses, and Joshua."—Sp. Com.

There is, throughout this chapter, a foreshadowing of the glorious and everlasting reign of the Prince of Peace, both his spiritual reign which already exists and extends, and that personal and visible reign which He is soon coming to set up on the earth. Solomon's wisdom, wealth, and glory, and the security, peace, and plenty enjoyed during his reign, all suggest their spiritual parallels.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 7.—I KINGS V.

1.—Hiram, king of Tyre, &c.—Solomon had been divinely appointed to build a house for God; and now we see the power of Divine providence in supporting that appointment. Power, wealth, and peace are given. Then the heart of Hiram, in whose kingdom were the noblest forests, and the most skilled artisans, was moved to form a lasting friendship with David, and with Solomon. It is hard to see how the work could have been done apart from that friendship. When God gives us work to do, He never fails to provide the means also.

2—9.—"Solomon's message was in every way creditable to him. Hiram was an idolater, and public men of more modern times would, in such a case, probably have thought it becoming to suppress their own special views, in which the person addressed might be supposed not to agree. Solomon, on the contrary, bore testimony to the truth he knew; he boldly asserted the very position which a heathen was least of all likely to receive—the infinity of Jehovah, and his supreme dominion. The effect of this conscientious boldness was such as invariably follows the same line of conduct. Hiram was not displeased, but rather spoke reverently of this high God, and expressed his earnest desire to co-operate in so good a work. In his answer there is a clear acknowledgment of Jehovah as the Creator of the universe, of his government of the world, of his providence, and of the truth that by Him kings reign."—Kitto.

13.—Solomon raised a levy out of all Israel.—"This was, apparently, the first time that the Israelites had been called upon to perform forced labour. This had been prophesied (1 Sam. viii. 16)."—Sp. Com.

A NEW TEMPERANCE DRINK has been brought out by Messrs. Grant, Maidstone, called "Morella," made from cherries. Very refreshing and palatable.

MISSIONS TO THE JEWS.—A missionary of thirty-five years standing has given in the Herald his experience as to "The Best Method of Reaching the Jews." It is his opinion that blazing abroad results is likely to prove only detrimental to the advancement of Jewish missions. Here, as elsewhere, "in quietness and in confidence" lies the secret of strength. Any obstrusive exultation is sure to repel rather than attract a thoughtful aristocratic people; whereas the Gospel proclaimed in the spirit of its Divine Founder (Is. xlii. 2, 3) cannot fail to win and conquer. Again and again information comes from labourers in widely scattered fields, that the Holy Spirit is working mightily upon the hearts of many Israelites previously to their receiving Christian instruction from any human agent. It was thus that the South Russian and thus that the Galician movements originated. In quarters where the truth has not fully been received, there is spreading a dissatisfaction with Judaism; an opinion censuring the action of the Sanhedrin in crucifying our Lord; and a growing reverence and esteem for his character.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, July 24, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan & Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THE COMMITTEE earnestly appeal to the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN on behalf of this old-established and tried Society. This time of the year is most perplexing. Few contributions come to hand, but expenses must continue. New opportunities for service for the King are offered, but at present they cannot be accepted, as the state of the Funds does not warrant further responsibility.

THE OBJECT of the Mission is the glory of God and the salvation of immortal souls.

THE MEANS USED are—

(1) The Preaching of the Word.
(2) Personal Conversation.
(3) Circulation of the Holy Scriptures.
(4) Distribution of Gospel Tracts.

OUR PEOPLE," who are always afloat, and therefore cannot share means of grace, are—

(1) Sailors, of all Nationalities.
(2) Emigrants and Passengers.
(3) Soldiers going on Foreign Service.
(4) The Boys of the Training Ships.

TEMPERANCE WORK is not forgotten—

Sixteen Hundred Pledges have been taken during 1885-6.

WANTED, MUCH CHRISTIAN SYMPATHY AND PRACTICAL HELP.

Rev. NEVILE SHERBROOKE, speaking of the Mission in Exeter Hall, said:—

"I have been afloat, and this is the real thing. It is true work for God."

G. L. DASHWOOD, Esq. (Hon. Sec. Y.W.C.A.), said:—

"The great cry is, 'The Unemployed.' I would ask, if God was to look down into the numerous drawing and sitting rooms of our land, how many thousands of unemployed he would find—people who were doing nothing for the Lord? It was old institutions like the Thames Church Mission that wanted and deserved support. It has been the means of converting thousands to God, and saving very many from a drunken death."

Rev. HECTOR McNEILE (Belvedere) said:—

"I should like to call attention to the Balance-sheet of the Mission, on account of the large field of the work. Its width is more than that of many parishes, and it is 56 miles long, having 300,000 for a population, so that it is larger than 100 good parishes. And yet the working expenses are under £5,000. I would ask any clergyman if we could keep our parish expenses down to the same rate? If we had 100 parishes, each with a population of 3,000, they would, at 1s. per head, cost £15,000. Then it must be remembered that this £5,000 includes the salaries of the clergymen."

Rev. A. BRIGGS (Gravesend) also said:—

"I can speak of the good work of the Mission as it is carried on at Gravesend. New docks have been constructed opposite that town, at which thousands of men have been employed; large steamships, sailing vessels, barges, wherries, and every other kind of craft are continually passing and repassing, or lying at anchor off the town, and to all these the Mission carries the Gospel and its great truths. I look upon the Thames Church Mission as the connecting link between our Home and Foreign Missions. And we must keep up that link, not only by our prayers, but by our alms."

Bishop ALFORD, who presided at the meeting, expressed himself in the following forcible words:—

"Now, I must tell you, I don't think your Mission is sufficiently well known. There are thousands upon thousands of persons who go along Fleet-street and the Strand, and forget all about the great water-way which is so near to them, and the thousands of men engaged upon it. Ships all represent men, and men are sinners. They all cry out for the good news of salvation, and to provide them with it was the work for which the Thames Church Mission was formed. And I believe it is faithfully doing that work. I have never listened to a more interesting report than that which has just been read by your Secretary. It is comprehensive, and beautifully written, and has completely taken the wind out of my sails, leaving me little to say. However, I wish you every success, because I know the work is becoming still more and more important."

DONATIONS and SUBSCRIPTIONS will be received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; the Society's Bankers, Messrs. Lloyds, Barnetts & Bosanquets, Limited, 62, Lombard-street, E.C.; or may be sent direct to the Secretary, who will also be glad to receive parcels of Books, Magazines, Tracts, Cards, Cuffs and Mufflers, these latter for distribution during the winter months. All parcels should be addressed, Carriage Paid, to

Rev. HENRY BLOOMER,
Lon. Coll. Div., Secretary.

That Little Bow of Blue.

IN FOUR VERSES.
(Reprinted from THE CHRISTIAN.)

My heart was very heavy, for my children cried for bread;
I wept to see my little ones go supperless to bed;
I listened for a footstep, as I'd often done before,
Waiting for a staggering man to stumble through the door;
But his step was firm and steady, and his eye was clear and true,
And on his ragged coat he wore a little bit of blue!

Jesus the Lamb of God;

Showing how He died on the Cross for Children; and how Little Ones have Learned to Love and Trust Him.

By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

LETTER from Mr. HAINES, of Cheltenham.

Writing me for medicine for a friend, in a letter dated March 30, 1886, Mr. Haines thus speaks of himself: "Some years ago I had a severe attack of Bronchitis, followed by Congestion of the Lungs and Pleurisy, terminating in Consumption. For seven months I was laid up. My club doctor and another doctor gave me up. A third then visited me, and came to the same conclusion—that I could not live two months, unless I could be taken to the South of France.

"I had heard of you from the friends of our connection, and having faith in your treatment, I felt it would do me good, and determined to try it. My night sweats, which were profuse and exhausting, soon ceased. I gradually recovered, and in two months was back to business, and have not suffered since.—E. J. HAINES, 126, High-street."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

ETERNAL LIFE:
Where to Find it, and How to Obtain it.

By HERMANN LIEBSTEIN, Barrister-at-Law.

"Now what was true with reference to the ancient people is true with reference to us. What we need is just the same as that which they needed—life; and the fountain where alone we can find life now, is just the very same which nearly three thousand years ago was pointed out by Amos to Israel—JEHOVAH. And the way in which we may and can obtain life now, is none other than the old way—seeking Him who is its fountain."

REV. CANON HOARE.

THE zeal, ceaseless industry, and thorough devotion to the well-being of their parishes on the part of a large number of the clergy of the English Church, cannot be questioned, and receive from the nation a very grateful acknowledgment. It may be feared that in many cases the work is more mechanical than could be wished, and lacks that permeating spiritual power which can alone move sinful men Godwards. A fine example of the combination of singularly firm views of the Gospel in its heart-renewing requirements, and devotedness as a worker and an administrator in the sphere of all the social aspects and wants of an important parish, may, by God's blessing, be useful and stimulating.

Rev. Canon Hoare is widely known for his public character; but whatever his eminence elsewhere, and on the platform, it is in Tunbridge Wells that he deservedly holds a place second to none in that community, and which commands honour and affection from all classes, even from men of differing ecclesiastical opinions. Of manly form; dignified, yet unassuming bearing; with unusual versatility of mind; accurate in speech, even when his convictions do not carry agreement; free, courteous, and often buoyantly friendly; always the man of God, but always also the English gentleman, and never the priest; hale in health, though in his seventy-fifth year—there can scarcely be pictured a better illustration of a respected and trusted parish clergyman than Canon Hoare.

Mr. Hoare's life has been sketched in different journals. There is, therefore, no need for repeating those particulars here. We have not, however, seen it stated that while his father was connected with the Banking Firm that bears the name, his mother was sister to Elizabeth Fry (née Gurney) the distinguished Friend. Edward Hoare was a third son, and afterwards married a daughter of Sir Benjamin Brodie. At Cambridge, in the year 1834, he was Fifth Wrangler. After being curate at Pakefield, incumbent of St. John's, Holloway, and vicar of Christ Church, Ramsgate, he removed to Tunbridge Wells in 1853. To confine this sketch mainly to his work in that town may probably give to it interest and reality, and furnish a quickening example.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.)

A candid visitor cannot be long in Tunbridge Wells without giving expression to his astonishment at the evidences which meet him everywhere of the laborious and admirably-organised parochial work which the vicar and his curates are carrying on. Holy Trinity parish lies in the centre of an irregularly but picturesquely-built town. Other districts of the town are worked by the resident clergy with marked attention, but the influence of the central one is felt throughout the whole. There are two young curates of unmistakable evangelical sentiments, and who are bound to their vicar by affectionate loyalty, for his bearing towards them is exceptionally fatherly, and his treatment of them invariably generous, free, and friendly. There is also a Scripture-reader and a Bible-woman who resides in the Parish Room, which is surrounded by the working classes. To describe the religious work done in the parish is out of the question; the bare enumeration of the weekly engagements may, it is probable, suggest the thought of exaggeration. All, however, is real: there are no make-believe notices. There are four public elementary day-schools and five Sunday-schools, all well attended and looked after. There are Bible-classes for men, for ladies, for young women, for young men, for servants, for young servant-girls, and for children. There is, during the winter months, a night school for men only, two nights in the week. For men also there is an afternoon service every third Sunday of the month; for mothers there is a sewing meeting every week in the winter, and one of a different nature every month. There is also a Church of England Local Temperance Society, which has its monthly lectures, its prayer-meeting, and its children's Band of Hope. Besides these there is a clothing club, a coal club, a penny bank, a library, a free registry for female servants, and a Young Men's Association. Every day of the week persons may be seen going to, or returning from, the commodious and newly-built Parish Room, with Bibles in their hands. Domiciliary visitation of a careful nature goes along with these social meetings, and during the summer months there is open-air preaching by the curates, assisted by laymen, in three different parts of the parish. In these multitudinous labours Canon Hoare is no mere director, but takes his full share with his helpers. Of him that may be said which has been written respecting all successful pastors—

> They scorned delights, and loved laborious days.

In addition to this well-ordered parochial work, there are usually six services a week in Trinity Church. This is a large edifice, with nothing in its internal arrangements unsuitable for Protestant worship. On the Sundays it is completely filled by rich and poor, excellent accommodation being provided for the latter, and there are good congregations on the mornings and evenings of the week. The present writer went lately to the church on a Sunday evening. He was astonished, however, to find, a quarter of an hour before the service began, the area three parts full of people, and that sweet melodies were being sung. Among the hymns announced were—

> When peace, like a river, attendeth my way,

and—

> O Jesus, I have promised
> To serve Thee to the end.

It was very affecting to see artisans and their wives, military-looking men, and young girls from places of business, joining in, thus raising their voices to the Saviour, and quieting their hearts in his abiding love; and a pitying sorrow was felt for those who thought that altar-lights, and surpliced choirs, and extraordinarily complexed harmonies would more benefit the people. The Sunday was the anniversary of the Queen's accession day, and the sermon was appropriate to the occasion. It was pleasant to see the black gown of the vicar, and to witness his self-possessed, natural manner, accompanied by a fatherly, familiar look at the congregation. The discourse was extempore, yet obviously carefully prepared, and happily occupied more than half an hour. But the feature of it that awakened the deepest thankfulness of the writer was this: although a national sermon, which, in the hands of another man, might have furnished a reason for its being Gospel-less, the preacher, nevertheless, by a singularly skilful use of the idea that righteousness must be the foundation of the throne, introduced in the middle of the sermon, and dwelt on it for near ten minutes, the full doctrine of a sinner's justification through the death and righteousness of Christ. It was very moving to hear, in the midst of a crowded church, and on a great jubilee day, the very truth of Protestantism as to the way of salvation proclaimed with such unambiguous plainness, and with such free, believing, and vigorous utterance.

Canon Hoare's preaching has been written of as "simple." This is not descriptive, except in the sense that his sermons always contain elementary Gospel truth, and are so clearly divided as to help even the illiterate hearer to carry away the substance of them. But they are full of Biblical teaching, and very suggestive as to practical duties. The preaching is ever that of one who has a singularly strong grasp of the vicarious atonement and Second Coming of Christ as the hope of the world, and whose strength is in his reality, his sympathy, his knowledge of the Scriptures, his unfaltering convictions, and his obvious acquaintance with the rich treasures of theological literature. Few men, also, seem more aware of the semi-Popish fashions and the religious vagaries of opinion which bewilder just now. Sermons on these "clouds of doctrine" are frequently published by him, and they strip these puerilities of their sentimentalism and pretences by their strong common-sense. It is due to say that in the services there is admirable congregational singing, but no surpliced choristers; no intoning of prayers, but naturalness; and an equally natural voice in the reading of the Lessons. All these things go to make the Gospel, not a dead letter, but a living power of influence to a highly cultured congregation. They also have raised Canon Hoare to the position of a trusted leader of the Evangelical party in the Church of England. In Conferences and Congresses he is pre-eminently an Englishman, and scarcely surpassed as a ready, courageous, and skilful debater.

Besides numerous separate pamphlets for the times, Canon Hoare is the author of valuable treatises on the Prayer-Book, "Our Protestant Church," Sanctification, the Truth of Inspiration, Rome, Turkey and Jerusalem, Redemption, The Doctrine of the Lord's Supper, &c. He has recently been made Vice-President of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and holds the appointment to be one of the highest marks of honour conferred on him. But Tunbridge Wells is his best memorial. To attend his ministry there visitors are drawn from all parts of the kingdom. The place furnishes most instructive proof of the social effects of preaching and services, which are adapted to the times, and yet remain unmistakably Evangelical and Protestant. There it is that Canon Hoare's labours, boldness, growing catholicity, practical belief in united prayer, decision as to law and Gospel, and his character, without any priestly assumption, of a minister of religion, are universally recognised; and there his own friends, and many outside, who know well the power of his life, are drawn to adopt, with slight change, the utterance of the disciples respecting Paul—"And they glorified God in him."

A REMARKABLE SECESSION.

A remarkable event, which is reported by a correspondent of the Odenburger Zeitung, reads more like a chapter from the history of the Reformation epoch than an incident of the present age. The Roman Catholic inhabitants of Acsa, a village in the county of Stuhlweissenburg, have had a grievance against their parish priest for some time past. They applied to the bishop to remove him, and, if their report of his conduct be true, he is certainly unfit for the office of a pastor. The bishop refused, so they appealed to the Hungarian Minister of Worship, who declined to interfere. Hereupon, after a precedent which was common in Germany and Switzerland in the fifteenth century, the Communal Council of the village convoked a full meeting of all the adult inhabitants in order to settle what action they should take. "As neither bishop nor minister will help us," said the president, "we must now help ourselves." He made the bold suggestion that the entire parish should go over boldly from the Roman Catholic to the Evangelical Lutheran Church. His advice was adopted without one dissentient. A deputation was sent to the Evangelical Lutheran Consistory requesting to be received into communion, and in one single day 134 Catholic heads of families registered themselves as Protestants.

JESUIT AGGRESSION IN MONACO.

In our issue of July 1 we gave some extracts from Le Papisme, a booklet written in reply to a Jesuit pamphlet against the Protestant visitors in the South of France. Below are extracts translated from the chapter on Monaco:—

In this little principality, governed by a pre-eminently Popish prince, we can see the papal system in all its deformity.

Under the shade of those magnificent palm trees, planted with the gold of the roulette, and watered with the blood of its victims, under the soft shade of the rarest plants and shrubs, the number of whose leaves scarcely equal the crimes committed in this little state, you may see a prodigious number of priests, generally dressed in plain clothes. They are always welcome here, and in all difficult times find a friendly shelter, whilst awaiting the coming of better times elsewhere.

Yonder rises a splendid edifice, the Casino, a very gate of hell, a disgrace to civilisation, and the eternal shame of that religious system which can associate itself with such a traffic!

The Prince of Monaco, in league with the Pope's representative at his court, is determined to preserve the unity of the faith in his dominions, and for this purpose the end sanctifies the means. He acts under the impulsion of two motive powers—Popery and the Roulette!!! . . . Every imaginable means of seduction is practised, from the most abandoned woman to the last ruined player. Not unfrequently persons of rank and education become paid agents of the Casino!

THE ROULETTE PAYS! THE PRIEST BLESSES!

The population of this infamous place is almost exclusively composed of priests (but seldom dressed in clerical costume), prostitutes, speculators of various grades, and spies. All receive their pay at the same office: the same hand gives to each agent the bank-notes which have been legally robbed at the Trente et quarante.

On the receipt of their money the women go to watch for their prey at the theatre, the decoy agents set off for neighbouring towns, when you may hear these nightingales at many a table d'hôte singing the praises of Monaco, its perfect climate, its splendid gardens, and all the delights of the principality.

But should you speak of the ruin of thousands caused by the roulette, the agent will tell you that, of course, people must know how to play, and that he has always won, he has even doubled his fortune! If you speak still more plainly, and say that the infamous "company of the sea-baths of Monaco," with all the agents, male and female, ought to be swept into the sea, you may see these vile mercenaries change colour. . . .

But the priests, those holy men, what can they do in this popish Canaan? . . .

Yes, this plague spot of the Mediterranean; this seat of contagion, cursed relic of the middle ages, is to this day the favourite retreat of papal emissaries; the only spot in Europe where the Jesuit can breathe freely.

In this den, venomous serpents take refuge to feed on human blood, until they recover strength and can glide into neighbouring towns, where they spread their deadly poison.

As long as the Jesuits retain any power, so long will Monaco subsist, a cursed monument of the cupidity of the Papal Church.

A MAN MAY BUILD a monument for himself, and, like Absalom, seek to perpetuate hi memory by stocks and stones, but still his nam may rot in everlasting infamy; but that man o that woman who trains a little child for God and fo eternity, who impresses upon the plastic mind o youth the lessons of truth and righteousness, wh leads a bewildered soul to the Lamb of God, wh plants the uncertain feet upon the Rock of Age may die and go to dust, but he leaves behind hi a deathless influence, and has secured an immorta fame.

CHURCH BAZAARS.

A RAILROAD TALK.

On our way to Keswick Convention we found ourselves locked in the compartment with an earnest Primitive Methodist brother, journeying from the seaside to his home in Leeds. He soon showed his colours, and earnest conversation as to the work of God in his parts followed. He told of the efforts of the Salvation Army in Leeds. He gave them a lift occasionally. He heartily approved of them. They had eight or nine corps in that city. He himself knew many who had been among the worst men there, who were clean in their lives now, and who had been reclaimed by the Army. The Primitives were strong, and wide awake, too. He was a trustee of his chapel, and a class-leader. But there was one thing he could not go with the Primitives and others in—Church Bazaars. The conversation went on somewhat as follows:—

"What have you against these bazaars?"

"Why, I tell you, sir, there's no good in them. They walk about, and show themselves off. They take you into what they call the picture gallery, where there's nothing but some daubs. They have another catch they call 'A Sight of Greece,' sir, and it's nothing but some grease. There's no good in them at all. The membership is always less after a bazaar."

"How is that? I don't understand how it should have that effect."

"Well, I'll tell you, sir, how it was at our chapel. We had a revival. The Lord gave us thirty or forty converts. Right after that came the bazaar. It seemed to take the spiritual life out of the Church, sir. We lost every one of those converts, and more besides. I never go to them. I tell them I never will. They do it to make a little money; but, if every one would give what he's able to, they need not have these bazaars, which so dry up the spirit of giving. It makes the members think they must get something for every sixpence they part with. Then there's all the trouble of getting it up, and all the quarrels and heart-burnings they get into over it. I'll tell you what happened at the Church of St. John the Evangelist. They had a raffle at a shilling a head. They got five hundred shillings by it. It was for a bay horse, fourteen hands high, they said, and a trap, painted yellow; wasn't it, mother? (appealing to his wife). A young fellow won it, and naturally he wanted to get his prize. Well, they gave it to him, sir, and what do you think it was? It was a twopenny mouse-trap and a wooden clothes-horse, fourteen hands high. I don't call that honest."

Our earnest travelling companion then made some startling and unmistakable comments on the preaching he had heard the day before at the seaside town of B——, whence he was travelling. He said he noticed they preached very gently, and took pains not to hurt anybody's feelings, "but in our parts we preaches plain and straight. We call hell, hell. We call heaven, heaven. And we tell them that they are sure of hell if they don't get on the way to heaven."

The animated talk ceased for a time, but it left us food for sorrowful reflection. B.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE.—A meeting of East-end clergy, Nonconformist ministers, heads of missions, and representatives from the East London Christian Women's Temperance Association, other Temperance Societies, and kindred bodies, has been held at St. Benet's Mission-hall, Mile-end, to consider what steps might be taken to enable the working people to express their objection to the sale of strong drink on the premises of the projected People's Palace. An opinion, however, prevailed at the meeting that the masses object almost as much to the opening of the palace on Sunday as to the sale of liquor. A committee was ultimately appointed to draw up memorials in favour of excluding drink from the premises, and of closing the palace on Sundays.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Dear Sir,—I have read with pleasure the letter of Mr. James Harrison in your issue of the 15th, and deeply regret with him that there is so little outward manifestation of that unity of spirit which undoubtedly prevails amongst the various evangelical sections of the Church of Christ.

In the town in which I live in the West of England, an effort has been made to promote true fellowship by the establishment of a prayer-meeting open to all clergymen and ministers, with the officers of the various churches, Sunday-school teachers, and village preachers. It is held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms every Tuesday morning at 9.30, and closes at 10.15 punctually. To save any difficulty as to the president of the meeting, the third entering the room always takes the chair. Very refreshing and profitable have the meetings been, and there can be no doubt that they have to some extent at least drawn Christians of differing views into closer fellowship with each other.

At the commencement, about eighteen months ago, one clergyman joined us, but after two or three weeks he—feeling, I suppose, the loneliness of his position amongst Nonconformists—withdrew, and having left the town there is no chance of his rejoining us. We now have only Nonconformists at our meetings, namely, Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists, with occasional visitors belonging to other denominations. Efforts have been made, but without success, to induce the evangelical clergy to attend, and here is where the great difficulty in the way of union as desired by your correspondent almost always develops itself in small towns. Considering that we have a population of only 16,000 inhabitants, the Church of England is well represented, and the evangelical section holds the principal pulpits—the vicars of three churches, including the two mother churches, being men of evangelical views. Two other churches are held by ultra Ritualists, and the remaining one is not pronounced in either direction. Yet, save at a temperance, a religious tract society, or a Bible meeting, neither of the three vicars first named ever fraternise with Nonconformists—although, be it said, we are hoping better things of one of them who has recently come into the town—nor has either of them (or their curates) ever attended the prayer-meeting. Last week, however, at a dedication festival, held in connection with one of the ultra Ritualistic churches, all of them appeared in the procession of clergy (amongst whom were men who are little, if anything, removed in doctrine from Roman Catholics), apparently sympathising, although I know they do not sympathise at heart, with those who are sapping the very foundations of our Protestantism, and by their traditions dishonouring the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sir, if the evangelical clergy who attend Keswick Convention, Mildmay Conference, and Evangelical Alliance meetings would boldly take their stand when they are at home with men whose views are almost at one with their own, whose spiritual life is unquestionable, and whose work is worthy of all honour, although they may be outside the pale of the Establishment, and if they would show less sympathy with those whose doctrines they hate and whose practices they know are contrary to the teaching of God's Word, whilst such a stand might, in some instances, be costly, it would I am sure tend to true union amongst the followers of our common Lord; would promote the communion of saints in the highest sense; and would at the same time help to uplift the banner of Protestantism, which is in danger of being dragged in the mire by members of a Protestant Church who absolutely and unconditionally repudiate the very name of Protestantism.

God grant that the time may be hastened when true believers, of whatever name, may not only be ready to say, "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity," but when they shall have the boldness and the wisdom to carry into practice all that the phrase imparts. Then the wish of your correspondent will be gratified, and God Himself will be glorified.—Yours sincerely, A Deacon.

FROM THE DARK CONTINENT.

The following copy of a letter, addressed by Rev. Robert Lee Harris, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, to a friend in the United States, has just been sent to me by Miss Mary A. Sharp, missionary of the same denomination, for publication. The letter pleads its own cause.—Yours truly, Wm. Willcock.
271, Deansgate, Manehcster.

Dear Brother Sherman,—I am here safe. Praise the Lord! I am delighted with the openings that He has made for work in Africa. I must tell you how graciously He has opened a door for me in Sierra Leone. I arrived here on January 18 with about ten dollars left, after paying for my ticket to Monrovia. The native style of living is cheap. After we have had time to raise a crop, we can support ourselves very cheaply, as rice, sweet potatoes, yams, Indian corn, lemons, oranges, pine-apples, water-melons, and cocoa-nuts can be raised; also we can have winter-rye bread, fish, fowls, and wild meat. I asked God to take care of me, and lead me to the place He would have me stop. The first place I went to make inquiry, they invited me to stay with them as long as I wanted, free of charge. My soul was filled with praise to God. I am staying with Brother Carthen at the United Free Church Mission House, and he is very kind to me. God bless him a thousandfold! I believe a true man of God can do a glorious work here. There is an appointed English officer here, a man of God, who holds meetings when he can get a place. Fifty souls were saved in one of his meetings.

There is a tribe called the Mendees, one hundred and fifty miles from here, that opens its doors to the Gospel, but there is no one to take it to them. I am thinking of visiting this tribe if the Lord opens the way, and establish a mission station there. It is also about one hundred and fifty miles to the head of the Niger River, and there is a wide field open to the Gospel. These tribes are friendly, and would be easy led to accept the Gospel. There has never been a white man to the head of the Niger from this way, but I am sure it could be reached. The American Consul thinks so too, and he is in favour of someone undertaking it. It is the best opening that I can hear of in all Africa, the Congo not excepted, They are all civil tribes and enlightened, and in a measure industrious. Shall we take this field for God, or shall we let the devil keep it?

The postmaster of this place, a well-informed coloured man, and natives who are acquainted with the country, are urging me to take it, as there is no one in this field. There are missions near the mouth of the Niger but none at its head. My intention is now to look out a good field and come back and bring out missionaries. I feel led out in this work, and I shall go at it in the strength of the Lord. I shall go to Monrovia as soon as I can get a vessel. I would be glad to hear from anyone who wants to write me. Direct to Monrovia, Liberia, West Coast of Africa, care of Miss Mary A. Sharp, missionary.

Your brother in for the whole war,
Free Town, Robert Lee Harris.

CHRISTIAN HELP FOR IRELAND.—Doubtless the readers of The Christian have been pained by the sad accounts given week after week of the deep distress in Ireland, many families who formerly possessed comfortable homes being reduced to the greatest poverty. The Lord has laid it on my heart to assist them by a society of ladies who will work a quarter of an hour daily at some useful article of clothing (finding their own materials), or if from want of time, &c., any should prefer being honorary members, they can do so by paying not less than one shilling per quarter. All communications will be thankfully received by Mr. Johnston Gildea, 38, York-terrace, Regent's-park.

"A SITTING-STILL WALTZ."

In The Christian for July 15, a brief letter from a correspondent, signed "F. E. T.," and headed "Untempered Mortar," goes into the subject of dancing, and touches upon amateur theatricals. The writer presses home upon Christian parents—and oh, that all Christian parents had their eyes and ears open, and their sense of responsibility wide awake to see into what and to what their children are drifting!—the importance of their not having their sons and daughters taught dancing even for home practice. There are many good, high-class schools nowadays where the Christian governesses will not permit the pupils to learn dancing. So, to meet this deprivation on the side of the parents there are often—the writer has two cases in memory, happening only last winter in the same town—dancing-classes held at some house near the school, where Christian parents may send their children, and thus the influence of the school is stultified, and the children are practically taught that the Christian governess is in the wrong.

In a little book, by Dr. Pentecost, on "The Bible and Worldly Pleasures," he speaks of theatre-going, and card-playing, and Sunday-driving, and dancing. By far the greater part of the book is taken up with this last-named so-called pleasure, and meets the argument that dancing is a Scriptural practice, with these words: "Yes, by God's people. The dance among the Hebrews was either a religious ceremony, or the outward expression of some great joy; it was usually participated in by women alone; and was a joyful skipping or leaping, accompanied by some musical instrument or song. Mixed dancing was unknown to the Hebrews." Then he goes on to quote instances of dancing mentioned in the Bible, and sets this manifestation of sacred joy side by side with the lascivious Society-dance of to-day. Of this he says, and truly, that "its promoters are worldly people, its participants are worldly and un-Christian people, or worldly professors of religion, who are 'lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God.' This is one of the crucial tests: Can you think of one of your best Christians managing one of these fashionable revels, and mingling with these giddy throngs?" Again, "Christians cannot mingle with the unconverted in their amusements without losing their spirituality and power. You are not invited to such places as Christians, neither do you go as Christians."

"You don't dance?" queried a lady, not long ago, of an acquaintance of mine, who was something of a wag, and something of a gallant (who did not dance with other men's sisters and wives, because he would not allow his to dance with them). "No," he replied; "but if you have no objection, while the others are dancing, I should like to sit here with you, and put my arm about your waist; have you put your head upon my shoulder, and talk to you, while you look into my eyes, and I look down into yours." This is what a smart American girl in London Society called a "Sitting-still waltz," when her mother found her, under similar circumstances, in a remote nook with Captain X——.

Do the Christian mothers (for we are saying nothing about the mothers of the world, nor in any way attempting to curtail their legitimate pleasures, dancing being one of the most fascinating, as well as the most fashionable, among them) know that, when they permit their daughters to spend an evening in the ball-room, where the immodest "round dance is the speciality of the evening," they "are sending them to the arms of a dozen or fifteen Society men?"

And home dances—whither do they lead? Nearly always to the ball-room, for young minds fail to grasp that what has been an innocent pleasure in the home (though it is hardly ever confined entirely to the home-circle, young men neighbours being generally asked to join), may become a snare to the downward road in the ball-room.

"And what harm will they meet there, if our pleasant neighbours form the company?" asked a worldly Christian the other day.

"'Pleasant neighbours'? Yes, and anything besides 'pleasant'? Can any mother be so ignorant of the composition of modern ball-room society that she does not know it to be full of Society-men who dare not lift the curtain that hides one-half of their lives from the light? No! but it is one of the miserable delusions, or polite fictions of fashionable society that, even when the mothers do know, they smile upon and beckon to their daughter's sides the licentious men who should bear upon them, in their exclusion from pure homes, and pure girls' society, the brand of their (unwhispered) shame. What Dr. Pentecost says is quite true; "I am satisfied that many young people have danced away impressions that have never returned." To mention a case in point: A young lady attended nearly all Mr. Moody's last meetings in a London district, and was so impressed that she begged her parents to have a Bible-reading held in their house, and they, being Christian people (of a lukewarm, watery type) consented. All went on well, until an invitation to an afternoon slipper dance came from some cousins who were going to South America, and they wished to celebrate their departure in this way. At first conscience protested, but the tempter argued that they were only cousins, it was in their own home, there was no dress, the world would not know—so, as good R. Cecil says, "to parley is to fall"—she went. There she met a young man who so captivated her heart, that she was unable to resist his charms. Step by step, the good things of the Gospel were left behind; dances, theatres, balls, followed one another, and then they were married. But twelve months of gaiety told on the moderate income—cares, debts, crept in, and then the fatal brandy-bottle came to the rescue, and drowned the remembrance of heavy responsibilities, until ruin and suicide closed the dread tragedy. This is a sorrowful, but a personally-authenticated story.

Now for one of a different and more pleasing character, from Dr. Pentecost. A distinguished Christian lady was recently staying at a hotel at Long Branch, when a dance was proposed. She declined all importunities, and at last an honourable Senator tried to persuade her to attend. "Miss B——, this is quite a harmless affair, and we want to have the exceptional honour of your presence."

"Senator," said the lady, "I cannot do it. I am a Christian; I never do anything in my summer vacation, or wherever I go, that will injure the influence I have over the girls of my Sunday-school class."

The Senator's reply is worth reading. Let all who want to know it get the booklet; but let us remember in our summer vacation that our influence as Christians is such that it will not in any way injure the cause of Christ.

SCRUPLES.

Truly it has been said, "as water puts out fire, so scruples put out the spirit of prayer." The great enemy of souls well knows what a barrier will be raised in the way of access to the Throne of Grace if he can succeed in keeping our minds fixed on self, occupied with petty trifles, magnifying evils, till, utterly disheartened and dejected, we cease to draw nigh to God with the sweet child-like spirit of free confiding love, for "where the Spirit of God is, there is liberty." Whom Satan can't destroy, he is sure to annoy, and this he does most effectually, when the mind becomes a prey to morbid scruples and self-scrutiny, for ever absorbed in straining out some tiny floating gnat, whilst swallowing the camel of disquiet, restlessness, and despair. The mind thus becomes inwardly and outwardly wasted and incapable of taking a sound, healthy view of things; all nature is under a cloud, and every breath is surcharged with gloom; Satan has gained his point, for a gloomy Christian dishonours his Maker and brings disrepute on Him whose witness he is called to be.

Fenelon thus wrote to an over-scrupulous lady: "Your restless scruples disturb your prayer, draw you away from God, wither and disturb your soul. Can it be right, under pretext of hunting out the smallest faults, to dry up the sources of prayer? Is it not wrong in God's sight to forsake close communings with Him in prayer, in order to indulge an anxious search after all these trifles which you magnify in your imagination? Scrupulous consciences need to be urged onwards, like restive, shying horses. The more you yield to your scruples, the more you develop them. You can only cure them by repression, I pray God to teach you the truth of the Psalmist's words: "I will run the way of thy commandments, when Thou hast set my heart at liberty."

It is related of a celebrated preacher, that one day when he was delivering a very eloquent sermon, Satan suggested to him he had better come down from the pulpit, in consequence of the flutterings of self-complacency in his heart; but the good man at once perceived that this was a subtle device, a scruple to hinder his work so he continued his sermon, inwardly ejaculating, "It was not vanity which brought me hither, and in spite of its flattery, it shall not drive me hence."

Satan transforms himself into an angel of light, and we all need to be on our guard against that over-scrupulous spirit that keeps our minds bent on earth instead of soaring upwards and onwards in joyfulness and gladness of heart, rejoicing more and more in the bright sunshine of the Sun of Righteousness, whose beams will dispel all spiritual fog and mist as we fix the gaze alone on Christ and lose ourselves in Him.

A WORK OF GOSPEL POWER.—The new report of the Working-men's Mission, at Collingwood street, New-cut, S.E., is issued with the above title and contains the record of the origin and progres of the work accomplished by the Brothers J. and T. Young during the twenty years of its existence Here are sixty pages of incidents, facts, conversions, rescues, death-beds, and the like; the "Solemn Warning" being a most striking instance of a poor drunkard's salvation from sin and drink The report adds: "A large success in winnin souls has been the joyful fruit of our efforts, on hundred and thirteen having been admitted int the Christian fellowship of this Mission." A REVIVAL IN NATAL.

Rev. James Turnbull, of Greytown, preaching at St. John's Presbyterian Church, gave an account of a religious awakening, which has taken place amongst the Dutch people in Unvoti Country. It is the more remarkable, as there was no immediate visible agency to which it could be traced. We give a brief resumé of his address:—

A few years ago the Rev. Mr. Murray, of Cape Colony, visited the neighbourhood, and was followed soon aftér by Dr. Somerville. Subsequently the Rev. Mr. Hoffmeyr, of Stellenbosch, came and preached the Word with power in the Dutch language. Hearers were solemnised, but no decisive change was noticed. In the early months of this year, however, manifest tokens that God's Spirit was working among the people were seen. Young and old alike were influenced, the gracious work being specially noticeable amongst the young men. Converts had no hesitation in avowing themselves, and prayer-meetings became frequent, and the attendance increased.

At one meeting for prayer and testimony, his (Mr. Turnbull's) church—a good-sized building—was crowded to the door. Those who had been very reticent found power of expression, and while there was but little excitement there was no hesitation in giving experience.

The movement had effected their outward life. Some people had told him that subscriptions had been withdrawn from the Agricultural Society. He was sorry for this, if it were true, but he had also been told that it had taken money from the racecourse, and he was satisfied with this result. One other result was the alteration of the date of some auction sales, which usually took place on the Saturday in the communion week of the Dutch Reformed Church from that to the following Saturday. In concluding his address he asked his hearers to praise God for what they had seen, and to pray for the spread of the gracious work.

RECREATIVE EVENING SCHOOLS.

Dear Sir,—We are trying to brighten and save the lives of the young people of England. There are 80,000 children leaving the London Elementary Schools every year, and there are nearly three millions in England and Scotland of young people from thirteen to eighteen years of age who have passed through the elementary schools. In the evening they swarm in our streets idling or at play. Thus the education they have received at so much cost is largely wasted and greatest evils accrue. Evening schools have been opened, but tired youth will not go to them for mere book-work.

Now the Trades Council of London representing many working men have appealed to those more highly-favoured than themselves to help the recreative and wise training of their children, and to do so by preparing them for the practical work and the pure pleasure of life. Accordingly in response to this request our association was formed.

We allure the young people by recreative classes for musical drill, which is a healthy play cheered by music, for pleasant song and for illustrating the lessons that are taught by the bright pictures of the optical lanterns and by simple experiments. And we train the eye and hand for accurate and happy work by drawing, wood-carving, modelling, &c., thus beginning in the best way technical education for skilled labour, and in the case of girls we train them for home life by household sewing and simple cookery. All this is done in the evening by voluntary service in the Board and other schools, and in conjunction with their teaching. We had some 150 voluntary teachers and 100 working-men helpers last winter. Next winter we must have 1500 voluntary teachers and 600 working-men helpers.

Because all is done voluntarily we need but little money. But some is needed to pay for musical instruments, materials for wood-carving, &c., and to train our voluntary teachers, who must do their work well.

This is the most pressing, social problem of our time, which underlies all others, for the wise care of our youth is the salvation of the people.

MR. MOODY'S LAST PLAN OF WORK.

A COLLEGE STUDENTS' SUMMER SCHOOL FOR BIBLE STUDY.

Mr. Moody is ever on the alert. His rest is action. The hot summer days bring a change, but no cessation from work. In April last while holding meetings in Georgia, the idea flashed upon him and L. D. Wishard, College Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. simultaneously of holding a "college students' summer school for Bible study" at Mount Hermon. Here were opportunities for study, for rest, for recreation. Out in the country, away from all fashionable resorts, could be secured health for body and for soul. Circulars were sent at once to the 225 College Young Men's Christian Associations in the country, inviting a delegate from each, to meet in July for a month's study of the Bible, under Mr. Moody's supervision, with experienced teachers. Athletics and sports were to have a place in each day's programme. So the boys bring with Bible, concordance, and note-books their tennis rackets, base ball bats, and bathing suits. Tuesday and Wednesday, July 7 and 8, were busy days, at the usually quiet station a mile from the building. Each train brought a crowd of boys, or rather stalwart athletics, men full of sunshine and good fellowship, prepared to make for themselves and their strange comrades a good time. Students from the South, with bronzed faces, broad-brimmed hats, baggy pantaloons; Indians from Carlisle, in their blue uniforms; Western fellows, hale and hearty; men from Montreal; New England students, all determined to make their month's outing one of profit and pleasure. Twenty-five states are already represented.

As Mr. Moody, in his prompt and energetic way, came into the large lecture hall at the first session, the eyes of nearly two hundred boys were fastened upon him. Many of them had never seen the evangelist before. With a few announcements, he introduced Professor D. B. Towner, who sang, "I am the Child of a King." With the increased demand in the United States for well-qualified, consecrated, and wise Christian workers, Mr. Moody is ever on the watch for skilled musicians of the Sankey type, to consecrate their special gifts to this part of worship. In Professor Towner he has secured a valuable treasure. His rich resonant voice, his personal magnetism, his gift of drawing out all the singing powers of a man, make him admirably fitted for teaching the school, as music is to be an important element in the session.

Major D. W. Whittle came to Northfield from his arduous western campaign to rest, but he cannot resist the temptation of meeting with these young earnest spirits, and so is enrolled among the teachers. Dr. Brooks (of St. Louis), a brilliant and devoted scholar; L. D. Wishard, C. H. Ober, Professor Morehead, Rev. A. T. Pierson, Rev. Dr. Gordon, Rev. W. W. Clark, and many others are now here or expected. An hour a day will be given to different departments of college association work. Such topics as the Bible training-class, how to deal with inquirers; college prayer-meetings, mission and individual work will come up, while to those who desire it, instruction will be given in church music and harmony.

The meetings are informal, Mr. Moody being tied to no programme, and the students being encouraged to ask and answer questions with the utmost freedom. On Saturday, the close of the first week, Secretary Ingersoll, of the Railroad Y.M.C.A., presented his work. One-fifth of the property of the country is invested in railroads. There are more than 125,000 miles of railway, and an army of employés. The Y.M.C.A. is seeking to reach this class, to establish libraries, reading-rooms, and to secure for them the rest of the Sabbath. The notable address of the day was by Dr. Morehead, on the progress of doctrine in the Bible, in which the doctrine of evolution received no favour: "It is rank infidelity, and nothing less."

The students are getting settled to the delightful duties of the month; forming pleasant acquaintances, and feeling perfectly at home amid such genial surroundings. The number of students now here—aside from the "Mount Hermon boys," is 230, and the first week closes with the thought impressed upon all, "What a perfect success!" S. E. B.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

"The poor ye have always with you," said the Master, with a depth of meaning, evidently well understood by ragged school teachers and all workers in the slums of our great city. That this Scripture has not been forgotten during the past year will be perfectly clear to all into whose hand the new report falls; and which may be obtained (6d.) at the Offices of the Society, Room 12, Exeter Hall. Thousands of penny, half-penny, and free dinners have been given to starving children; ill-clad bodies have been warmly clothed, work has been provided for the unemployed, and in many other ways has relief been administered.

In addition to this, more than 500 scholars have become Church members and communicants during the past year. The number of affiliated schools and missions is now close on 200, six of which were added last year; the voluntary and self-denying teachers number 3500; nearly 800 candidates received prizes for good character, and upwards of 42,000 children have been in regular attendance on Sundays, at the afternoon and evening schools. Brief reports of the work being done by the various schools add much to the interest of the pamphlet, and show in detail the self-denying character of the labours accomplished, with pleasing instances of the successes achieved. Almost every school seems really to be a Christian mission, from which streams of blessing go forth to the neighbourhood, in the form of benevolence and Gospel teaching. New buildings have been opened at Bermondsey, Deptford, and Chiswick. In the provinces, too, there is prosperity: "five new ragged school centres have been founded at Manchester, and one at Oxford."

Nearly 20,000 gather at the children's services. The week-night schools for boys and men have been well attended. The industrial element has considerably developed, and healthful reading has been largely promoted.

For the further record of mothers' meetings, penny banks, Bible-classes, clothing clubs, ragged churches, and sick visitation, &c., our readers must procure the report. The statistical map, appended, furnishes a large amount of information at a glance. "Twelve ways by which the Society may be helped," is rather an interesting study; while twelve distinct "objects" for which the Society exists, reveals a scope and purpose worthy of the fame which its promoters and sustainers, both past and present, have earned.

NOBLE TESTIMONY.—The Government of India recently certified to the value of mission work in its "Blue Book," in the following fashion: The winning of converts is but a small portion of the beneficial results which have sprung from missionaries' labours. No statistics can give a fair view of all that they have done. The moral tone of their preaching is recognised by hundreds who do not follow them as converts. The lessons which they inculcate have given to the people new ideas, not only on purely religious questions, but on the nature of evil, the obligations of law, and the motives by which human conduct should be regulated. Insensibly a higher standard of moral conduct is becoming familiar to the people. The Government of India cannot but acknowledge the great obligation under which it is laid by the benevolent exertions made by the 600 missionaries, whose blameless example and self-denying labours are infusing new vigour into the life of the great populations placed under English rule.—Central Presbyterian.

TWELFTH KESWICK CONVENTION.

I.

Canon Battersby rests from his labours, and he is blessed, for his works do follow him. This annual Convention, which God gave him to establish, goes on to be an increasing blessing, and in this, its twelfth year of meeting, has literally lengthened its cords, and strengthened its stakes; for the marquee in which its 2000 assembled has been considerably enlarged, and is still packed to overflowing. It would have been better, however, had it been round or square, rather than a parallelogram, whose length is four or five times its breadth. The personal influence of a speaker, whose audience is chiefly on either side of him, is lost at the extremities, and those who speak in a low tone are not heard there at all.

The meetings began on Sunday afternoon and evening, July 25. Revs. W. Haslam and J. A. Jacobs were the preachers.

On Monday evening the preliminary meeting was opened by Mr. Wilson, one of the conveners, who urged the need of love to all saints, for we are all members of Christ's body, and of one another—not that we may be, but we are.

Rev. W. Webb-Peploe spoke some practical and searching words from 1 Kings xx. Benhadad, whom God had appointed to utter destruction, may represent any sin, anything against God. We may be busy here and there, and let it escape; we may be too busy even in Christian service to do the very one thing which God wants us to do. The evil thing may escape, and we have to pay the penalty.

At the early morning meeting Rev. Evan Hopkins gave some valuable remarks on Job xxii. 21—30. Acquaint thyself with God, and be at peace (21); by humble reception of the Word; take time to ponder it (22); return to Him and confess your sin, and put it away (23); then follows joy in God, with nothing between (26); power in prayer, which is a different thing from the habit of praying (27); success in service (28); faith in trial (29); blessing through us to others.

The second meeting was a Bible-reading, by Dr. Elder Cumming, on Jacob. His was not one of the higher lives. He could not be described in one word like Abraham—faith; Isaac—self-surrender; Paul—zeal; John—love. He was a selfish, inconsistent, half-consecrated man; no generous act is recorded that he ever did. His history was divided into early days; middle life; old age; deathbed. His vow at Bethel was the turning point—his conversion. At Peniel was his time of consecration, but he comes away and acts on the old principles of expediency and self-trust; and he lies to Esau, saying, he will follow on to Seir, but went in the opposite direction to Succoth. Other men who were given a new name were always after called by it; but Jacob is much oftener, in the subsequent history, called by the old name of Jacob than the new one of Israel, though it had been twice with emphasis repeated (at Peniel and Bethel). Jacob did not hold to the character which was expressed by Israel, and, therefore, was still more frequently called Jacob.

Shechem revealed an awful state of things in Jacob's family. What value they set on society, and especially on a title. How Jacob contrasts with Abram, of whom God said he knew he would command his children and his household after him. He returns to Bethel, and puts away the idols, and God again blesses him. Yet not till he comes to die does he unreservedly give God glory; and his dying blessing of Joseph's two sons is the one thing noted of his faith in Heb. xi. May the Lord enable those who have in any degree followed in the steps of Jacob, to yield themselves again to God, not this time in their own strength, but depending on the keeping power of God alone.

At the next meeting (from 11.30 to 1 a.m.), Mr. Bowker assumed the presidency, which he, as usual, exercised at all the meetings. He spoke a few introductory words from Hosea ii. 18—23, of Jehovah betrothing us in righteousness, judgment, loving-kindness, mercies, and in faithfulness.

Pastor Stockmayer gave the opening address. He said that John i. 17 came to his mind when asked to speak: "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." A distinction was often made between Gospel meetings and holiness meetings. But these Keswick gatherings are Gospel meetings. We have not only four Gospels, but the Acts, the Epistles, and the Revelation too are Gospel to the last word, "Behold I come quickly." This one precious word, "Gospel," sums up all blessing. In these words, in John i. 17, it is the Gospel in opposition to the terrible law—the law that causes one to sink down in despair. The law tells us what we must do, but never can do; the Gospel tells us what Christ has done. So these are Gospel meetings, in which we hear, not of what we must do, but of what that Blessed One has done, and what He engages to do, for each of us. Here is Gospel—good tidings—for any who reach out in longing after what Jacob saw in his visisn—Communion with heaven. We read, "For of his fulness have we all received;" or, we may read it, "taken," for in the Greek, as in the German, there is but one word for "receive" and "take." From how many places and positions have we come, expecting God's blessing—drawing nearer to Him, and so to one another? We may have open-air meetings; but let us also have open-heaven meetings. We are here, not to be told new things, but that each one may see what has been done already, and take the Gospel in its simplicity and fulness. You have heard of backsliding; you may have experienced it. You may have been disappointed. What you expected did not arrive. Is it not because you did not find your way into the new dispensation of the Gospel in which we simply "take"? If we are to get special blessing we must understand these are not speaking meetings, but meetings of experience. The speakers will tell you, not what they desire, but what they have realised. Some are here in whose experience there is no backsliding; who ever find, "It is better further on."

"Grace and truth" are not mysterious and complicated. As you go on these elements become simple. Holiness is simplicity. He who went through his human life with such simplicity is able to give us, notwithstanding our complicated civilisation, simplicity in trusting Him step by step. Simple "grace and truth." It is ground laid down by redemption for our feet, in which the humblest of us may walk. This ground will bear us; let us just receive, that is, take, and give thanks.

Rev. W. Webb-Peploe, as last year, spoke very searchingly, and showed that first we must be brought down before we can be lifted up. He very distinctly disavowed any novelty of doctrine; nothing but the old Gospel of a full, free, and perfect salvation. But the special purpose was to press on each soul to make Christ and his salvation a reality during all the future life; to know his keeping power. Mr. Webb-Peploe then went on to speak of the first Psalm, remarking that the Psalms begin with "Blessed is the man," and ends with "Praise ye the Lord." So may it be with our Convention. He marked seven steps of the ungodly man, three positions, and four consequences, ending with "his way shall perish." The blessed man absolutely separates himself from everything known to be evil; he meditates on the law of the Lord day and night. The lack of this was illustrated by a Christian worker, who had no joy, and wondered why; but he found she only read her Bible once a week. People now want their food minced small, that they may have no trouble in eating and digesting it. The trees and rivers were dwelt upon in a way which showed the speaker himself to be a diligent searcher of the Word; and he closed by showing the reward of the blessed man's life in that God makes all he does to prosper.

At the evening meeting Rev. W. Haslam said he had a familiar subject. It was in the beginning of Ps. xl. Let us take it up experimentally, and apply it to ourselves.

David first praises because he was brought up out of a horrible pit. So it was with hundreds there. We were helpless, and the Lord took us out. We knew not the full horrors of the pit until we were taken out. If we overlook these horrors we do not feel for those still lost. If we realised the danger of souls we would cry to them out of an aching heart, and that would touch them.

Then, too, David was taken out of the miry clay. We are taken out of it, but we bring some of it out with us. You may not see the clay upon you, but others do. It can't be brushed off by resolutions. Remember, a resolution is no stronger than you are yourself. If a bull-dog attacks you, you may lay hold of him by his ears, and hold him for a time. But you may be sure he'll bite you the minute you let go. To get cleansed you must exercise the same faith you did for pardon. As you were helpless to get out of the pit, so be helpless about getting rid of the miry clay. Get cleansing through the blood sprinkled before the throne. Next David gets his feet on the rock. But were not my feet on the rock at conversion? you ask. Yes, but there was something between your feet and the rock—the miry clay. That is why you slip. We must rest on Christ, with nothing between. We must realise that we are one with Him. We must abide in Him.

Next, He orders our goings (ver. 2). He becomes responsible for us. Yet we represent Him. What an honour, yet what responsibility! How many praise Him with the lip, but dishonour Him with the life. We must yield ourselves to be controlled by his Spirit. You may do it as I speak.

Then there is the new song (ver. 3). A new song to sing, and a new life to live,—a life of joyfulness and thanksgiving. If, in heart, you are singing the new song, it will shine out in your face and speak in your words, and men will perceive that you have been with Christ. Then God will use you. "Many will see it, and fear, and turn to the Lord." Instead of bearing crosses we will be flying with them. These that we have traced are the five steps into blessing.

Rev. C. A. Fox followed with the most powerful address we ever heard from him, and one of the most influential ever delivered at this Convention. A great power of God accompanied it, and we felt that a speaker who had thus got the ear and heart of his audience has an advantage in conducting an after-meeting which no one else on that occasion possesses.

Mr. Fox divided Christians into four classes: Calvary Christians, who know Christ crucified and their sins forgiven, and no more; Resurrection or Easter Christians, who know a risen Christ, and go no further. Then there are Ascension Christians, who know Him as at the right hand of God, and themselves raised up together and seated together in heavenly places in Him. All these have an experience of Christ which affects themselves. But the fourth kind, whom for want of a better word he would call Descension Christians, are those who come down from the heavenly places into this world of sin and sorrow to spend and be spent in saving others. Their Lord is in heaven; and they are there in heaven; they are seeking to fulfil his command to preach the Gospel to every creature, and He is with them always, even to the end.

In order to attain to this place of usefulness there are four hills to climb: (1) Moriah, in which two things are seen—self-surrender and consequent blessing (Gen. xxii. 16—19). (2) Sinai, which teaches us two things—God's holy law, and that that law is Love. (3) Calvary, which had its foreshadow on its heavenward side at Tabor, where with Moses and Elias Jesus spake of his decease—his exodus. Calvary teaches us two things—death and deliverance. (4) Mount Zion (Rev. xiv.), whose twofold lesson is virtue and victory. Some would say the vision of the 144,000 on Mount Zion is in the future. But it has its present truth. The Epistle to the Hebrews says we are come to Mount Zion. We must ascend this last height—must be in fellowship with all saints now on earth, and all who have gone before. The practical result of all is that we shall serve the Lord acceptably with reverence and godly fear. Is your service acceptable? Enoch left God to give testimony of him. If all our brethren and friends can give that testimony to us it is well. But to stand up and give it of ourselves I cannot think that to be right. Why don't we have more shining faces? Because the consecration is imperfect, unreal, or withdrawn.

An after-meeting followed, conducted by Rev. Evan Hopkins. Almost all who remained stood up to express their desire to consecrate themselves entirely and for ever to the Lord and his service, and again a large number expressed in the same way that they had received blessing that day.

KESWICK—AN AFTERTHOUGHT.

JOHN vi. 12.

THE feast is over now upon the mountain—
Over and done.
With earnest faces still the crowd are waiting—
While one by one
The stars shine out, and, in a stormy glory,
Sets the red sun.

The Master gently speaks unto his chosen—
"Gather the small
Unnoticed fragments left upon the hillside—
Yea, gather all!"
Let us, too, listen to his words, rejoicing
To heed his call.

The days of wonder pass; the mighty moments
Near heaven's gate;
We must return to earth to daily duty,
And lowly wait;
Yet we may save some store of crumbs, enriching
Our lower state:

Crumbs from the Master's table, lasting over
The crowning days;
Brightening our home with plenty, overflowing
Our hearts with praise;
That we may walk here in our distant valleys
As mountain ways.

Cheering the hearts which love us with bright
Of things above. [echoes
Remembering glory, by the grace still filling
Our souls with love;
So may we draw our loved ones ever nearer,
Our joy to prove.

And know, within ourselves, the higher rapture
Of having taught
Others to know our Lord, from the reflection
Our life has caught,
In that short sojourn, there upon the mountains
With wonder fraught.

MARGARET BERESFORD.

A TRIUMPH OF TEMPERANCE.—The House of Keys has, by a large majority, rejected the Bill passed by the Upper Branch of the Isle of Man Legislature, the object of which was to license lodging-houses in Douglas and Ramsey to sell intoxicating liquors from May to October.

SEAMEN'S TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.—A public meeting was held in the Seamen's Chapel, Glasgow, to hear the report of the Seamen's Temperance League and Sailors' Rest Society from Mr. Stephen Burrowes, of Naples. A large number of seamen and other friends were present. The report stated that Sailors' Rests had been opened at Naples, Pozzuoli, and in the island of Sicily, and that these institutions were more needed and more useful abroad, where poor Jack is a stranger in a strange land than in home ports. Mr. Hazel, ship-master, and Mr. Morrison, missionary, proposed and seconded the adoption of the report, which was adopted. On the 19th instant, a similar meeting was held in the Seamen's Chapel, South Shields, presided over by the Rev. Mr. Farrar, the chaplain. I gave an account of the work among seamen in Naples and other ports in the Mediterranean. At the close of the meeting Captain M. Cay proposed and Mr. J. Foster seconded that the report was worthy of the sympathy and support of those present, and the report was then accepted with three hearty British cheers. Many were present who had a personal knowledge of the workings of the Seamen's Temperance League and Sailors' Rest Society, and their approvals will cheer us in the difficulties we shall have to face in maintaining the institutions on evangelical and united lines.

SUFFERING CHILDREN.

THE London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is doing a good work, and although it is heartrending to read in their report of the inhuman behaviour of some parents to their offspring, it is comforting to think that this Society is doing something to alleviate the misery of the little sufferers. During the year—the second of the Society's existence — of which the report treats, 147 cases have been dealt with by the committee, involving cruelty to 327 children. The largest number of cases—forty—were of savage assault. The provocation given was usually trifling: letting out a fire, or spilling a jug of beer; yet sufficient to arouse the fury of thoughtless brutes, who employed pokers, thongs of rope, fists or boots, to wreak their vengeance on the little victims, whose ages are given as varying from twelve years down to fifteen months. Other cases are classified under the heads of gradual starvation and deliberate exposure, culpable neglect, while seventeen cases of street children, who were sent out to beg or steal, or were used as a useful stock-in-trade by their immoral owners, are noted.

One pleasing feature in the report is a slight decrease (13) in the number of cases of savage assault, which is attributed to the severe sentences, justly given by some magistrates to the offenders. These cases are generally characterised by a denial of the child's rights. "He's my own child; I can do what I like with him!" was said to Mr. Vaughan, at Bow-street, by a ruffian who had struck a little boy, three years old, in the face with his fist. Another case is given where a boy, weighing only 27 lbs., was compelled to carry flat irons, weighing 7 lbs., one in each hand, up and down stairs from early morn to night, not being allowed to stop even to eat his food. Under the head of serious neglect are two cases of scalding to death, which occurred in workhouses. Steps have since been taken, which will render a repetition of this offence improbable.

Forty-one victims of cruelty have been received into the shelter pending trials during the year, and these children have spent 1768 nights there, and received 5010 meals. The Society calls attention to a grave defect in the law, which at present allows, and even requires, the parents to have control of the children, although they may have outraged every parental instinct. Many instances of the ineffectual working of the law could be adduced if space would permit, but we can only refer our readers to a paper entitled "The Child of the English Savage," which has been reprinted from The Contemporary Review by the Society, and may be obtained from the Society's Offices at 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury.

SQUALID LIVERPOOL.—Since its origin in June, 1885, the work in squalid Liverpool of the Rev. Herbert Wood, M.A., and Mr. Nunn, at Gay-street, Scotland-road, has been graciously honoured of God. Now it has pleased the Lord to extend this soul-saving effort by giving us an extensive field in the South end. We have taken premises at 30, Warwick-street, and have turned them into a spacious mission hall. Here we are labouring for the salvation of souls; the feeding of the hungry; the housing of the homeless; a preventive institution for the rescue, education and industrial training of destitute or orphan children, and the restoration of the fallen unfortunates.

T. R. GALBRAITH, Missionary in Charge.
Home of Joy, Warwick-street, Liverpool.

THE FOREIGN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—The report of this Society acknowledges the goodness of God in permitting it to bear some part, though but a humble one, in the great conflict between his cause and that of his adversaries on the Continent of Europe. In regard to this work, it is still "a day of small things." Yet in many places in France, in Belgium, in Germany, in Italy, and in Spain and Portugal, the work of making known the Gospel is being earnestly prosecuted, though often under great difficulties. In Spain the death of King Alfonso removed a very formidable repression of the work of the Gospel, for with the fall of the Canovas-Pidal Ministry fell also the hopes of the Romish hierarchy for the time being. The hon. secretary is the Rev. Horace Noel, Woking, Surrey.

THE TRAINING SCHOOL AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

MR. J. MUHLENBRUCH, writing from Smyrna, where he is now stationed, thus speaks of a very interesting work in which he was engaged whilst at Constantinople:—

From the time we took it, till we left Constantinople, the Training School has always been a source of great pleasure to us, and we felt very sorry to give it up. We have never felt any pecuniary anxiety or trouble. The Lord richly supplied our needs, and even gave us more than we asked, and we cannot be thankful enough for all his bountiful dealings. I was able, after paying everything till the end of May, to hand over about £30 to Mr. Ginsburg. Mrs. Ginsburg has kindly consented to continue the Institute, which we are very glad of. It is a blessed work, and much good can be done if directed in the right way. A few weeks before we left we had a touching episode. The mother of the eldest girl came and insisted upon taking her daughter home, as she was big enough to help her in her household. We remonstrated with her, and at last succeeded in persuading her to let her child remain in the Orphanage another year. When Mrs. Mühlenbruch immediately after went round to the house, she found the girl crying bitterly, saying that she did not wish to go home, as her mother would force her to be a Jewess, but she was a Christian in heart, and loved Christ, and prayed every day to God that her mother might become a Christian. At another occasion, she told the matron that she knew that she would have to suffer if she went home, but she was prepared for that, and no one could take away her religion from her, as it was in her heart.

At the end of December we had seven Jewish children under our charge. In January we placed the eldest as a servant in a Missionary's house, where she has given great satisfaction till now. In November, I accepted two new girls, children of a poor Jewish widow at Braila. More than a year ago she was begging me hard to do something for her children, and in November I promised to take two of them. But then it was too cold for her to bring them to Constantinople, and in March she was laid up with typhoid fever; when she recovered from that she had difficulties with her passport, but wrote and begged me to keep the two places vacant, as she was sure to come as soon as possible. So we have been waiting for them from week to week, and that is the reason why we only left six Jewish children in charge of Mrs. Ginsburg.

We had morning and evening prayers at the Orphanage every day, and on Sundays a short morning service. The children had a Bible lesson every day, either with Mrs. Mühlenbruch or myself, in the Old or New Testament; and on Sunday afternoon they attended Mrs. Mühlenbruch's Sunday-school. Besides, they were taught English, German, French, arithmetic, writing, spelling and needlework.

CHICAGO.—The Citizens' League, in June, caused the arrest of sixty-three saloon-keepers, on 116 charges on the South Side, seventy with 128 charges on the West Side, and twenty-seven with thirty-nine charges on the North Side. Fines were imposed on 202 charges, six were held to the criminal court, fifty-three continued, and twenty-two nolle prossed.

BETHESDA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—The annual sale of work, which is always a considerable help to this Mission, will be held in October. The workers again appeal for gifts of work, plain and ornamental, and articles of every reasonable kind, including books and illustrated periodicals of a thoroughly evangelical character for this object. It is requested that all articles may be sent in before October 1, marked with a suitable price, which will be thankfully received by Mrs. Colebrook, The Home, Brunswick-road, Southsea; or Miss Selwood, 7, Grafton-street, Mile-end, Portsmouth. Funds are continually needed for the various departments of the work, and friends are invited to name the object when help is forwarded to Commander B. H. Key, the superintendent, Downham, St. Edward's-road, Southsea.

OUT AND INTO.

[Written by the late Malachi Taylor, on receiving into Christian fellowship a woman who had been a sinner.]

"He brought us out, that He might bring us in."
Deut. vi. 23.

Out of the distance and darkness so deep,
Out of the settled and perilous sleep,
Out of the region and shadow of death,
Out of its foul and pestilent breath,
Out of the bondage and wearing chains,
Out of companionship, ever, with stains.

Into the light and glory of God,
Into the holiest made clean by blood,
Into his arms, the embrace and the kiss,
Into the scene of ineffable bliss,
Into the quiet and infinite calm,
Into the place of the song and the psalm.

Wonderful love, that has wrought all for me!
Wonderful work, that has thus set me free!
Wonderful ground, upon which I have come!
Wonderful tenderness, welcoming home!

Out of disaster and ruin complete,
Out of the struggle and dreary defeat,
Out of my sorrow, and bondage and shame,
Out of the evils too fearful to name,
Out of my guilt and the criminal's doom,
Out of the dreading, and terror and gloom.

Into the scenes of forgiveness and rest,
Into inheritance with all the blest,
Into a righteous and permanent peace,
Into the grandest and fullest release,
Into the comfort without an alloy,
Into a perfect and confident joy.

Wonderful holiness bringing to light!
Wonderful grace, putting all out of sight!
Wonderful lowliness, draining my cup!
Wonderful purpose, that ne'er gave me up.

Out of the horror of being alone,
Out, and for ever, of being my own,
Out of the bitterness, madness, and strife,
Out of myself, and all I called "life,"
Out of the hardness of heart and of will,
Out of the longings that nothing could fill.

Into communion with Father and Son,
Into the sharing of all that Christ won,
Into the ecstacies, full to the brim,
Into the having of all things with Him,
Into Christ Jesus, there ever to dwell,
Into more blessings than tongue can e'er tell.

Wonderful person, whose face I'll behold!
Wonderful story, there all to be told!
Wonderful, all the dread way that He trod!
Wonderful end, that He brought me to God!

REV. J. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN have been holding valuable meetings at Ballarat and Adelaide.

EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Dr. Colin S. Valentine, of Agra, Dr. Mackinnon, of Damascus, and Dr. Lyall, of Swatow, are now in England, but hope to return to their respective spheres of labour in the autumn. The Swatow Medical Mission, which is, during Dr. Lyall's absence, under the charge of Dr. P. B. Cousland, has been greatly blessed. During 1885 the number of in-patients was 3867, and the average daily number of in-patients was 200. In addition, 1770 out-patients were treated. All the patients who are able are expected to attend morning and evening worship in the hospital chapel, and as a result over eight patients last year publicly declared their faith and their desire to join the Church. The Society has been enabled to send funds to Mr. McAll for the support of the two dispensaries which he has opened at Les Ternes and Ivry. Dr. Anderson contributes an interesting account of the inauguration of the work to this month's Quarterly Paper, which also contains a letter from Miss Whately giving a cheering description of the work of the Cairo Medical Mission, the pioneer of the work in Egypt. At Smyrna, Dr. L. Prinski Scott, who is a Jew with special qualifications for missionary work amongst his people, is working with much acceptance. From 6000 to 7000 patients pass under the doctor's hands every year, and a house with grounds attached has now been purchased for a hospital.

NANY'S FAITH.

A missionary was ill. A poor Christian negress visited him, to whom she said—

"Massa, do you see the bright side of the cloud?"

"No, Nany, it is not so bright; I wish it was."

"Well, Massa, I always see the bright side of the cloud."

"You do, Nany? It may be you have never had much trouble?"

"May be I have never had much trouble! I have seen all my children sold one by one; I have seen my husband sold away from me. I have been sold myself. I am now in camp alone, and have not heard from my husband for years. May be I have not had much trouble."

"But Nany, have you seen the bright side of the cloud all that time?"

"Always, Massa—always!"

"Well, Nany, how did you do it?"

"Dis is the way, Massa. When I see the great black cloud coming over me, then I just whips round on de oder side; dere I find the Lord Jesus; den it is all bright and clear. De light is always where Jesus is, Massa."

"Well, Nany, if you can always do that, I think I might too."

"'Pears like you ought to, Massa, as you are a preacher of the Word."

Nany turned away. The minister said: "The Lord is my Shepherd." Soon after he fell asleep. When he awoke the fever was broken. Nany's faith had saved him.

Faith settles the soul in all troubles, and brings peace and quietude. When the weight is put into the balances, there will be a trembling till they come to a poise. So, when the weight of sin is put in the soul against the claims of justice, there will be a trembling between hope and fear, till, by faith, the soul settles down on Jesus, and finds rest. It takes God at his word, and believes that all He has said of Jesus is true.

This is illustrated by the statement of an American sailor, who says: "I once served in the Navy under Captain Porter; he was a severe officer, and, as I believed, illtreated his men. So, upon a favourable opportunity, I, with others, ran away from my ship, and concealed myself in Boston and its vicinity for two years.

"During that time a reward of 200 dollars a head was offered for the apprehension of deserters. I, however, successfully escaped detection. At the end of two years the war of 1812 broke out with England. The Government was greatly in need of men, and accordingly they issued proposals of mercy to all deserters, in which they promised that if those who had deserted would return, they should be pardoned, and nothing should be said of their misdemeanour. I saw these proposals, and, believing them to be made in good faith, went down to the navy office, confessed I was a deserter, and offered to re-enlist. I was accepted, and nothing was said to me about the past." In this case no one was punished, but by virtue of Christ's sufferings God has issued proposals of mercy to all who have deserted Him, and given the assurance that if men will return to Him from whom they have revolted, and accept Christ as the Saviour, their sins shall be forgiven, and cast as a stone into the depths of the sea.

Faith opens the door into the treasure-house of God's mercy, and gives free access to Christ and all the blessings of his salvation. One day a friend came for the key of my vestry, which was handed to him. He tried it in the door, but it would not turn; he looked at me with surprise, and tried again; still it would not turn. "Let me try; perhaps the door is not locked." I took hold of the handle, it turned freely; the door opened, it was not locked. So is it often in coming to Christ, the door of entrance to all, the blessings of salvation is ever unlocked, and opens freely to all who come by faith. We want to do for ourselves what He has done for us. We try some key of our own, and seek to force our way to salvation; but when by faith we touch the door it gently opens to us, and we have free access to God. This is the faith that saves, and gives support in trouble. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." "The just shall live by faith."

C.E. ZENANA MISSION.

It is not in Patna alone that the followers of Islam are beginning to regard with nervous apprehension the powerful influence which Christian ladies exert over their less fortunate sisters in India. The C.E.Z. missionaries report that an Urdu tract has been issued and circulated amongst Punjabi Mussulmans declaring that the "Mission-schools are filled with Mohammedan children. There is scarce a lane, a street, a house, where the effect of these schools is not seen. The evil is spreading rapidly everywhere." Thus we are indebted to the enemies of Christianity for reporting the success of our Missions. The work of the Amritsar Medical Mission is steadily aggressive. Miss Sharp (who in the absence of Miss Hewlett took over the management) relates that "three dispensaries, besides St. Catharine's (Hospital) have been working constantly throughout the year, with a total of 28,971 patients." Whilst desirous of ministering to the souls as well as bodies of those who seek their care, the lady doctors find their professional duties (with the increasing number of hospital in-patients, dispensary out-patients, and private Zenana patients), together with the enlarged sphere of usefulness these open to them, give opportunities which it is not possible to "buy up" in their limited time.

Miss Sharp writes: "As may be imagined, the medical workers cannot possibly overtake all the spiritual work which is at hand to be done, and therefore we have a staff of purely missionary workers, whose duties are to read to patients at dispensaries, or visit houses, where, after recovery, the Bible reading is still desired. The hospital itself affords a field which anyone might covet. With from twelve to eighteen or twenty patients daily, we have the undisturbed opportunity of making known the truths of Christianity; and many remain for several weeks. Of course, the results will depend on the soil; but ours is a prayer-hearing God, who by his Holy Spirit's influence can make hearts of stone into hearts of flesh; and we believe that not a few have carried away with them a real knowledge of the way of salvation."

WRECKING A GOSPEL TENT.

Very interesting tent services were held from July 7 to 16 at Cretingham, Suffolk. The well-known tent, with its bright flags, was set up in the vicarage meadow, by the kind permission of the vicar, Rev. W. M. Farley, and for the first three days of the mission a fair number of people listened attentively to the vigorous and faithful pleadings of Mr. J. H. Gibbens, of the Evangelisation Society. On Sunday afternoon (July 11) there was a good gathering on the lawn at Framsden Vicarage, and in the evening over 300 assembled at Cretingham—but not, alas! in the tent.

Malicious hands, late on Saturday night, had cut away every rope, thrown the lamps about the field, smashed the fine harmonium, and thrown it in the moat, and utterly wrecked the tent. The work of God, however, could not be hindered. The vicarage barn was speedily cleared, and greater numbers gathered every night to hear the glad tidings. The vicar of Cretingham, Rev. T. H. Lyon, of Pinner, and Rev. A. J. Begbie, vicar of Framsden, Stonham, were present at all the meetings, to which many came from the surrounding villages. Friends desiring to show their practical sympathy may communicate with Mr. Begbie.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—August 8, Acts xxvii. 18—29; August 9, Acts xxvii. 30—44; August 10, Acts xxviii. 1—16; August 11, Acts xxviii. 17—31; August 12, Philippians i. 1—17; August 13, Philippians i. 18—30; August 14, Philippians ii. 1—13.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN.

This talented lady returned to our shores last week, after a lengthened visit to her own land. In Jerusalem she lectured to a large and appreciative audience. She carried her hearers with her, and when she closed with an urgent appeal "for the sons and daughters of Zion to rouse themselves and be doing something for Jerusalem to prepare the way of the Lord," everybody was visibly moved, and the service was closed by singing the Coronation hymn, "All hail the power of Jesu's name," in which everyone joined heartily, especially the "Crown Him, crown Him Lord of all."

Miss Finkelstein writes: "I have been wonderfully preserved by God during my whole journey, though I met with several accidents. In leaving Jerusalem, coming down to Jaffa with a party of friends, my horse stumbled, and fell down, in descending a steep hill. I was of course thrown violently, but how I was not killed is a marvel to me. I escaped with a few bruises, a sprained elbow and wrist. I have worn my right arm in bandages during my voyage; but now, thank God, it is so much better that I can write easily, though the arm is still a little stiff and painful. I have much to be thankful to God for his protection. On the whole, considering all in all, my health is very good, and I feel much benefited by my trip."

SALE of INTOXICANTS on SUNDAY.

The past year has witnessed considerable progress in the advancement of public opinion in favour of Sunday Closing. More than 8000 six-day licenses were taken out in England and Ireland, while the total number of English householders who are one with the Society has been ascertained to exceed one million. A large number of meetings and conferences have been held, in addition to religious, temperance, and political gatherings, at which resolutions have been adopted in favour of the movement. At one of these meetings, held at Middlesborough, when 2000 to 3000 persons were present, only six held up their hands against Sunday Closing.

Parliamentary action in the matter, however, has been materially hindered by reason of the reluctance of Parliament to give the necessary facilities, and by the changes which have taken place; but where the Closing Act has been in force considerable benefit has accrued. Thrift, temperance, and religion have been promoted, while improvement is reported in the payment of rents, in savings banks' deposits, and in attendance at work on Mondays. In the Principality of Wales (Cardiff excepted) there has been a reduction of convictions for Sunday drunkenness of 14½ per cent. Public order, attendance at places of worship, suppression of private drinking and of illicit sales, are also noted among the signs of improvement. The nineteenth annual report, just issued, is published at the offices of the Society, 14, Brown-street, Manchester. Thanks are expressed for the cordial assistance rendered by supporters from all parts of the country, and the belief, that the Society's hold upon popular sympathies is continually gaining strength, is unanimously declared by the committee.

THE JAPANESE VILLAGERS.—A correspondent writes: "I was much moved in visiting the Village the other day at seeing the idolatrous shrines in their shops. Do they really worship these dumb idols in a Christian land like ours? and, if so, is anything being done to enlighten them? If not, what can they think of the sincerity of the Christian's belief in their own religion, while they come and go unmoved, in the behalf of those who are so full of darkness in the very midst of light and life? Are there New Testaments in their own language published by the Bible Society? How many would be needed for them? and at what cost? and would anyone see that they were given to them? May I ask these questions for information and guidance? There are schemes of benevolence on all hands; is there nothing to be done for them?" Perhaps some of our readers will interest themselves in this cause.

REV. NEWMAN HALL ON OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

Perhaps no man living has a greater right to be heard on the subject of open-air preaching than the minister of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. Therefore it was only natural that when he invited the members and friends of the Open-air Mission to hold their quarterly meeting in Hawkstone-hall (the lecture hall of Christ Church) on the 26th ultimo, there should be a large gathering, though in the midst of the holiday season. Mr. Hall and his deacons first received the guests to tea, and then on adjourning to the hall they were joined by members of the congregation and the general public. "My Personal Recollections as an Open-air Preacher" was both a fascinating and a wide title. Mr. Hall began by reminding his audience that that congregation was founded in the atmosphere of open-air preaching by Rowland Hill, and continued by his successor, Mr. Sherman. When he (Mr. Hall) commenced this mode of preaching fifty-four years ago, it was not so popular as it is now.

He gave various reasons why he liked open-air preaching. The ventilation was better than indoors, the people need not stay if they did not like it. Numbers heard the Gospel who would not otherwise be reached, and all classes could take part in it. He advised the preachers to cultivate a simple style and use plain Saxon words, to preach Christ, to illustrate their subjects by their surroundings and by the events of the day, to avoid much argument, to preach positive truth, and to be brief.

Coming to his actual experiences, it appears that he was led to decision for God at the age of sixteen, and preached his first open-air sermon soon after to the hop-pickers at Foxheath, near Maidstone. On that occasion ten minutes sufficed for reading and expounding! While a student at Highbury College, he preached in connection with Craven Chapel, where the Great Western Railway Station now stands. When supplying at Dover, he preached on the pier. At Hull an open-air sermon was the germ of his well-known book, "Come to Jesus," of which more than three millions have been circulated. The Seven Dials, Surrey Chapel, and the New Cut all came in for a share of notice; and among the more remarkable places named were Mars Hill and Golgotha.

THE GOLDEN BELLS.

Dear Sir,—I am exceedingly grateful to your readers for the sums of money sent me anonymously, in behalf of the funds required for opening the Golden Bells Coffee Palace. One friend has now promised us £50 and another £20, if we can raise by other aid £300 within three months. I need not say how grateful I should feel for a response to this most kind offer.

In the evenings we should be very glad of any gratuitous help in praying or singing.

Once more asking your readers to visit the Golden Bells (87, High-street, Notting-hill-gate) and see for themselves the work the Coffee Palace is already beginning to do, and entreating the prayers of Christians for the Divine aid and help in this undertaking,

I remain, yours truly, E. R. Hope.

HYDE-PARK HALL MISSION.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held in the Hyde-park Hall, Stourcliffe-street, on the 27th ult. The stamp of Divine approval is clearly upon this work. The Metropolitan Music Hall services in the winter are remarkably well attended, while the Hyde-park meeting is very large. Numerous conversions have cheered our brother and his fellow-workers, no less than twenty-two in the circle of one family having been brought in within sixteen months. The recent death of Mrs. Cook cast a shadow over the meeting, and was feelingly alluded to by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, who read and expounded Psa. cxxvi., and exhorted the workers to work while it is day.

JUVENILE PURITY.

Dear Sir,—It is pleasing to see the great strides that the Social Purity Question is now making among adults, and the consequent blessing upon the community at large will be incalculable.

But with regard to juveniles, little has yet been done to question their moral sense, and arm them against the peculiar temptation that so easily leads them astray. It is generally admitted that the juvenile mind is purer than the adult, but how quickly that native purity can be contaminated and destroyed is a fact that many Sunday-school teachers beside myself have sad reasons to deplore.

While in the very act of imparting sound religious instruction, the teacher will notice (if he is acute) certain suggestions passing from one scholar to another, generally of a vile character, and which may be traced to some one coarse-minded member of the class, who, if examined, will be found to have derived his filthy notions from bad companions and impure books.

To know how to deal with these cases has been a matter of difficulty with many teachers, many of them not possessing the moral courage to sift the matter to the bottom, find out the cause, and remove that.

Impure literature, street companions, gay places of amusement, unite to taint the entire current of a child's thoughts, words, and actions, and to guard the rising generation against these evils is no small matter.

We have Bands of Hope in our schools to combat with the sin of intemperance, and Bands of Mercy to awaken kindly feelings towards the dumb creation in the breasts of the young. But these matters, though important, are comparatively small compared with the spread of juvenile impurity, to combat which there are no institutions organised.

The object of my letter is to propose such an organisation for the development of a higher tone of morality among our Sunday-school scholars, upon the principle that it is easy to turn the current of the little streamlet in a right direction, where the river's flow cannot be stopped.

The name for the organisation is proposed to be called—

THE BAND OF PURITY.

Pledge.

I promise, by Divine assistance, to abstain from every form of evil.

Obligations.

To abstain from reading all gay, foolish, vile, or indecent books.
To avoid all gay, indecent companions.
To shun all low places of amusement,
To carefully guard against all low words.
To shun rude games of every kind.

An opportunity can now be placed in the hands of teachers to deal pointedly with any seeming impurity in their scholars, as the evils which pledge and obligations attack are very important foes to religious instruction.

Already I have encroached too much upon your valuable space, but the subject which has been touched upon opens a vast field of labour in the cause of morality and purity. My intent is to start one of these "bands" on similar lines to the Band of Hope movement. Any suggestions that would enlighten upon this matter would be very acceptable to others beside yours obediently,

A Sunday-school Teacher.

ROMEWARD, EVER ROMEWARD!—The Rev. W. C. Reid, rector of Coppenhall, Crewe, has issued the following to his parishioners:—"The rector has much pleasure in announcing that funerals may shortly be conducted with full Catholic ceremonies. There will be a handsome violet pall for adult communicants; a white pall and suitable bier for the funerals of children. There will also be six funeral lights flanking the coffin on either side. A burial guild is in contemplation, with the object of securing increased reverence in the treatment of the dead, and especially of providing choral burial for deceased members of the congregation, being communicants, and their children. The crucifix will be used on these occasions, with acolytes and surpliced choir. Where thought desirable, incense will be employed, so beautifully symbolical of the mutual intercession by which living and departed are bound together." What rubbish is this talk about incense in churches. Canon McColl tells us he uses it to remove bad smells. Incense was probably first introduced as a disinfectant.—Freeman.

Notes and Comments.

Some days since we heard with much sorrow of the serious illness, from African fever, of our beloved friend, Mr. George Pearse, who, with his devoted and like-minded wife, has long lived and toiled for Christ in Algeria. We are gladdened by hearing from his own pen of his convalescence. He has removed to Paris, where he will for the present reside. We hope to give in our next an important letter, from his pen, upon the subject of "France and the Gospel." His long residence under French rule gives him the advantage of minute acquaintance with the matters on which he writes. Correspondents can address him at 4, Place du Théatre Français, Paris.

The gulf between employer and employed widens daily. The relations between rich and poor, capital and labour, never very cordial, are getting more and more strained. This state of matters must be remedied. Its continuance is as dangerous to the State as it is contrary to the spirit of Christianity. The safety and strength of a country are in the contentment of its people; discontent is fatal to true prosperity. Christianity has introduced into the world a law of brotherhood which teaches that wealth is to be regarded as a trust held for the benefit of the community, and not for selfish purposes. It is time that capitalists and employers of labour should learn the meaning of the command, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." That text can satisfactorily solve the problem of the relation of employers and employed.

The cry of workmen is not so much for increase of wages as for fair and fraternal treatment from their masters. They do not wish to be regarded as "hands;" they want to be looked on and dealt with as men. Their demand is reasonable. A law higher than any code of society says to masters and servants all the world over, "Ye are brethren." Labourers are not a marketable commodity. They should not be bought or sold, paid or underpaid, at the decree of trade. They are men with lives to live, and interests to be attended to. They have a right to the recognition of their share in producing, and to a corresponding payment.

Worry weakens life: trust strengthens it. Many people are so busy in thinking about the trials of to-morrow, that they are unable to grapple with the difficulties of to-day. Troubles should not be met half way. "As thy day so shall thy strength be." Take one step at a time. Live one day daily. The present is yours: the future is God's. A storm may be coming, but do not fret over it, and picture your shipwreck. Store up your strength, and calmly wait for what is coming. When it has come, trust in God and do your best.

Empty talk is on the increase. In hours of relaxation and in social enjoyment men talk simply to while away time. These idle words have no character, nor are they employed for any good purpose. They have no ethical value; they are worse than useless—they are positively injurious. They debase the God-given power of speech which was bestowed on man not for frivolous chatter, but for God's glory and the welfare of humanity. Those who indulge in gossip and airy nothings forget Christ's solemn warning: "I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

It is rumoured that a Roman Catholic Hierarchy is to be established in India. For the sake of the inhabitants of that country, we sincerely hope this report will prove unfounded. History records nothing but strife, and consequent misery, wherever it has held sway.

The differences of opinion between English and Roman Catholics with regard to the Irish Question have, as has already been pointed out in The Christian, culminated in a very bitter feeling between the two parties, and the gulf seems widening day by day. In a recent issue, the leading Irish Roman Catholic Journal referred to The Tablet as the "tuft-hunting, leading Catholic paper," and went on to say:

> Hatred of the Irish people—there is no use in denying the fact—is infinitely stronger in the breasts of many English Catholics than of Englishmen of other creeds. O'Connell had no more rabid foes than his English co-religionists, even while he was labouring for their emancipation, and the same inveterate hostility to all things Irish is preserved by their descendants. What the Earl of Shrewsbury was then, the Duke of Norfolk is now—the first and busiest in slandering the Catholics of Ireland. . . . It may be that time will bring our English Catholic enemies to their senses.

If these noteworthy words were merely the outcome of a dispute between two rival journals they might well pass without comment, but each of the two papers represents a tremendously large body of Romanists, adhering more or less firmly to a system, the head of which professes to be infallible. The Pope has, however, recently shown signs of wavering, so far as the Papal policy with respect to Irish affairs is concerned, and his incertitude may have communicated itself to some of his flock, or it may be that some thoughtful persons, the Duke of Norfolk included, seeing their infallible Pope making evident mistakes, have ventured to evolve an opinion of their own. If such be the case, it will be interesting to await the result, for, on the one hand, the Romish apostasy has no room within her borders for people who dare to think for themselves; while, on the other, those who insist upon their right of private judgment in politics may carry the same independent spirit into the domain of religion, and even begin to study the Word of God in its simplicity, and without priestly interpretation.

In the list of subscriptions to charitable objects, given in The Christian for July 22, there is one entry of much interest, "Waste-paper, High School, Margate, 7s.," and the result will be that two or three poor little children from the courts and alleys of the huge metropolis will be partakers of the benefits of the "Day in the Country Fund." The bit of waste-paper is not of much value in itself, but, like the widow's mite, it may be the sign of practical sympathy of a high order.

Last year the income of the British and Foreign Bible Society reached £238,391, the proceeds from the sale of the Scriptures being no less than £105,517. During the year over four millions Bibles, Testaments, and portions of the Scriptures were issued, making a total of 108,320,869 since the Society commenced its valuable labours. Fifty years ago the Society's income was only a little over £100,000, and at that time the cheapest Bible was published at three shillings, whereas to-day one can be obtained for sixpence, or a beautifully-printed Testament for one penny. "In thy light we shall see light" (Ps. xxxvi. 9).

Although the habit of introspection frequently is carried too far, and that which ought to be helpful and healthful becomes a source of unhappiness and mental discomfort, it is nevertheless desirable that it should have a place in the spiritual life, for it is a solemn fact that in some lives the great sins may not be those of word or deed, acts and speech alike being repressed by circumstances and surroundings, but sins of thought and imagination. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that many persons who frame their outward life and their conversation in accordance with the standard accepted by those with whom they are in daily association, give full rein to their fancies, forgetting Christ's terribly searching definition of sin. In these days, when there is so much all around us, and especially in our modern literature, calculated to develop the imagination in unhealthy directions, it is necessary that a close watch should be kept upon the workings of the mind. Let anyone who is troubled by the irruption of vain imaginings resolutely turn his thoughts in a higher and nobler direction, when there is a temptation to dwell upon low and ignoble things, and accompany this resolute action by a prayer like that of David under similar circumstances, and the lost control of the imagination will soon be recovered, the thoughts of the heart being cleansed by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

Much preventive work would be rendered unnecessary if more efforts were made in the direction of saving the children, and perhaps one of the foremost organisations with this object is that of the "Children's Aid and Refuge Fund." What a condition of things in our large cities is revealed by the fact that this Society alone rescued nearly three hundred children from infamous houses during the past year, and that it has been the means of sending nearly four thousand such little waifs to Industrial Homes. That hundreds upon hundreds of mere children are, in London and other large centres, living in houses frequented by abandoned women, is a sad reflection upon our civilisation, and it behoves Christian people to come to the rescue of those of whom Christ said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Often we have but scant sympathy for the hardened criminal, forgetting, as we do, that the training in vice and wrong-doing began in childhood, and that the career of sin was almost inevitable in such circumstances. If only every father and mother amongst our readers, in thanking God for the happy surroundings of their children, would think of the sad lot of the little ones in dens of infamy, with vice all round them, and a possible life of shame or crime before them, we do not doubt that help of a practical kind would be forthcoming, and that Miss Hopkins and Mr. Madison, who started the Fund to which we have referred, and who continue to superintend the expenditure of it, would be cheered and gladdened by an increase in public sympathy and practical assistance.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS,

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every Fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, Queen Victoria-st. (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

ORPHANAGE FUND.

THE SPEZIA MISSION FOR ITALY AND THE LEVANT.

At a meeting recently convened at the Bank of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., J. G. Barclay, Esq., in the chair, it was felt that, while the Spezia Mission for Italy was doing such excellent work in the country among the young and adult population, it was now most desirable that a Mission so signally blessed of God, which had entered on its 21st year of Christian labour, and which had gradually secured such hearty co-operation of Christians of various denominations, should now become more extensively known as an Agency largely adapted to be a blessing to the Italian people. It was also considered that—as the orphans Mr. Clarke took on himself the responsibility of supporting after the visitation of the cholera some two years since are not as yet able to enter the Home, because it is yet unfinished for lack of the requisite means—it is most important to make known this fact, and to urge the importance of soon raising the remaining sum of about £1,000 for the finishing the Home, the building the necessary School-rooms, and the furnishing of the same, &c.

The friends of the orphan, friends of Italy, and the friends of the necessitous, will rejoice to learn that in God's providence persons eminently fitted to superintend the Orphanage have been raised up to undertake this duty as soon as required.

Subscriptions towards this work of mercy will be thankfully received by
F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, City, London;
ELIOT HOWARD, Esq., J.P., Walthamstow, near London;
of whom also inquiries can be made respecting the work.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

Instituted 1772.

President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P.; S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C.; and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Seventeenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
YOUTH at BACUP (LANC.).

On the 29th of September last this case was brought under my notice by the father—Mr. Pickup, of Orchard Villas, Bacup.

Had been very delicate at the chest since an attack of measles when a little child. Cough now troublesome all through the day. Phlegm heavy, yellow, and much of it. Constant short breathing. Had gone thin all over (legs especially). Strength declining. Doctor had reported "lungs very bad," and that the "damp climate would kill him, and he must go South."

He did not go South, however, but commenced with my medicine and every auxiliary means ordered by me.

October 26th.—The father reports: "Very little cough, wheezing in the chest better, a little more flesh." "I took him (he says) to our own doctor, and he has pronounced him altogether changed for the better." And yet the weather (he says) has been unusually damp and cold.

In November: "My son continues to improve. He appears well, but I wish him to be entirely free from the least taint of disease."

December 8th.—"I am happy to say my son is now better than he has been for some years—stronger, livelier, and more flesh; in fact, he ails nothing at all."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

ETERNAL LIFE:
Where to Find it,
AND How to Obtain it.

By HERMANN LIEBSTEIN, Barrister-at-Law.

"Now what was true with reference to the ancient people is true with reference to us. What we need is just the same as that which they needed—life; and the fountain where alone we can find life now, is just the very same which nearly three thousand years ago was pointed out by Amos to Israel—Jehovah. And the way in which we may and can obtain life now, is none other than the old way—seeking Him who is its fountain."

THE CELEBRATED NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS.

COMFORT, EASE, AND PLEASURE FOR WEARY FEET.

The immense demand that there was for these Slippers (over 2,000 pairs being sold in a single day), and the fact that all through the summer we have daily received applications from persons in all parts asking if they can still have them, has induced us to again stock a very large quantity, which we are pleased to offer at our former low prices.

These Slippers are worn by rich and poor alike, because they are easy, comforting, cheap, and answer every purpose that a slipper can be required for. We have had letters of recommendation and repeated orders from all parts of the world.

These Slippers can be had in either black or scarlet. They are made of stout felt throughout, no nails or hard leather to injure the most sensitive feet. Trimmed with imitation fur. Worn in drawing-rooms, bedroom, boudoir, and street. Carriage free at the following prices: Boys', Girls', and Ladies' sizes, 1s. 6d. per pair. Gentlemen's, 1s. 9d. A reduction of 2d. per pair if three pairs are taken, or 4d. per pair on half-dozen. Exact length of foot or size taken must be sent with each order, and all orders should be sent at once, as we have a great difficulty in getting them later on.

Please mention the name of this Paper when ordering.

Professor Elmslie has recently said that the lesson contained in the story of Christ washing the disciples' feet is one "for good men and women," who, because they have set out on some great enterprise of goodness, are apt to think that they are exempt from "the little courtesies of lowlier service." To be faithful in great things, it is requisite that we should be faithful in the least, and, as Professor Elmslie puts it, when this is ignored, only too frequently there is failure due to the sacrifice not being complete, pride and self-assertion, and selfishness, lingering in the breast.

The following is taken from The Spectator, a strongly Liberal paper:—

> Mr. Beecher, in his lecture at Exeter Hall, on Monday, on "The Reign of the Common People," said he did not approve the conduct of the Nihilists of Russia, but "he could not help feeling that if he were surrounded by their circumstances, and goaded into rebellion by unjustly administered laws, he should certainly be a member of that community, for he was perfectly certain that the material he was made of was not suited to the composition of an abject slave." But were not the laws of the Roman Empire unjustly administered in St. Paul's time, and yet did he dream of vaunting that because he could not be a slave he must take part in conspiracies striking at the very source of all order?

Nothing nowadays can equal the utter failure of justice in Rome, and the despair of the people in Paul's time; yet he acted on the principle that to advance Christianity was to sow a seed which would be potent to overthrow all injustice and slaveries. To lose sight of this fact is to help on the Secularism which is now assailing Christianity, and often siding with anarchists from ignorance of it.

It is singularly interesting to note the remarkable success of mission work among the Mormons in Utah, and its neighbourhood. The opening of Mission Christian Schools has resulted in the growth of "a public sentiment in the midst of Mormonism strongly and intelligently adverse to it." Much may reasonably be hoped for from the nine hundred children at present attending the Mission Sunday-schools, and although we heartily sympathise with the United States Government, in the determination to prosecute the Mormon polygamists, it is not unlikely that in the end it will be found that the best weapon to wield against the vile organisation is the old-fashioned one of the Word of God.

Rev. S. Macfarlane, who has been twenty-eight years in New Guinea and the South Seas, and founding churches, institutions for training native teachers, and translating the Scriptures, has, since returning to England, been speaking on a subject which has a vital bearing on present ethnological questions. He says the natives of New Guinea have not come up out of original barbarism, but have clearly descended from an ancient civilisation. According to this distinguished missionary, the people of New Guinea came from the East, and out of a bygone enlightenment, and possess a language, in which are lingual traces of an Oriental superiority. Let such a testimony from an eminent observer be noted. It is the fashion of even Christian lecturers to affirm that the whole history of man has been a progress upward, and that all human development has proceeded from a low and savage condition. The witness of an observer is better than that of scores of mere book-readers.

Mr. Macfarlane is an agent of the London Missionary Society, and we observe in the Notes for August of this Society that missionaries from the East write thus: From Pekin, in China—"The work here continues to prosper. The chapel is quite full every Sunday, and we must soon enlarge it." Another writes of the same region: "So far as numbers are concerned, there is abundant reason for hopefulness, and Christianity is deepening as well as widening." A third writes from India concerning a missionary journey: "In all my tours during these five years I have not met with such success. One thousand daily have heard our message, and public opinion in India is marvellously changing towards Christianity." Let those who are crying, "Thy kingdom come," not fail to remember that ours is a prayer-hearing God.

The Record contains a full and very discriminating notice of the late Vicar of Islington. The memorial of Daniel Wilson is instructive and suggestive. Not a scholarly man, nor an eloquent preacher, and of naturally brusque manners, he, nevertheless, lived as the vicar of an important metropolitan parish for fifty-four years; saw that parish rise from 30,000 to 300,000 souls, and become one of wealth and weight; and came to be regarded as a pillar by a strong section of the clergy, and beloved by his neighbours, whatever their opinions. He beheld also, growing up on all sides, the evidences of fruitful Christian work, and church extensions, which he was known to have originated; and, under God, these results were owing, not to novelties, but to the profound attachment of a good, though not great man, to those evangelical truths which he held to be the teaching of Scripture, and of the Reformed Faith of the English Church.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE IN NEW ZEALAND.

Mr. William Noble's mission in Auckland was brought to a close on May 31, when a crowded meeting was held in the Theatre Royal. The following resolution was passed:—"This meeting being the last of a series of twenty-two of the Gospel Temperance Mission, conducted by Mr. W. Noble in the city of Auckland and its vicinity, we desire to express our sense of the distinguished ability, tact, and zeal with which he has conducted the mission; and also that, while he has in his advocacy been true to every phase of the Temperance cause, he has especially given prominence to Christian truth and the spirit of Christ. We pray that in his future career he may realise even richer blessings and more abundant success than in the past."

Mr. Noble was presented by the Gospel Temperance Mission with a handsome album of New Zealand scenery, bound in morocco leather, while the Women's Christian Temperance Union, having heard a great deal about the work of Mrs. Noble, presented her, through her husband, with an album of ferns.

On June 7 Mr. Noble commenced a series of lectures at Wellington, when he gave a powerful address in the Wesley Church, and continued the mission till June 17, when he delivered his farewell address; here also he received a similar gift.

Mr. Noble's next engagement was in Sydney, after which he proposed visiting Melbourne, returning to Auckland en route for America and England. Arrangements are being made for a three week's mission in Bradford, Yorkshire, after his return.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special services for seamen at Cardiff, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Dublin, and Cork, by Mr. Stephen Burrowes.——For repentance and restoration of parent and child.

Y.M.C.A.—Where to Draw the Line.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Mills, in his letter on the subject of the Y.M.C.A., in your last issue, has evidently overlooked the significant fact that the object of the Association is to benefit young men, spiritually, mentally, physically, and socially. Any branch which fails to attend to this fourfold work is crippled, one-sided, and, to a certain extent, impotent. To work successfully, we must deal with the whole man, providing spiritual enlightenment, intellectual improvement, recreative sports, and genial "home" attractions. Some good and earnest brethren are so intensely occupied with saving men's souls that they have no time to care for men's bodies. If we imitate Christ our methods will not be exclusively evangelistic, but we shall strive by every means in our power to build up a sound mind in a healthy body.

The Y.M.C.A. has so far failed to reach the young men of London, for in all its fifty branches there are not more than 9000 members and associates. All the Y.M.C.A. men in this great city could be comfortably seated in two theatres! The music halls influence more young men in one night than the Y.M.C.A. all the year round. Why this depressing state of affairs? The reason is that young men are not to be attracted by Gospel meetings and Bible-classes—good and useful as such agencies undoubtedly are. We must have gymnasia, educational classes, and athletic clubs, high class concerts, and bright social gatherings. It is a most dangerous and misleading sophism to suppose that the modes of work which were good enough forty years ago will be successful to-day. The world moves—shall Christian men stand still? Christians have plenty of prudence. What they want is a little more pluck. Instead of holding a weekly class in a back street, let us launch out into brave, enterprising effort for the salvation of the youth of this bewildering Babylon—let us provide large buildings and healthy recreations, taking care all the while that Christ's glorious evangel is declared with manliness and charity by men of deep thought and commanding ability.

Mr. Mills asks that committees should be composed of men whose sympathy is confined to the spiritual work. Surely he is wrong, for if the work of the Y.M.C.A. is fourfold, men who direct the affairs of the Association should be in full sympathy with all branches of its operations. Mr. Mills is afraid of worldliness, but without the slightest cause. We have greater reason to fear what George Eliot calls "other-worldliness," that spirit which would reduce our beloved Y.M.C.A. into an insignificant clique, a small mission, and calmly allow the devil to control, with unfettered power, the physical recreations and social pleasures of our young men! Yours faithfully,

An Exeter Hall Associate.

MAINE, U.S.—The Bank Examiner of Maine reports that the aggregate deposits now amount to $36,293,504, and that there has been an increase of $1,181,964 in the last six months. The opponents of prohibition—the brewers, distillers, and liquor-sellers—are fond of denouncing prohibition as ruinous to business prosperity. Most towns and states could do with such "ruin" as this.

THE DAILY PRAYER UNION.—A preaching tour in connection with this Union has lately been taken by the Rev. J. Worthington Aitkin, M.A. He gave addresses on the Holy Spirit at Worcester, York, Stafford, Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Nottingham, Worksop, and other places. This tour has been a means of blessing to many souls; God has honoured his Word preached in simplicity and faith. The Daily Prayer Union was established by the Rev. Henry Law Harkness, Rector of St. Swithin, Worcester. Its object is two-fold (1) to promote prayer for the Holy Spirit; (2) to make Him better known, loved, honoured and worshipped. Members promise (1) to pray daily for the gift of the Holy Spirit, or to be "filled with the Spirit"; (2) to pray on Sunday for all the members. A quarterly paper is issued, and has a circulation of 6500. There are 55,200 members at present, and the Union is still increasing. Further particulars may be obtained from the Rev. Henry Law Harkness, of Worcester.

A CHRISTIAN'S TESTIMONY.

A correspondent in Auckland sends us an account of an eruption of Mount Tarawera, at the Rotomahana Hot Springs, 150 miles from that place, which caused the death of six Europeans and about 100 Maories, and it is specially noteworthy for the calm composure and Christian fortitude exhibited by a young Englishman, Mr. Edwin Bainbridge, who met his death on that night. This young man only reached Auckland a fortnight previously, on a tour round the world. There he attended some Gospel meetings at the Sailors' Rest, where he met the Hon. Mr. Waldegrave, through whom he had received blessing about four years before at Cambridge.

The eruption commenced suddenly about midnight on June 9, and overwhelmed the village of Wairoa, ten miles distant from the volcano, with showers of mud and dust, which crushed the houses. A gentleman who was staying at the temperance boarding-house at Wairoa says he was awakened by a violent roaring, which continued for some time with a lull every four or five minutes. He listened for a little while, and then with two others went to see what he then knew was a volcanic eruption. They were soon forced to return, as the black cloud which covered the top of Tarawera was extending in their direction. Scoria and burning materials were falling from it, and lightning was flashing in every direction. Outside the house they met the other boarders, and they at once re-entered for shelter. The wind was shaking the house, and it began, as they thought, to rain, but they soon found that it was a rain of ashes and stones. About two tons of sand came through the roof, and clearing all before it lodged on a staircase within a yard of where they were gathered. Looking out, they saw a fire on the other side of the road, and a larger one at a house to their right. They could not render assistance, but stood between earthquake and fire, expecting death.

Mr. Bainbridge asked if any present would like to pray, and all consented. He then read the account of the salvation of the thief on the cross, and offered prayer. He spoke for a few minutes afterwards, and said this might be the last hour of their lives, and they might at once be ushered into God's presence; but He was able to save and deliver them in that extremity. If any of them were delivered, he hoped it would be a turning-point in their lives. Immediately afterwards, as the party were trying to get out of the house to reach a safer place, the verandah fell on him. In his writing portfolio a paper was found, evidently hastily folded and placed there, with the following words :—

Written by Edwin Bainbridge, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England.

> This is the most awful moment of my life. I cannot tell when I may be called upon to meet my God. I am thankful that I find his strength sufficient for me. We are under heavy falls of volcanoes——

He was interrupted at this point in what was doubtless intended to be a record of the catastrophe.

The funeral service was very solemn and impressive, while his testimony is the cause of much rejoicing to Christians, who are praying that it may be blessed to many souls. It is another striking example of the Lord's faithfulness. Our correspondent asks us to join with them in praise and prayer for the work which God is doing in their midst. Many doors are being opened for labour in the island.

THE SPA, BALLYNAHINCH.—A most successful series of evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. M'Kelvey and Mr. Fulton, two of the agents of the General Assembly's Committee on Evangelisation, has just concluded. Every night for three weeks these meetings have been carried on in the Spa school-room, and always with good attendance. There is reason to believe that much blessing was enjoyed, weak and doubting Christians being helped, while several profess that they have been led to decision for Christ.

"HE BEING DEAD YET SPEAKETH."

It is our painful duty to record the death of Mr. Wilkins, of Derby, known to so many of our readers as an active, devoted Christian worker. He was born in 1830, and his parentage on both sides were eminently God-fearing men and women, one of his ancestors being Rev. Dan Taylor, the founder of the General Baptist Denomination. He was early brought to know Jesus as his Saviour, though the natural pride of his heart caused a severe struggle ere it would yield to the power of the Holy Spirit. This one thought more than any other led to his entire consecration at seventeen years of age, namely, "If now I become a Christian, how much more time I shall have to work for Christ and lead others to Him, than if I delay." The step was taken, the decision made, and immediately it began to bear fruit. That day he wrote to his six special friends telling them that now he was on the Lord's side, and they must either make the same choice or give up his company. The result was that ere long they were all brought to Christ, and received into the church under the pastorate of the honoured and revered Rev. J. G. Pike (author of "Persuasives to Early Piety"), George Wilkins' father and grandfather being pillars in the same church.

Under the loving care of the Rev. W. R. Stevenson, then assistant minister with Mr. Pike, our young friend was speedily brought into Sunday-school work and village preaching, for which he manifested considerable talent, so that at nineteen he was on the preachers' plan, and in the succeeding years of his life, though actively pursuing his business for the support of his family, it was his great joy many thousands of times to proclaim the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. He was the first open-air preacher in Derby, and this at a time when such a novel departure from the ordinary methods of Christian work brought upon him sarcastic reproaches even from professing Christians.

The Young Men's Christian Association early enlisted his sympathies, and for several years he laboured assiduously as its honorary secretary. He was one of the first to help in the services held for the employés at the Derby station, and spoke to them many times when bodily exhaustion rendered the effort extremely painful.

In 1860 he started the first local penny weekly paper, which soon had the effect of bringing down the price of the other papers, which were then sold at 3d. Into this paper, for the seventeen years he was its editor, he endeavoured to infuse a Christian tone of feeling, and absolutely refused to publish sporting or similar news, which he conscientiously objected to, however largely he might be appealed to by monetary considerations.

While young he manifested considerable artistic talent, and in after years this was so much developed that his works were eagerly sought after for exhibition in most of our provincial towns, and were deemed worthy of a place in the Crystal and Albert Palaces, the Suffolk-street Gallery, and the Royal Academy, whilst among his purchasers may be mentioned Samuel Morley, M.P., and the Duke of Devonshire.

Mr. Wilkins was a most diligent Bible student, and from thence he drew that wisdom and strength which shone so conspicuously in him as an unswerving adherent to the cause of God and the right. He gladly hailed the revised versions both of the New and Old Testaments, and took great delight in reading, comparing, and marking the alterations. He could truly say, "Oh, how I love thy law: it is my meditation all the day."

But the great work of his life was the purchase of the old Theatre Royal in Derby, and turning it into a beautiful and commodious Gospel hall. This great undertaking he commenced almost single-handed, and by dint of almost unparalleled energy and perseverance he succeeded in gathering numbers of outcast wanderers into the fold of Christ, and had the joy of seeing the building quite free from debt, a freehold for the Lord for ever, having cost with alterations and interest over £2000, thus leaving a self-supporting community.

Mr. Wilkins, though a baptized believer, would only be known by the name of Christian, deploring the fact of the Church of Christ being split up into various denominations. Still he was second to none in brotherly love to all God's children. He suffered much in worldly matters from his adherence to principle; at one time a mansion was offered to him if he would give up unsectarianism; but he had grace given him to choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God.

The conduct of an evangelist whom he employed some ten years since, trusting it would be for the furtherance of the Gospel, was so sad and disastrous to the work so near his heart that it laid him on a bed of affliction for many weeks, and from this illness he never recovered fully, though to within a few hours of his death his ever-busy brain was thinking and planning schemes for the welfare of his dear people, being specially anxious that, if removed, his death might be made the spiritual life of many. He was carried to the Hall three times this year, and, though unable to stand, preached with great fervour; his text on the first Sunday in January being, "Behold, I come quickly;" on Feb. 7 a funeral sermon, "Within the vail;" and, on March 21, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity," &c., and exactly four months afterwards his glorified, emancipated spirit was made perfect in love.

From this time his strength gradually wasted, and he whose delight had been in labour had to suffer and be still. He knew in whom he had believed, and not a shadow of doubt or fear crossed his mind. He many times spoke of the firm foundation, Christ Jesus, on whom he rested, and even in delirium murmured such expressions as "More than conqueror through Him," and quietly and peacefully breathed his soul into the hands of his loving, faithful, covenant-keeping God on July 21.

The funeral took place on the following Sunday, and was attended by nearly a thousand sorrowing and bereaved friends, many of them being his spiritual children. The service was conducted entirely in the open-air at the grave, by Rev. W. F. Harris, Baptist minister, Derby, and Rev. W. R. Stevenson, brother-in-law of the deceased; and in accordance with a previous promise made to his father, his eldest son spoke at the grave side. This was a most earnest, powerful, and impassioned appeal, by the memory of his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, all of whom had been faithful servants of the Lord Jesus, and were all interred in the grave by the side of which he stood, to seek and to serve the same Saviour, and follow to the same happy home. He rests from his labours, but may others press forward to fill the gap; he has been transferred to higher, nobler service, but may his mantle fall on many more!

Mr. Wilkins, as a son, was loving and filial; as a brother, kind and careful; as a husband, most tender and true; as a father, both indulgent and wise; as a friend, faithful and considerate; as a citizen, large-hearted and benevolent; and as a pastor, watchful and sympathetic.

"Servant of God, well done,
  Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won—
  Enter thy Master's joy."

THE MARINE PALACE, MARGATE.—The evangelistic services at this very popular seaside resort were commenced on Sunday evening last, at eight o'clock, when a very large audience assembled. The singing was led by an excellent choir, composed principally of ladies, which occupied the whole of the stage, and the preachers were Rev. Talbot Hindley, M.A., Vicar of Holy Trinity, Margate, and Mr. J. H. Millard, Superintendent of St. Mary's Episcopal Sunday-schools, Reading, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the Reading Y.M.C.A. The earnest remarks of both preachers were listened to with breathless attention, and the whole service was evidently much appreciated. During this month the preacher will be Rev. C. H. Sturdy, Vicar of St. Paul's, Dorking, who will also conduct the Children's Service on the sands.

THE LORD'S WORK in the VILLAGES.

"He marvelled because of their unbelief, and He went round about the villages teaching."—Mark vi. 6.

"The common people heard Him gladly."—Mark xii. 37.

So it is still. While the masses in our cities are satisfied with the ten thousand voices of the world which seek to catch their ears, there are comparatively few who care to listen to the voice of wisdom which would win men from the paths of evil. How refreshing the contrast between the noise and din of the streets of our cities, and the quiet of the country village! Such we felt it to be a few days since, as we passed from village to village, to be present at the opening of a new iron room at Broadwindsor, Dorset, where the Lord had been blessing his Word to many souls.

Three years ago we pitched a tent in this place, where it remained seven weeks, midst storms and tempests, natural and spiritual. Yet, amidst all the opposition, the Gospel were constantly preached, and many souls were savingly converted, and were gathered into a small cottage, whose capacity was severely taxed by those who had received the Word of life, or were desirous of doing so. Now the cottage has proved too small for the numbers who wanted to hear, in simple and homely words, the way of life; and a neat iron room has taken its place. Friends from various parts kindly contributed to the cost, and many came together at the opening of the room. Two crowded meetings were held, and the Word ministered was felt to be in the Spirit, and with power, to all present. Among those who ministered the Word were Messrs. J. Stancombe, H. Bennett (Yeovil), W. Nobbs, G. Brealey (Clayhidon), E. Venn (Chard), through whose labours the room has been erected, W. N. Wills (Minsbury), and others.

A second iron room is shortly to be opened at West Coker, Somerset, as a blessed result of nine weeks' tent services last summer, when the Lord did a great work in several villages, so that there was a continual ingathering of souls. Such was the power of God in the place, that persons came several miles to the services, and were convicted of sin in some cases before the Gospel was preached. A large number have been added to the Lord, and "walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost," are being multiplied.

The whole district around these parts of Devon, Somerset, and Dorset, is ready for the Gospel. We have two tents in daily use, and several evangelists and helpers are going from village to village, and house to house, seeking the lost sheep. But we are greatly straitened in this work for want of means to meet necessary expenses of evangelists and helpers in the work. Thousands of books and tracts have been distributed in the villages among the militia, &c. We need fresh and additional help to continue this work, and any assistance towards sustaining it will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the writer, Mr. George Brealey, Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset, or by Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

MISSION WORK AT CAPE TOWN.—At the Lecture-hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, at noon on Tuesday, the gathering assembled in connection with the day's prayer-meeting had before them the question of Cape Town and some of its needs. Mr. M. H. Hodder occupied the chair. Amongst those present was Mrs. Osborne, who has spent several years in missionary labours amongst the soldiers, sailors, and others in our South African colony. At the opening of the proceedings it was announced by the Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association (Mr. Robert Burn) that Mr. Hannington, brother of the late Bishop Hannington, who was murdered while in pursuit of his missionary labours, and Mr. Henry Varley, were shortly about to embark for the Cape, where they purpose prosecuting a season of Christian work. Mrs. Osborne gave an address, in which, from a religious though non-sectarian point of view, she dwelt on the needs of South Africa.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Press generally congratulates Parliament on the return of Sir Wilfrid Lawson.

At Trinidad, the magistrates have power to close the public-houses during elections.

It is said that at Bermuda the strongest opponents of temperance work are Government officers.

Mr. T. W. Russell, the noted Irish temperance advocate, has been elected M.P. for South Tyrone.

The Lancet, in an article on "Thirst, and Drinking in Hot Weather," says there is no drink so good as "pure water."

The Natal Alliance intends to seek the enforcement of the Prohibiting Law in regard to natives, said to be at present a dead letter.

At Edinburgh, for several weeks past, open-air temperance meetings have been held all over the city, and with encouraging results.

In Lower Canada an habitual drunkard may, on sufficient evidence, be compulsorily placed in a Retreat, or under strict surveillance.

In connection with the Church of England Temperance Society's Sick and Burial Society, nineteen new lodges have been opened this year.

The Women's Temperance Union recently gave a temperance tea-meeting to "showmen" at Glasgow. About thirty signed the pledge.

The British Medical Journal says the general tone of the mass of medical students is yearly improving, owing largely to the spread of temperance.

A Paris journal learns that M. Paul Bert, since his arrival in Tonquin, has removed the interdict on the importation of absinthe into the colony.

The Chinese, one of the most temperate nations in the world, are taking to alcohol, and even in the interior shops the sale of intoxicants is common.

Mr. Williams, M.P., states that "if the cursed drink places could be abolished," there would be little reason for preferring foreign seamen to English.

A Mahomedan, referring to the encouragement to the drink traffic under British rule says, with all their faults the Kings of Oude never drew revenue from "Shamewater."

Mr. Thomas Hardy has been delivering temperance addresses in the Town Hall Square, Bolton. For a week he had audiences of about one thousand each night, chiefly men.

The Bishop of Durham presided at a mass meeting of the Church Army at Sunderland, when 3500 persons were present. Amongst the converts were many formerly notorious drunkards.

The Board of Management of the London Temperance Hospital gave a breakfast to a large party of Colonials at which interesting addresses from the medical standpoint were delivered.

"The Mountain Stream" is the title of the sixth annual report of the Highland Temperance League, which shows that the year now closed does not present so satisfactory a retrospect as some of those that have preceded it; but the popular interest in the principles of total abstinence is undoubtedly increasing with rapid strides throughout the Highlands.

Speaking at the Wesleyan Conference, Rev. John Walton, just returned from South Africa, described free trade in brandy as "the arch-enemy of the Kaffir, and of the human race." He said it was largely owing to the action of the Privileges Committee of the African Wesleyan Conference that the sting of the Liquor Proclamation in the Transvaal was rescinded.

GOSPEL WORK IN HOUNSLOW.—Rev. Henry Layton, Vicar of St. Stephen's, Hounslow, hopes that before sending contributions to the work under this title in our issue of July 22, friends will communicate with the Secretary of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association, 56, Haymarket.

CHRISTIANITY IN EGYPT.—On July 23 a meeting of the Association for the Furtherance of Christianity in Egypt was held in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster Abbey, to receive the report of the work at the Gordon College, Cairo. The chair was taken by Archdeacon Harrison. Rev. R. Milburn Blakiston (the secretary) read the report, which stated that in February, 1883, a meeting took place in the Jerusalem Chamber, and a provisional committee was formed to take steps to advance the revival and extension of true religion in Egypt. In 1884, Mr. Few and the Hon. Secretary (Rev. R. M. Blakiston) had an interview with the two envoys of Abyssinia, who said that if the Association should send representatives to the Church of Abyssinia the envoys would promise a very warm and friendly welcome. Towards the close of the year, in order to further the friendly relations opened between the authorities of the Orthodox Greek Church and the Coptic Church in Egypt, the committee decided that the offer of Rev. G. Greenwood to go and carry on the work should be accepted, and Mr. Greenwood proceeded to Egypt in December, carrying with him letters from the Archbishop of Canterbury. On his return in 1885, he advocated the establishment of a school in Cairo for the education of the youth of the higher classes, and on May 15, 1885, a meeting was held, the Bishop of Carlisle presiding.

INTOLERANCE IN IRELAND.

A daughter of the late General Brown-Clayton, Mrs. Daubeney, recently presented a drinking-fountain to New Ross, as a memorial to her father and mother. At the base was the inscription, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink." The design was previously approved by the Town Commissioners, who, at the opening ceremony, preceded by the National Band, marched through the streets, and the chairman read a letter from Mrs. Daubeney formally presenting the fountain to the town. The Nationalist print, which reports the proceedings, states that the reading of the letter was interrupted by bursts of applause. In the Commissioners' reply, read by the chairman, Mrs. Daubeney is gratefully thanked for her generosity and "the very nice sentiments" of her address. His remarks were followed by a "volley of applause, which showed that it expressed the sentiments of the assembly." When sending the fountain, the donor accompanied it with a box containing 600 copies of the Gospel of St. John, which was left at the Commissioners' office for the people ot take, a privilege of which they availed themselves, only about 60 copies being left. Suddenly the chairman, without consulting his colleagues, returned the remainder with a curt note. This led the Commissioners to pass a resolution, informing Mrs. Daubeny that his action was not authorised or approved by them.

On the following Sunday the parish priest and his curates commenced a bitter attack on the five Roman Catholic Commissioners for this, and the Y.M. Catholic Association also unanimously condemned them for "receiving and distributing the Protestant tracts and Gospels" (no tracts were received), and approved the action of the chairman in "sending back to its polluted source the remnant of the poisonous stuff!" Such terrible pressure was brought to bear upon these five unfortunate men that they published an apology, and the Commissioners then agreed to erase the text, "as it is calculated to hurt Catholic feeling." It was subsequently suggested to replace the harp which ornamented the fountain by a statue of the Virgin Mary, as "the text would then be applicable, and the difficulty removed."

Straws indicate which way the stream flows; and this insulting outburst of bigotry and intolerance against a public benefactor, and interference with the members of a public body in the discharge of their duties, show what we may expect if the Roman Catholic hierarchy should ever have the power to renew the persecution of the Church with which its name is inseparably connected. The priests are certainly right, from their point of view, in hindering and preventing the circulation of such "poisonous stuff" as the Gospels, but it behoves all Christians to be the more active in scattering them broadcast in benighted Ireland.

GOSPEL WORK IN WALES.—Among other centres of Christian usefulness in Wales may be mentioned the town of Brecon. From its position as the county town, the markets and fairs are attended by many who live in the most sequestered spots, "among our ancient mountains and in our lovely vales." For many months past, however, the markets have been regularly visited each week, and an English or Welsh tract or Christian periodical given to nearly everyone present. Only those who know how scarce attractive Christian literature is in the lonely farm-houses, can conceive of the gratitude displayed by the recipients. Brecon being also a depôt-centre, a large number of recruits fresh from their homes are constantly joining older comrades at the barracks. These and the sufferers in the hospital most thankfully welcome Christian literature. Open-air work in connection with the Association Mission-room is carried on throughout the year, and in connection with this and the visitation of the homes, tracts are distributed. To carry on this work and other evangelistic efforts, a large number of tracts, booklets and Christian periodicals are needed each week, and any number, large or small, would be most thankfully received by the Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

The Book World.

A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ. By Emil Schurer, D.D., M.A., Professor of Theology at the University of Giessen, being a second and revised edition of a "Manual of the History of New Testament Times," Second Division. The internal condition of Palestine, and of the Jewish people, in the time of Jesus Christ. Translated by Sophia Taylor and Rev. Peter Christie. Vol. III. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.

Some months back we gave a brief notice of the former two volumes. This is a book for the classes and not for the masses. The former half discusses the probable origin and use of the Palestinian-Jewish literature in the time of our Lord, preserved to us in histories, legends, &c., as the Books of the Maccabees, Josephus, Judith, Tobit, Enoch, Jubilees, and others, all tending to set forth God's especial love to the Jews, to discourage disloyalty, and to encourage obedience to the Mosaic law. The second half of the book discusses Græco-Jewish literature, showing the nature and extent of the influence of the Greek language and literature upon the Jews immediately before and after the appearance of our Lord. To the mere scholar there is much that is interesting and instructive, apart from pages of foot-notes and authorities. To the devout Christian there is little to repay the time taken in reading it. To those concerned for the honour of God's Word, conscience requires us to say, there is something in the book to give pain. Daniel is placed by the author at the head of the list of Pseudepigraphic Prophecies, followed by the Book of Enoch, the Assumptio Mosis, the Apocalypse of Baruch, &c.; and of Daniel the author says, "The book is the direct product of the Maccabean struggles." (The italics are the author's.) He even fixes its date as written between 167 and 165 B.C., and openly declares that in no part of the book does the horizon of the author ever stretch beyond the time of the Maccabees, not even in the visions of the four monarchies (chap. ii. and vii). In offering an exposition of ix. 24—27, "Yiccareth Mashiach, Messiah," or, An anointed one, "shall be cut off," the author says Onias III., who was murdered 171 B.C., is probably meant. On this principle he finds himself seventy years out of count, and cuts the knot by attributing mistake to Daniel. He says, "Consequently the author has miscalculated to the extent of seventy years." It is the author of this book, and not the author of the Book of Daniel, who has miscalculated. Surely it goes for something that Ezekiel, who prophesied in the time of the Babylonish captivity, definitely mentions Daniel by name. The book is scholarly, interesting, instructive, and mischievous.

The Work of the Holy Spirit. by Professor Candlish, D.D.; and The Sum of Saving Knowledge, by Rev. John Macpherson, M.A. 1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark. Two handbooks for Bible-classes, &c., edited by Marcus Dods and Alexander Whyte. Each of these is a theological multum in parvo. The first deals with the Holy Spirit's work in every stage of man's history, from the earliest to the latest; in every relation He sustains and every office He fills towards Christ and his Church, as well as in his wider working among mankind. The student of religious truth will find here a treatise at once clear, careful and complete; the result, evidently, of competent scholarship, and prepared in full view of other high-class contemporary literature on the same important subject. The second, "The Sum of Saving Knowledge," is a valuable book, founded on one of the subordinate standards of the Church of Scotland. Through the heights and depths of that rare compendium of Christian doctrine, the student will find in Mr. Macpherson an excellent guide and expounder, who exhibits the profound subjects discussed in a form well adapted to the present age. The reader, be he lay or clerical, will discover here, in a small compass, much erudite learning and helpful suggestion.

The Diminution of Crime is the title of an attractive little brochure, by "Pearl Fisher." Published by the St. Giles' Christian Mission.

Rev. A. N. Somerville's Addresses on The Evangelisation of the World, recently delivered at the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, and published in our columns, are now published in pamphlet form by Messrs. David Bryce & Son, Glasgow.

The Curse of Cruelty: a Sermon preached in York Minster on Sunday evening, May 9, by Rev. F. O. Morris. 1d. Elliot Stock. Devoted partly to confuting Darwinism, and partly to discouraging vivisection and "sports" involving needless cruelty to the dumb creation.

We have received the following books:—

From Jarrold & Sons: Twilight Verses (1s. 6d.).

From James Blackwood & Co.: Bound by Fetters.

From T. Woolmer: The New Headmaster (1s. 6d.)

From Seeley & Co.: The Christian's Own Calendar.

From S. W. Partridge & Co.: Wanderings Eastward (2s.).

From J. Kensit: The Queen's Book, and other Poems (1s.).

From J. W. Arrowsmith, 11, Quay-street, Bristol: A Service of Suffering.

From Messrs. H. C. Nisbet & Co.: Sieon Holmes. By Rev. Jackson Wray.

From S.P.C.K.: Handy Guide to Emigration (3d.)—The Gospel of Suffering.

From Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange: Income Tax—How to get it Refunded (1s.).

From T. Fisher Unwin: Stops; or, How to Punctuate (1s.). The Last Stake, a Tale of Monaco.

From Wyman & Sons, 75, Great Queen-street: Partiality in Unity; or, A View of the Universe.—A Visit to Victoria.

From Elliot Stock: The Finished Offering of Christ (6d.)—The Comfortable Words (1s.)—Our Forefathers in the Dark Ages (3s.).

PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.

From S. W. Partridge & Co.: What think ye of Christ? (6d.).

From Wileman, 34, Bouverie-street: Christ here! Christ there! (1d.).

From Elliot Stock: The late Right Hon. Henry Fawcett, M.P. (6d.).

From Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row: The Short Liturgy (1d.), Absolution (1d.), The Broken Mast (2d.), The Almond Blossoms (2d.).

From Kensit, Paternoster-row: Trust in the Living Father (1d.), Can I know certainly that I am Saved? and How? (1d.), The Doctrine of Justification, Scenes from the Irish rebellion of 1798 (2d.), The Times of the Stuarts (2d.)

MONTHLY MAGAZINES.

Our Boys' Magazine (Schoolboys' Scripture Union). The first number of a little monthly has just been published in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. It is intended primarily for the members of the Schoolboys' Scripture Union, and gives a large amount of space to notes on the readings for the month. There is a great need for a good magazine for boys, and we hope this new venture will supply the want.

We have received the first two numbers of The Medical Missionary Record, Edited by George D. Dowkontt, M.D., Superintendent of the N. Y. Med. Miss. Soc. (118, E. 45th-street, New York). The object of this paper is "to seek to obtain men, women, and means to relieve physical suffering and spread the Gospel both at home and among the heathen," and so far it bids fair to fulfil this object. It gives every month a portrait and sketch of some devoted Medical Missionary. The first number (May) contains a portrait of the late Prof. Alfred C. Post, one of the pioneers of this Society, who died last February, aged eighty; it also gives a list of medical missionaries throughout the world. The second number (June) gives a portrait of the late Rev. John Scudder and wife, and an article on "The Privileges of a Christian Physician." It is full of useful information and intelligence from all parts, and contains hints, reports, &c., on the forming, working, and history of Medical Missions.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.—The Peoples of the World has now reached its sixtieth monthly issue, which completes the six volumes of the work, and contains complete index and title-page. We can only repeat an oft-expressed opinion as to the usefulness, interest, and instruction which accompany so valuable a work, and all who are so fortunate as to possess all the parts should lose no time in having them bound in permanent form, which would make a noble addition to a library shelf. Cloth cases are supplied at 2s. each vol. In The Quiver, Rev. Dr. Trestrail has lent his aid to the British workman by advocating the sanctity of the Sabbath. The article is racy, lively, and forcible. There is also a simple, touching little poem by George Weatherley, entitled "The Unknown Martyr." In The Life and Words of Christ (7d.), Professor Geikie continues to throw valuable side-lights upon the sacred record, which cannot but delight every Bible student who reads it. The Family Physician (6d.) gives some hints as to the treatment for sunstroke, which may prove useful at this season. The lily and forget-me-not form the graceful themes of Familiar Garden Flowers (6d.) The sad interest which one always feels in perusing The History of Protestantism is by no means diminished in the present number (7d.), as we follow George Wishart to the stake. But ere we part from him we are introduced to John Knox, of whom we have a concise but suggestive life-sketch.

We have also received the following:—

Messrs. Isbister & Co.: Good Words, Sunday Magazine.

Messrs. Swan, Sonnenschein & Co.: Contemporary Pulpit, Eastward Ho!

"Home Words" Office: Home Words, Day of Days, Fireside, Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.: Magazine of Art, Gleanings from Popular Authors, Countries of the World, Ellicott's Old Testament Commentary, Encyclopædia Dictionary.

Religious Tract Society: Boy's Own Paper, Girl's Own Paper, Sunday at Home, Leisure Hour, Cottager and Artisan, Tract Magazine, Child's Companion, Friendly Greetings.

Messrs. Partridge & Co.: Welcome, Friendly Visitor, Family Friend, Infants' Magazine, Children's Friend, Band of Hope Review, British Workman, Our Own Gazette, Illustrated Missionary News.

Miscellaneous.—Expositor, Female Missionary Intelligencer, Sunday Talk, Old Jonathan, Monthly Interpreter, Christian Worker, Church of England Scripture Readers' Journal, Jewish Intelligence, Night and Day, Jewish Herald, House of Rest Monthly, Young England, Child's Own Magazine, Sentinel, Echoes from Paris, Jewish Intelligencer, Church Missionary Gleaner, Juvenile Instructor, Intelligencer and Record, Life Boat Journal, Evangelist, Believer's Pathway, After Work, Gleanings for the Young, Monthly Reporter of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Letter to the Editor.

THE SABBATH FOR POSTMEN.

Sir,—My attention having been called to a suggestion from one of your subscribers in The Christian of the 22nd instant, it may prevent misapprehension if I explain that a similar proposal has frequently been made, but that the department has no power to comply with such a request on the part of the sender of a letter, &c. Any application of the kind must come from the addressee (to whom, and not to the sender, a letter, after being posted, belongs); and the only means by which letters intended for a person residing within a Sunday delivery, can be retained at the post office till Monday, is for such person to make written application to the Postmaster that all letters addressed to him may be so kept back over the Sunday.

The rule on the subject is shown at page 25 of the Post Office Guide.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, S. A. Blackwood, Secretary.

General Post Office, London.

Mission and other Appeals.

Southsea Mission.—The workers of this Mission have purchased a piece of land for the erection of a hall, toward which about £350 has been received. Services are now held every Sunday evening in a tent on Southsea Common, but will have to be discontinued shortly for want of a suitable building to carry on the work. Donations or subscriptions may be sent to Jno. Denning, Ebenezer Cottage, Inglis-road, Southsea.

East London Tract Society and Christian Mission.—Another hall in connection with the above Mission was opened on Tuesday week in High-street, Poplar, when a crowded meeting of workers and others was held. The hall is situated near the docks and railway warehouses, in a much needed district. We should be pleased if any of your readers could help by a few chairs and a harmonium, which we are in sore need of.—Geo. Fuller, Superintendent, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, E.

THEATRICAL CHILDREN.—Nearly a hundred and fifty of these little caterers to the public amusement enjoyed a hearty repast of new milk, bread and butter, and fruit, at Macready House, Covent-garden, on July 13. This was followed by an address, which was most attentively listened to, and the singing of the children was exceedingly good. Some of the most delicate were afterwards chosen for a Rest at Lowestoft, where early in August, the Directors, Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd, intend holding daily services for them on the beach, thus refreshing mind and body. Friends interested in the Mission, and the welfare of the little ones, are invited to commuicate with Mr. Courthope Todd, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

AN AGED PILGRIMS' TEA PARTY.—On July 16 an interesting meeting took place in the Hall of the Aged Pilgrims' Asylum, Hornsey Rise, being the thirteenth annual re-union of this, and the kindred Homes at Camberwell and Stamford Hill. The ladies' committee had prepared refreshments for the aged guests, who, after partaking of the good things supplied, dispersed over the grounds. At 5 o'clock 138 pilgrims, ranging from 66 to nearly 90 years of age, sat down to tea. The chair was taken at 6.30 by Wm. Heathfield, Esq., senior treasurer of the Society, who gave a hearty welcome to the friends assembled. Mr. Jackson stated that several valued friends were unable to be present, and expressed an earnest hope that these gatherings may be repeated for many years to come. Kind and sympathetic addresses were given by Rev. George Plaford, J. Vaughan, and William Sinden, also by Samuel Sharp, Esq., and Mr. B. H. Nunn, of Brighton. The meeting terminated with singing and prayer. Christian friends interested in this work can visit these several Homes upon any week-day. The offices of the Society are at 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 8.—I KINGS VI.

7.—Built of stone made ready before it was brought. —Concerning the stones of the altar it was said (Deut. xxvii. 5), "Thou shalt not lift up any iron tool upon them." It was in the spirit of this command that the entire Temple was built. Here are delightful suggestions of things spiritual. The temple of God—the glorified Church—grows today as the Temple of Solomon grew then,—silently, perfectly, and with no cutting or hammering. As the hewing, squaring, and fitting were then done in the distant quarry or workshop, so now human hearts are hewn from the world's quarry, squared and chastened (Heb. xii. 6) by many and strange tools under the direction of the great Builder, until each is exactly fitted for his appointed place in the heavenly temple. Earth is the quarry, full of dust, and bustle, and clangour of preparation: afterwards, in heaven, will be seen "the perfect beauty of the palace of the King." We admire the wonderful skill that could plan beforehand the exact shape and position of every stone. How much more should we admire the wisdom which has appointed a separate niche for each several member of Christ's Church—a niche which no other can fill—and which, by a strange variety of instruments and methods, is shaping each for his own place in God's house on high. This reflection teaches submission and trust. Only the Architect knows how to perfect each separate stone, and it ill becomes the stone to quarrel with his ways.

12.—Concerning this house, &c.—"The meaning is, 'so far as this house goes, thou art obedient (2 Sam. vii. 13; 1 Chron. xvii. 12, &c.); if thou wilt be obedient in other things also, then I will perform my word,' &c.; God's promises being always conditional."—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, AUGUST 9.—I KINGS VII.

2—8.—He built also, &c.—"The collective buildings mentioned in verses 2—8 formed only the one royal palace, the several departments of which are described in succession."—Keil and Delitzsch. "Perhaps it is best to consider the 'house' of verse 1 as the palace proper—Solomon's own dwelling-house (8); the house of the forest of Lebanon, with its porches, as the state apartments; and the house for Pharaoh's daughter as the harem or zenana; and to regard these three groups of buildings as distinct, though interconnected, and as together constituting what is elsewhere termed 'the King's house' (1 Kings ix. 10).—Sp. Com. The house of the forest of Lebanon.—"This name was probably given from the supposed resemblance of the mass of cedar pillars, which was its main feature, to the Lebanon cedar forest."—Ibid. Cubit = 18 inches.

21.—Jachin and Boaz.—"These pillars were set up by themselves before the portico. That they had a symbolic meaning, the names applied to them prove: JACHIN—He will establish; BOAZ—In Him (or it) is strength."—Keil. "The meaning was probably, 'God will establish in strength the Temple and the religion connected with it.'"—Sp. Com.

23—39.—Note the enormous provision made for ceremonial washings, and the prominence given to this provision in the account before us. Does not this give weighty emphasis to the injunction, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord"? This chapter thus speaks to us continually of our liability to sin, and of the holy requirements of God's service.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 10.—I KINGS VIII.

The Dedication of the Temple.—"This solemn transaction falls into three acts, according to which the chapter is divided into three sections: (1) The removal of the ark, and the other furniture of the old sanctuary, 1—21; (2) The prayer of Solomon, 22—61; (3) The act of offering, 62—66."—Keil and Delitzsch.

2.—The feast in the month Ethanim.—"This was the feast of tabernacles, or ingathering; at once a commemoration of the dwelling in booths at the time of the Exodus, and a festival of thanksgiving on account of the completion of harvest."—Sp. Com.

10, 11.—The cloud filled, &c.—"The Lord was constantly present in the Temple, but the visible sign of his presence was only exhibited at the dedication, as a manifest proof that the name of the Lord had taken up his residence here, and afterwards only when the high priest entered into the holiest." —Keil and Delitzsch.

The antitype of the Temple is primarily Jesus Christ, in whom God meets us in peace. When we worship God in spiritual connection with Christ, we worship in his temple. But secondarily, the antitype is (1) the individual believer's heart, and (2) the entire Church of Christ. The coming of the cloud seems to prefigure the baptism of the Spirit.

22—53.—Solomon's Prayer.—"If the Prayer of Solomon be, as it has all the appearance of being, a genuine document of the time, preserved in the archives, to which the authors of both Kings and Chronicles had access, all theories of the late origin of Deuteronomy must be regarded as baseless. While references are not infrequent to other portions of the Pentateuch, the language of the prayer is mainly modelled on Deuteronomy, the promises and threats contained in which are continually before the mind of the writer."—Sp. Com. From the fact that Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xx. 7—9) pleaded this prayer as though it were substantially a promise, we may infer that it was inspired. If so, it is equivalent to a promise, and all needy souls who find their case therein described have only to stand in Christ, the true Temple, and plead their case in faith.

53.—Thou didst separate them from, &c.—A solemn threefold statement respecting God's people: (1) They are separated from the world; (2) Separated unto Him; (3) They are peculiarly precious to Him—"his inheritance' (Deut. xxxii. 9).

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 11.—I KINGS IX.

1.—And the king's house, &c.—This verse must be taken as a general introduction to the whole of the chapter that follows, otherwise the answer to Solomon's prayer will be understood as coming thirteen years after that prayer, seeing that it took thirteen years from the dedication of the Temple to finish his palace. This, however, would be absurd. The style of God's reply obliges us to suppose that it followed immediately upon the prayer.

6.—Shall at all turn.—Rather "shall wholly turn." A complete backsliding was necessary to their rejection.

7.—A proverb and a byword, &c.—"The exact words of Deut. xxviii. 37 are here repeated."

8.—This house, which is high, &c.—"The Hebrew text runs: 'And this house shall be high.' The meaning appears to be: 'This house shall be high, i.e., conspicuous, in its ruin as in its glory.'"—Sp. Com. So is it ever. Great privilege abused involves great degradation. The more of God's favour bestowed, the deeper the shame of him who despises that favour. By this very law our Lord judges (see Luke x. 13—15). This reflection is a solemn one to us to whom is given the wonderful privileges of this Gospel dispensation. "He that knew his lord's will, and did it not," &c.

11.—King Solomon gave, &c.—"By the spirit, if not by the letter, of the law Solomon had no right to give away these cities, or any part of the inheritance of Israel (see Lev. xxv. 13—34). But the exigencies of a worldly policy caused the requirements of the law to be set aside."—Sp. Com.

28.—Ophir.—Probably India or Arabia.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 12.—I KINGS X.

The Visit of the Queen.—She came from a vast distance, probably Ethiopia or Arabia, at an enormous cost, and at a great risk. She came, too, with most precious gifts. Her knowledge of Solomon was imperfect and uncertain. The half had not been told her, and much even of that she could not credit. Still she came from so great a distance, and at so great a cost, "to hear the wisdom of Solomon." What weight all this gives to our Lord's rebuke: "The Queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it," &c. (Matt. xii. 42).

2.—She communed with him, &c.—Beautiful illustration of what a true coming to Jesus implies! Then it was that "Solomon told her all her questions." We are reminded, as we read, of another woman who, speaking 1000 years later of Him with whom she had just been conversing, said: "Come, see a man which told me all things that ever I did."

4, 5.—And when the Queen of Sheba had seen, . . . there was no more spirit in her.—Nothing humbles so truly as seeing Jesus, and hearing Him as He talks with us, and we with Him. To see Him, hear and know Him, is the only royal road to holiness.

7.—Howbeit, I believed not, &c.—To outsiders, the praises of Jesus often seem unreal or extravagant. But when they find Him for themselves, their cry is sure to be, "The half was not told me." The best of it is, that this surprise will go on and on to all eternity. There will be no end to these glad and unexpected discoveries of his grace.

10.—And she gave the king, &c.—The gold alone is valued at £720,000, on the lower estimate, and at £1,250,000, on the higher one. Her present, as a whole, must have been of enormous value. Note the connection between her admiration of the king and these rich gifts. Those who know and admire Jesus, must give of their best. To grudge what we give to Him, is to confess that we know Him but little.

Almug.—Probably sandal-wood.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 13.—I KINGS XI.

1—8.—Strange wives and false gods.—"If there be on earth one sight more sorrowful than that of wisdom become foolishness — or, rather, suffering foolishness to be victorious—it is that of the fall of an old man whose youth had been promising, and whose manhood beautiful and glorious. Yet this was the case of Solomon. . . . Let it teach us not to rely too implicitly upon any past attainments or present convictions. Let us never think that the time of danger to our souls is past; when we are strongest it is best to be weak in ourselves; and when at our weakest, strong in Him, in whom we can do all things."—Kitto. There is this to be said for Solomon, in multiplying his wives, that "in the East, the extent of a man's harem rises with his rank; and usually the King considers it a sort of duty, a piece of necessary state, to have most of all—more than any of his subjects can afford to maintain."

14.—The Lord stirred up an adversary, &c.—"The writer has reserved for this place the various troubles of Solomon's reign, not allowing them to interrupt his previous narrative of the general glory and prosperity of Israel under this king. He has, consequently, not followed chronological order. Hadad's return to Edom, and Rezon's occupation of Damascus, belong to the early years of Solomon's reign."—Sp. Com.

32.—He shall have one tribe.—"Little Benjamin was looked upon as absorbed in Judah, so as not to be really a tribe in the same sense as the others."—Sp Com.

40.—Solomon sought therefore to kill Jeroboam.—"It would appear from this passage, combined with ver. 26, that the announcement of Ahijah was followed within a little while by something like overt acts of rebellion on the part of Jeroboam."—Sp. Com. For such conduct there was no excuse. The same word that assured him of his future reign over the ten tribes assured him also of the continuance of Solomon's power so long as he lived.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14.—I KINGS XII.

1.—Rehoboam.—"Only one son of Solomon appears in history, and it is generally supposed that he had no other. On this Hall quaintly observes: 'Many a poor man hath an housefull of children by one wife; whereas, this great king hath only one son by many housefulls of wives.' And this one was, as Ness remarks, 'none of the wisest, but a silly child when at the age of forty years.'"—Kitto.

4.—Thy father made our yoke grievous.—"The complaint was probably twofold. The Israelites, no doubt, complained in part of the heavy weight of taxation laid upon them for the maintenance of the monarch and his court; but their chief grievance was the forced labour to which they had been subjected."—Sp. Com.

13—15.—And the King answered the people roughly. —"The almost insane fatuity of the man who could expect any good effect from an answer like this to an aggrieved and exasperated people can scarcely be explained but in the interpretation that the king was subjected to judicial blindness—that wisdom and common sense had been withheld from him, in order that the doom which had already gone forth against the house of David might be accomplished." —Kitto. The cause was from the Lord. Here is another of those glimpses of the ways of God's government of men, which are so characteristic of Scripture. He who maketh the wrath of man to praise Him, maketh a servant of human folly also.

28.—The King . . . made two calves of gold.—"It is probable that these calves of gold were representations of the cherubic form—imitations, more or less close, of the two cherubim which guarded the Ark of the Covenant in the Holy of Holies. As, however, they were unauthorised copies, set up in places which God had not chosen, and without any Divine sanction, the sacred writers call them 'calves.'"—Sp. Com.

33.—The month which he had devised of his own heart.—"The entire system of Jeroboam receives its condemnation in these words. His main fault was that he left a ritual and a worship where all was divinely authorised, for ceremonies and services which were wholly of his own devising. He was placed in difficult circumstances, but he met them with the arts of a politician, not with the single-mindedness of a saint."—Sp. Com. Does not this quotation expose the root of modern Ritualism? Its ceremonies may well be described as ways which men have devised of their own heart.

Forthcoming Meetings.

BELGIUM Y.M.C.A.—This Association, consisting of fourteen sections, celebrated its anniversary last June, when Pastor Pointet, of Charleroi, the "old veteran," spoke words of cheer and encouragement to the "young guards," whom he exhorted not to be content with self-edification only, but to be ready to take service wherever the Church of God needed them.—Le Chrétien Belge.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Orphan and Destitute Children."

Opening of the New Infants' Home,

HAWKHURST, "BABIES' CASTLE," KENT.

H.R.H. PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE (Duchess of Teck)

HAS MOST KINDLY NAMED

MONDAY, AUGUST 9, (D.V.)

For the opening of this new Branch for the reception of Infant Children.

Purses containing not less than £10 towards the funds of "BABIES' CASTLE" may be presented to Her Roya Highness on the occasion.

Ladies or children desiring to offer such gifts are invited to communicate with Dr. Barnardo at once, who will forward empty purses to be filled.

A Special Train will (D.V.) leave Charing Cross on Monday, the 9th August, to convey Visitors to "BABIES' CASTLE." The times of departure of this Train are as follows:—

It will leave Charing Cross	at 1.10 p.m.	arriving at Etchingham at 2.52 p.m.	It will leave Chislehurst	at 1.41 p.m.
,, ,, Cannon-street	,, 1.18 ,,		,, ,, Sevenoaks	,, 2.0 ,,
,, ,, London Bridge	,, 1.22 ,,		,, ,, Tunbridge Wells	,, 2.23 ,,

The return train will leave Etchingham at 7.0 p.m.

At Etchingham, passengers by this train holding Special Tickets, will be met by Carriages to convey the whole party to the pretty little country village of Hawkhurst, six miles distant, where "BABIES' CASTLE" stands.

By an arrangement with the Railway Companies, and with Carriage Proprietors, fares have been fixed at the lowest possible return rates, which include Railway and Carriage Fares both ways. They are as follows:—From either o the three London Stations to Etchingham and back, including the return journey by road to Hawkhurst: First Class, 15s. 6d.; Second Class, 11s. 6d.; Third Class, 7s. 6d. (By an error these fares were quoted in a former announcement 1s. lower).

,, Sevenoaks ,,	...	,, 9s. 9d.	,, 7s. 8d.	,, 5s. 8d.
,, Tunbridge Wells ,,	...	,, 6s. 6d.	,, 5s. 6d.	,, 4s. 7d.

Arrangements have also been made by which Visitors from Hastings, Eastbourne and Brighton by certain trains can obtain Return Tickets (including carriage conveyance to Hawkhurst) at greatly reduced prices.

The times of the trains, and the return fares, are as below:—

From Hastings 1.40 p.m., arriving at Etchingham at 2.14 p.m. Fares—First Class, 7s.; Second Class, 5s. 10d.; Third Class, 4s. 9d.

From Eastbourne to Hastings, 12.54 p.m. Leave Hastings 1.40 p.m., arriving at Etchingham at 2.14 p.m. Fares—First Class, 9s. 7d.; Second Class, 8s.; Third Class, 6s. 6d.

From Brighton to Hastings, 11.35 a.m. Leave Hastings 1.40 p.m., arriving at Etchingham at 2.14 p.m. Fares—First Class, 11s. 6d.; Second Class, 9s. 7d.; Third Class, 7s. 9d.

Passengers for Hastings, Eastbourne and Brighton will leave Etchingham by train at 7.20 p.m.

All these tickets must be obtained beforehand from the Office of the Institutions, as below; and as, owing to the situation of the village, arrangements have to be made well in advance, no tickets can be supplied at these Special Rates, or to include Carriage conveyance, the orders for which arrive later than by the first post on Friday, August 6.

Refreshments will be provided on the grounds at moderate rates for all not having Tickets for the Collation.

Friends proposing to be present will very much oblige and greatly facilitate arrangements, by sending at once for their Tickets, which are now being issued in the order of application. Letters ordering Tickets should contain a P.O.O., or Cheque in payment for the same.

To avoid delay, all communications on the subject of Tickets should be addressed to—

Author of "Memoir of R. M. M'Cheyne," &c., &c.

"We wish all young men would read this brief memoir."—Baptist Magazine.

"This book will be read with interest and profit; and its perusal will stimulate others to follow the example of this devoted servant of the Lord."—Methodist Times.

"Whatever falls from Dr. Bonar's pen has grace and spiritual power in it. This book is largely a record of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work in Glasgow, and of the earnest way in which it was taken up and carried on by Mr. Scott, whom the Evangelistic Association appointed Superintendent of the work on Mr. Moody's departure. Scott died at the age of thirty-eight, and his funeral was attended by about six thousand persons."

"We are quite sure that this book is well calculated to encourage effort and stimulate the Church to diligence in this direction.—The Methodist.

Jesus the Lamb of God;

Showing how He died on the Cross for Children; and how Little Ones have Learned to Love and Trust Him.

By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

USE SOFT WATER!

The barbarous Hard Water met with in most towns curdles the soap, irritates the skin, and is wasteful and a nuisance all round.

THE QUEEN says:—"TO SOFTEN HARD WATER use

MAIGNEN'S 'ANTI-CALCAIRE'

Powder—Quite Harmless and Inexpensive."

Remarkable Economy of Tea.—Monsieur Soyer, the celebrated cook, says that with hard water three cups require as much tea as five cups do with soft. If soft water be used for making tea a saving of two out of five shillings can be effected. Six Pennyworth of Maignen's patent "ANTI-CALCAIRE" powder softens three hundred gallons of water, which will not require more than 24 lbs. of tea to give the same result as 40 lbs., if the water were left with its original hardness. An economy of not less than 32 shillings for six pence.

Washing Laces, Crewel Work, and the getting up of fine Muslins, Lawns, and Embroidered Dresses. These valuable articles are often stained and torn in the wash, for the hard water curdles the soap, and the greasy salts of the fatty acids of the soap play havoc with delicate work. Where soap or washing powder is used, a precipitate is formed causing fine fabrics to stick to the iron and become scorched and damaged. To obviate this risk, wash only with soft water, and very little soap will be required, and there will be no stains nor damage.

Sold in Tins with printed directions, at 2d., 6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/6, and 7/- (a 6d. tin softens 300 gallons of water). Ask your Chemist, Ironmonger, Grocer, or Oilman; if you cannot get it send 5 stamps for a Sample Tin and Descriptive Pamphlet to P. A. Maignen, Contractor to H.M.'s Government, 32, St. Mary-at-Hill, Eastcheap, E.C., and 15, Pall Mall, S.W., London, Patentee of the "Filtre-Rapide."

THE "HOPWOOD" PURE CALICOES DIRECT FROM THE MILL.

The "QUEEN" (Feb. 6, 1886) says:—"The Hopwood Manufacturing Company, Princess Mills, Hopwood, Manchester, who supply the public direct from the Mill, have forwarded specimens of their Calicoes, Sheetings, &c. They comprise about 100 different sorts of cloths at considerably lower prices than charged by retail dealers. These are in qualities to suit all purposes, from Unbleached Twilled Sheetings, to the finest Twilled Longcloths, the yarns from which they are made being of a high class. The Soft-finished Longcloths are admirable for Ladies' and Children's wear. The discount, and other advantages allowed by this firm, reduce these necessary materials to an almost nominal price."

REV. PRINCIPAL CAIRNS, OF EDINBURGH.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Moffat, Edinburgh.)

PRESBYTERIANISM in Scotland is divided into three branches—the Established Church, the Free Church, and the United Presbyterian Church. The last, though comparatively weak in membership, is aggressive and enterprising. Its congregations are active in religious, philanthropic, and social movements, and its ministers are characterised by intelligence and enthusiasm. It has a tower of strength in its leader, Principal Cairns, whose portrait we present to our readers to-day.

JOHN CAIRNS is a native of Berwickshire. He entered the University of Edinburgh at an early age, and made his mark there at once. He had a thirst for knowledge, and eagerly sought to satisfy it. Metaphysics had a peculiar fascination for him. This might be partly owing to the predilection his race has ever shown for philosophical studies, but it was in large measure the result of the charm of the lectures of Sir William Hamilton, who then occupied the chair of Logic and Metaphysics. Cairns won the highest place in the class, and the personal friendship of the Professor. He never lost his regard for the brilliant teacher, though their paths in life lay widely apart. A story is told—and we believe it is true—of how, after his own conversion, he wrote Sir William a tender yet bold letter about his soul's welfare. He never got an answer; but after the Professor's death the letter was found carefully preserved among his private papers. This incident throws a favourable light on the courage and zeal of the young follower of Christ.

His vacations gave him time to grow mentally and spiritually. He used to watch sheep during the summer months on the hills of his native district. Book in hand, and wrapped in a plaid, he would lie and read or think. He believed in solitude and silence after the bustle of the winter session. Though man and art were far from him, God was near; and when human voices were hushed, he could more readily listen to the Divine. Reading made him a full man; but it was meditation and communion that gave him the strength needful for the work he had to do.

He passed through his theological curriculum in the United Secession Hall with distinction, and supplemented it with a session in Germany—then a rather unusual thing for a student, but now quite a common thing. The broader culture thus gained was turned by him to good account; he pressed it into the service of the elucidation of Scripture. He had but one aim in life, and that to glorify his Master in the salvation of souls. All his reading and thinking were undertaken to equip him the more fully as a preacher of the everlasting Gospel.

He was ordained minister of the United Secession Congregation, Golden-square, Berwick-on-Tweed, on August 6, 1845. His new duties were hard to fulfil. His predecessor, Professor Balmer, was a theologian of repute, and a celebrated preacher. To fill his shoes was no easy matter, and there was a heavy debt on the church, which threatened to cripple the energies of the members, but it was soon cleared off. Signs of prosperity made their appearance. The congregation rapidly increased in numbers, and a larger church had to be built. Mr. Cairns's genial manner, intense earnestness, and expository ability, drew crowds, and kept them. He was not one of those popular preachers who go up like a rocket, blaze a little while, and then die away into darkness. He stoutly maintained his hold on the public. He never sought to curry favour, but fearlessly proclaimed the message of God. His study labours fed the pulpit light. He gathered his materials throughout the week, and, like the apostolic Finney, set fire to them on the Sabbath.

The life he now lived was full and real. Its fulness came from the fact that he had found a calling in which all his powers could and did work harmoniously; and its reality lay in his work being ever done as "in the great Taskmaster's eye." He loved preaching, and gave his best to it; so his sermons told. He was strictly evangelical, and showed in what he said that solidity and breadth which critics allege is seldom found in the evangelical preaching of our day. Some ministers, in seeking to be evangelistic, either degenerate to a parrot-cry of, "Come to Christ," speaking in tones of oily sweetness, which they mistake for unction, or thunder out, what Dr. James Hamilton happily called, a "Gospel offered with clenched fists." John Cairns carefully avoided both of these pitfalls. Head and heart had each its work to do in his preaching. His thoughts had the richness and strength which careful preparation alone can give; the vigour of his appeals and the weight of his denunciations were toned by a yearning love for souls. His large-heartedness was an element in his power. He caught something of the spirit of his Master in his pulpit ministrations, for, like Him, he was "moved with compassion," and spoke to the people "all the words of this life."

Though well versed in philosophy, he never discussed dry theories and smooth abstractions. He was too much in earnest for that. He wanted to touch and elevate human lives, so he laid emphasis on foundation truths. Sabbath by Sabbath he was a skilful archer, bow in hand, and arrow strung, aiming right at the conscience. He wounded but to heal. His sermons were elaborate, but the life was not by any means elaborated out of them, as is too often the case with ornate essays heard in church, which are

Correctly cold and correctly dull,
Faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly null.

He was an orator, and swayed his hearers with the passion and pathos of his words. He was fond of illustrations, and used similes never beyond the comprehension of the illiterate, but instinct with a fire that set the blood tingling through the veins. His voice was strong and penetrating. It rang now like a clarion, and again, dropping to a softer mood, took on a persuasive music. Eloquence, dialectic skill, and learning, lent a charm to his sermons, but their real force lay in their intense earnestness. Soul only can affect soul; and it is only preaching from the heart that can move hearts. There is an anecdote told of Garrick, which should be pondered by all preachers, and never more than in our day. "How is it," asked a learned divine of the celebrated actor, "that in expounding truth we produce so little effect, while you touch the deepest feelings of your audience by the representation of fiction?" "Because," was the ready reply, "I recite fiction as if it were truth, while you deal with truths as if they were fictions."

The years of the Berwick ministry flowed smoothly. They were marked by no stirring incidents, but good work was done in them, the memory of which is still fresh. They were divided between study and pastoral visitation. Mr. Cairns won the love of his people, and retained it to the end. He was happy in their respectful affection, and turned a deaf ear to the invitations which wooed him to other spheres of labour. He was useful where he was, and he sought no more. His reputation was such, and the calls he received were so many, that it became a kind of joke in a vacant congregation that Mr. Cairns should be called first. He was often asked to preach special sermons, and rarely refused if it was in his power to grant the request. His fame travelled to London. The London Missionary Society got him in 1859 to preach their anniversary sermons. His surroundings and theme on that occasion moved him to do his best. He spoke in Rowland Hill's old chapel, and his subject was the offering up of the Gentiles. It is not too much to say that those who heard him then can never forget the man or his words.

In 1858 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Edinburgh University, and in 1867 he was appointed to the chair of Apologetics in the Theological Hall of the United Presbyterian Church. His private studies admirably fitted him to teach. For some years he had to combine pulpit and professional work. This was a strain few men could bear, but he bore it. In 1876 the Theological Hall was remodelled, and Dr. Cairns was freed from his charge, and set apart to devote all his time and talents to his professorial duties. The wisdom of this step was vindicated by the impetus given to theological studies and the enthusiasm awakened in students through closer contact with their beloved instructor. In 1879 Dr. Cairns was elected Principal of the College, and since then his influence and personality have been dominant in it.

The conscientiousness which characterised his preaching is also to be found in his teaching. He is not one of those reckless speculators who gamble with truth; he is always earnest and reverent. His theology has warmth and heart. The writer had the privilege of listening to him one day as he lectured to his class. The topic under discussion was the Atonement, and it did one good to hear the grey-haired veteran declare his unfaltering allegiance to the Cross, and speak of how the sinner's real burden was removed by a real expiation. He delights to employ his rare philosophical knowledge in illustrating or confirming the principles of theology. He believes that philosophy is a handmaid to Christianity. Revelation is a guide to lead, and a touchstone to test philosophy, and philosophy in its turn is helpful to religion. In his case at least it is true that—

Philosophy, baptized
In the pure fountain of eternal love,
Has eyes indeed; and viewing all she sees
As meant to indicate a God to man,
Gives Him the praise, and forfeits not her own.

Principal Cairns has not written much, but what he has written reflects the highest credit on his ability. His magnum opus is the Cunningham Lecture of 1880, which treats of "Unbelief in the Eighteenth Century, as contrasted with its Earlier and Later History." It is a masterly and comprehensive work. He has also published several little books of considerable value.

His best writings have been written with the pen of his convincing eloquence on the hearts of men. He wields great power as a platform speaker. He is always at the service of a good cause. For many years he has been an able advocate of temperance. Social, religious, and philanthropic movements enlist his warmest sympathies. No public meeting of any importance in Edinburgh is complete without him. His appearance is the signal for an outburst of applause, and what he has to say is eagerly listened to.

So, honoured and loved, he lives his life, speaking helpful words, and doing kind deeds. His hair is now white as snow, but his heart is as warm and his eloquence as inspiring as in days of yore. We hope years of continued usefulness lie before him, and that he may go on, blessing and being blest.

BOUND FOR NORTHFIELD.

(BY OUR SPECIAL REPORTER).

Within a week of leaving Liverpool the ss. Parisian, of the Allan Line, is now as I write (Thursday morning, July 22), peacefully steaming up the great Gulf of the St. Lawrence, having safely escaped the perils of the Atlantic. These have not been absent, though the voyage on the whole has been both a swift and pleasant one. In order to pass through the Straits of Belle Isle, and shorten the route, our Captain has taken the northward course, thus striking the region of icebergs. At this advanced season of the year they are of course becoming fewer and further between, but yesterday, from dawn to dusk, our chief occupation was that of watching these frozen and fantastically shaped vagrants of the northern sea, as they slowly drifted southwards, in all their majestic grandeur. One was a capital representation of a hoary crumbling castle ruin, with a perfect archway through the middle of it; old, experienced sailors said they had never seen anything of the kind to equal it; another huge berg might have been mistaken for Windsor Castle in a mantle of snow, Round Tower and all. Happily we have not encountered more than one single hour of the dreaded fog, and this has reduced our risk of collision to a minimum.

The Parisian is first favourite among the Atlantic liners that ply between Liverpool and Quebec, and, judging from her steady behaviour on the present occasion, amid the "chops" of the big Channel, she well deserves her high reputation. This trip she carried some 800 souls, all told, and the interests of this goodly freight of human life are most assiduously watched over by Commodore Wylie and his crew. We who are under his special charge appear to constitute a pretty complete microcosm of average human society. We have our monied and titled aristocracy, and all the varied grades of the sliding scale, except perhaps the lowest of "the residuum." We have a successful General returning to his post in the Dominion, fresh from the English Court and the knightly honours bestowed upon him by her Gracious Majesty. We have a dignitary of the Church of England; we have the Speaker of the Canadian Assembly at Ottawa, besides other stars of lesser magnitude in the social firmament. A good many of the saloon passengers are Canadians who have done the grand tour of England and the Continent, and are returning to their homes more content than ever, as they aver, with the land of their birth or of their adoption. Much of the talk of these enterprising and successful Westerners is about dollars and farms, and big speculations, and "getting on." We have a few young Englishmen, who, dissatisfied with their business prospects in the old country, are bound for the fertile fields of Canada, or the rolling prairies of the far West, hoping probably to make their "pile," like others who have gone before. I have been struck with the unanimity of feeling among the prosperous Scotch and Irish Canadians on board as to the superiority of the Dominion for the amenities and comforts of life, as compared with the Mother Country. The two dominant currents of opinion in our daily small talk are contempt for the slowness and conservatism of the Britisher and dislike of Mr. Gladstone. In many matters of mechanical improvement and internal reform England is declared to be fifty years behind the times.

One thing, however, pleases me much—the manifest growth of TEMPERANCE SENTIMENT AND PRACTICE.

A military man, who sits next to me at table, evidently well versed in the ways of the world, remarked one day that he did not recollect ever having seen so little liquor consumed on board an Atlantic steamer. General Sir Frederick Middleton, to whom I have alluded, endorsed the remark, though, he added, he was sorry to think that fashion rather than principle had much to do with the change. The General, who is himself an abstainer, was the Commander of the expedition which successfully quelled the Riel rebellion last year in the North-West of Canada. He asserted, when referring to this subject, that the small body of troops under his command could not have accomplished their task if liquor had been served out to them. The strong drink was absent, and there was an equivalent absence both of disease and of crime. Another striking fact in the same direction was quoted. During the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and a parallel line in the United States, some 5000 men were employed on each route. On the American Line drink was allowed to be sold to the navvies, with the result that after every pay time the men struck work for several days, and gave themselves up to vinous indulgence. On the Canadian side strong drink was tabooed, and the work went on without intermission, while there was also a notable freedom from disease as compared with the American camps of workmen.

Opinions have been strongly and freely uttered by many of the Canadians whom I have conversed with, as to the sad prevalence of the drink curse in the old country. It was enough to mantle the cheek of an Englishman with shame to hear them assert that they had seen more drunkenness in one day in Manchester or Glasgow than in a long residence in Canada. These good friends, perhaps, forget that they are free from the malefic influences that tend to concentrate the drink curse in such great and over-crowded centres of population as the cities named; but I had no possible answer to the statement that while the authorities in the British Isles encourage the evil by indiscriminate licensing, the laws and the efforts of the higher powers in Canada go in an opposite direction. In this respect I was bound to confess the Motherland has not a little to imitate in the attitude of her daughter countries over the sea.

It seems very hard, if not quite impossible, to exorcise on board Atlantic steamships. Time hangs heavy on the hands of many, and where there is not the restraining influence of stern and rigid principle, the temptation is strong to embark, to some extent, on the troubled and muddy waters of speculation. The betting on board the Parisian is not of the virulent type that showed itself last year, during my outward voyage on the Servia—our company is not of such a mixed description. Still, the speculating mania is sufficiently prevalent to make the matter one of serious apprehension as to the effects on the younger portion of the population. I am sorry to say that a coterie of the ladies on board have caught the infection; they not only get up a select "pool" of their own, but openly speak of the proceeding without any hint of disapproval or rebuke.

THE GAMBLING DEMON

SUNDAY SERVICES.

Seeing that we have four ministers of the Gospel in our company—two Episcopalians, a Presbyterian, and a Methodist—our spiritual interests ought not to suffer. It is to be feared that Atlantic voyages, as a rule, even when in the full enjoyment of their physical and mental equilibrium, are apt to let the spiritual part of the man take its chance. On Sunday morning, of course, we had "Divine service," when the appointed prayers and portions for the day were read with all due celerity. The day was calm, and there was a very full attendance. The opportunity was one which an earnest Gospeller might well have seized and turned to some account, but our President dismissed us without any words of exhortation, impressive or otherwise, though many of the audience expected a sermon.

A young Anglo-Canadian clergyman gave a simple and suitable address in the afternoon to Dr. Barnardo's emigrant party of girls, and also spoke to the steerage passengers. There were other efforts made to turn the sacred day to some account. Perhaps the most active worker on board is Mr. G. Moser, an energetic solicitor from Kendal, who is on a semi-holiday, semi-evangelistic tour to the great North-West.

To me one of the greatest enjoyments during this week spent on the wide waste of waters, has certainly been the presence and happy demeanour of the

from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, numbering over 170. Clad in their comfortable ulsters and pretty crimson hoods, they have formed a striking and attractive feature in our floating community. Dr. Barnardo himself accompanied them on board the ship at Liverpool, and addressed to them earnest words of parting counsel, commending them to the care and protection of their Heavenly Father during the unrevealed vicissitudes of the voyage. They are under the most efficient care of Miss Joyce and three lady helpers, with Mr. Rice as the male attendant. In the early part of the trip we were enlivened with contrary winds, not to speak of a rolling "swell," the legacy of a previous gale. Many of these girls shared the fate of some of their elders, and fell a prey to that most impartial and unscrupulous leveller of human kind—sea-sickness. With their buoyant young blood and their high spirits they soon recovered, and almost every day the foredeck was radiant with red caps and resonant with song. It was a source of untiring delight to mingle with them, and join in the familiar melodies from Songs and Solos. Mr. Proudman and the regular teachers at Ilford and Sturge House had done their duty in this department well and truly, for the girls seem to carry the whole of Mr. Sankey's collection in their heads. Blessed work indeed to store these young minds and hearts with the Gospel songs that will carry cheer to many a scattered Canadian homestead, and minister exceeding comfort to the spirits of the songstresses themselves when the hour of trial comes to them, as come it must, in the future years. Altogether they seem to me to form a most promising collection of budding womanhood, and I doubt not they will do ample credit to Dr. Barnardo and his fellow-workers, as well as to the kind friends in Canada who may receive them under their roof-trees, and give them the chance of carving for themselves an honourable and useful career.

Dr. Barnardo has developed his emigration department with the thoroughness and rapidity that characterise him, but so long as he sends out to the great Dominion such well and wisely trained young people as those on board the Parisian, I judge that he need not fear the results; while the boon to overcrowded London will be increasingly felt. I learn from Miss Joyce that carefully chosen homes in Canada await every girl of the party, and many more could be provided for in the same way. Some of the younger children will be adopted and reared with all the affectionate solicitude that could be bestowed on them if they were of the same kith and kin. Miss Joyce acts as visitor to the girls placed out from the Home at Peterborough, and I envy her the high privilege of watching the process of transplanting these bright young immortals in the new and hopeful soil of the Dominion.

The Presbyterian pastor whom I have mentioned is Rev. R. M. Thornton, of the Camden-road Church, London. He is a genial and stalwart son of Canada, and is on a vacation trip to his native shore. Several times during the voyage he has addressed the children in their spacious quarters in the fore part of the ship, each time winning their favour by his interesting and practical words. One or two friends, to encourage the young people, offered small prizes for the best reports from memory of Mr. Thornton's addresses; and this excited them to healthful emulation, as well as helped to fix the saving truths of the Gospel in their memories.

While these discursive notes are being penned our good ship is speeding onwards under a bright sky, and the Gulf is rapidly narrowing. To-morrow (Friday) evening we hope to cast anchor at Quebec. A friend has indited for me the following acrostic, embalming the name of our vessel; the simple lines point an excellent moral, which may well be appropriated by all voyagers to "the further shore," whether on land or on sea:—

P atiently she ploughs the path
That marks her westward way;
A ll through the dark and dreary night,
All through the sunny day;
R esponsive to the lightest touch
Of skilful steersman's hand,
I ntent on nothing but to reach
The fair Canadian Strand.

S o be it mine, with dauntless hope,
To tread life's journey through;
n storm or calm; through gain or loss;
If skies be black, or blue;
A ssured that if my Saviour's smile
Athwart my lot be cast,
N o foe on earth can harm, and I
Heaven's post shall gain at last.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—August 15, Philippians ii. 14—30; August 16, Philippians iii. 1—12; August 17, Philippians iii. 13—21; August 18, Philippians iv. 1—9; August 19, Philippians iv. 10—23; August 20, Colossians i. 1—17; August 21, Colossians i. 18—29.

THE MISSION TO HOP-PICKERS.—With the return of September thousands will gather from court and alley to the hop-picking in Kent. As in past years, a band of workers purpose (D.V.) labouring among them for their spiritual, moral, and physical well-being. The work is now so well-known, and has been so abundantly blessed of God in former years, that I simply remind our kind friends that the time is near, and the sooner help—both funds and parcels of clothing, &c.—is received, the sooner shall we be able to mature our plans for using it to the best advantage. Many of our "helpers" have "gone home" during the year, and we, therefore, plead for others to take their places. I shall be glad to send further information respecting the Mission and its operations to any who may desire it. Parcels of clothing, or tracts (undenominational) should be forwarded (carriage paid) to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Marden-street, S.E.R. Contributions thankfully received by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Upper Norwood, S.E. (the Mission should be mentioned); Rev. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Staplehurst, Kent, or by the writer,

THE POWER OF WORDS.

Words embody and convey thoughts. They are a power for good or evil given to man alone. They are spoken easily, yet each one has a special meaning, and drops like a seed into a heart, where it may take root and bring forth fruit. Ruskin says that for good and bad words you may substitute makers and destroyers; good words build up, and bad words pull down. What we hear and see helps or hurts ourselves only. What we speak affects mind and soul. In this lies the power of words. They have an influence which is a potent force on the side of right or wrong.

The power of words is illustrated by a story of the old days. Xanthus, expecting some friends to dine with him, told his servant Æsop to buy the best things in the market. The hour came, and the dinner. Course after course was served, each consisting of tongue. Xanthus was wild with indignation. He turned on his servant, and angrily demanded, "Did I not order you to buy the best victuals the market afforded?" "And have I not obeyed you?" was the ready reply. "Is there anything better than a tongue? Is it not the bond of civil society, the organ of truth and reason, and the instrument of our praise and adoration of the gods?" Xanthus had to admit the truth of what his servant said, but he had not done with him. He commanded him to go again on the morrow, and buy the worst things he could find. Æsop went, bought more tongues, and served them as before. "What, tongues again!" exclaimed the master. "Most certainly," rejoined the servant; "the tongue is surely the worst thing in the world. It is the instrument of all strife and contention, the inventor of lawsuits, and the source of divisions and wars; it is also the organ of error, lies, calumny, and blasphemies." The wise slave was right; tongues are the worst and the best things in the world.

The Apostle James called attention long ago to the power of the tongue. He said that horses were obedient to the touch of the bit, and that ships answered to the helm, but that "the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." No poison is so mischievous as bad words. They work out moral and spiritual death. They stain young hearts with impurity, and stir up wicked desires. They creep through the ear into the mind, and tempt to actions contrary to God's commandments. They had much to do with the introduction of sin into this world. Eve listened to some bad words, ate the forbidden fruit, and so ruined herself and the race which was to come.

He who speaks a bad word to his neighbour does far greater injury than if he had struck him a hard blow. The wound inflicted by the hand hurts the body, but the wound inflicted by the tongue bruises the soul. Such words are like weeds, which, while you are pulling them up in one place, are flourishing in another spot at the distance of some yards. To use St. James's simile, they are like the wheel which catches fire as it goes, and burns the more fiercely the quicker it revolves. A foul tongue "setteth on fire the wheel of nature."

Slander is a common form of bad words. It is a sin against charity and truth. To rob a man of his purse is a small injury compared with taking away his good name. Yet how often is this offence committed! Some ladies gather at a table; tea is drunk, and some character is mutilated. Some men meet and talk; a friend's reputation is stained. So it comes about that momentous consequences spring from an idle and careless conversation. Many people who speak ill are actuated by no malice. They forget the value of reputation and the power of words. If they were conscious of the wrong they were doing, they would be filled with remorse. They are really Nihilists of the worst description, destroying that which affects the usefulness of a brother or sister, and the moral wealth of a community. It is character that makes a town or village rich; and he who smirches the reputation of an acquaintance takes away from the moral strength of that town or village. Slanderers should be branded with the stigma of society. They are already condemned by God, for Christianity makes every man his brother's keeper.

The power of good words is very great. They teach, guide, and comfort. In the pulpit they point men to a higher life; on the platform they combat injustice and advocate right; at the fireside they create a halo of joy and peace; and in rescuing the fallen they prove a mighty lever to raise. Kind words are among the things which never die. The loaf of bread you give the beggar furnishes a meal, and then its influence is over; but your sympathetic words to an outcast fill his heart with new courage and hope. The mightiest forces are the cheapest. The words we utter so carelessly might be used to gladden and strengthen the lives of those we meet day by day. Christ employed his words so. He ever spoke kind words, and did kind deeds. If we are to be disciples worthy of our Master, we must go and do likewise.

EVANGELISATION IN GERMANY.

The Capeler Journal, a daily paper, in giving on July 21 an account of Dr. Ziemann's work in Capel, makes some important remarks on the need of evangelists in Germany. We give a few extracts:—

"Before a numerous and very attentive meeting, yesterday evening, Dr. Ziemann commenced his mission in the large hall of the Stadthaus. It was generally believed that this English guest came amongst us as a Methodist, or, perhaps, even as agent of the Salvation Army. We went to hear and examine for ourselves, and came to the conviction that Dr. Ziemann is no separatist. The preaching of the Gospel by a layman, and outside the church building, is in our province new, so the question arises (1) Are such meetings desirable? Shall we approve of them? (2) Does Dr. Ziemann really preach the Gospel according to the teaching of our Church, without separatist aims? To the first question we say, distinctly, Yes. The Church in Germany will soon be driven to use laymen in her service, not only to visit the poor and sick, but to reach the masses, which have become estranged from her. The pastor is not able to do all the work in his district.

"That such meetings are really appreciated, any one must have observed who attended Dr. Ziemann's service. We saw there, amongst others, the working men, the poor in their shabby jackets, in which they would never venture to enter a church in great numbers. We are not alone in our opinion; The Reichsbote has in its last number a strong article on the necessity of laymen being used for the preaching of the Gospel. Those who have heard Dr. Ziemann cannot have had any other impression, but that he indeed preached the old pure Gospel without any artful means, but with deep conviction and moving warmth. He showed especially how fearfully sin destroys, how great the grace which saves."

THE BISHOP'S VETO.*

This correspondence throws light upon serious questions, namely: Why can clergymen defy the law with impunity? Why are parishioners powerless to enforce their Church rights? These questions involve issues which concern Christian Englishmen without distinction of denomination. That clergymen do outrage the feelings of parishioners, and defraud them of their Church rights, by introducing idolatrous doctrines and rites into English parish churches, is beyond dispute; and, so far, it has become apparent that parishioners are as powerless to protect themselves as the lawless clergy are safe from punishment. Why is this? The correspondence shows that recently, and indirectly, the Bishops have received from Parliament power to veto, that is to say, arbitrarily to forbid proceedings by any Christian parishioner against any idolatrous clergyman for any offence against Church Law, however gross may be the offence, provided only the offender be a clergyman. The Bishop need give no reason, or may assign a ridiculous reason, for his refusal of justice.

Mr. Girdlestone objects to the veto thoroughly, but temperately, and thus his arguments lose no strength. We give two brief quotations. After pointing to the state of affairs in regard to crucifixes in the parish of Clewer (it was at Clewer that Bishop Mackarness three times resorted to the veto to screen Canon Carter from prosecutions for Romanising rites) Mr. Girdlestone says, "Though crucifixes are being introduced into parish churches, yet, owing to the veto, the laity are powerless to prevent the evil." A foot-note to page 61 limits this remark to ecclesiastical proceedings criminal, where alone the veto exists, and suggests that in ecclesiastical proceedings civil a faculty might be got to remove a crucifix.

After a quotation from Canon Carter's work on "The Priesthood," Mr. Girdlestone writes: "The necessary result of holding views such as propounded by Canon Carter is that when the 'priest' has consecrated the bread and wine he is driven to offer to them the idolatrous honours which are required by the laws of the Papacy, but in the Church of England are strictly forbidden" (p. 94). Mr. Girdlestone expresses a well-founded objection to the unscriptural use of the title "Priest" to designate the office of a minister of the Gospel (p. 99).

We observe that the Bishop commenced and closed the correspondence; and we learn that a copy has been sent to every English bishop.

The book is well printed; an appendix and index occupy 102 pages. It deserves attentive study.

* The Bishop's Veto: A Correspondence between the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Mackarness) and Mr. James Girdlestone (Member of the Incorporated Law Society). Hatchards.

MR. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM recently concluded an evangelistic tour in the United States, which occupied nearly eight months. Series of special evangelistic services were held at the following places: Lynn, Mass.; Newburg, Mattewan, and Staten Island, N.Y.; New York City; Westchester and Chaddsford, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Lynchburg, Charlottesville, Norfolk, and Portsmouth, Va.; Raleigh, N. C.; Galveston and Dallas, Texas; Memphis, Tenn.; Louisville, Ky., and Washington, D. C.; and tokens of revived interest and spiritual blessings were evident, for which Christians are asked to join in praising God. Mrs. Needham addressed large audiences on Gospel and prophetic themes at some of these towns. There is an earnest call for Bible teaching. The "new theology" has proved its powerlessness in lifting sinners out of spiritual death, and a cold, formal orthodoxy fails to satisfy the yearnings of a soul seeking after God. In some of the more Southern cities Mr. Needham gave special addresses on "the future glory of Israel," which called out many leading Jews, including one of the prominent Rabbis. He was urged to repeat the lecture in one of the synagogues, but a pressing engagement took him elsewhere. The Jews who attended have requested Mr. Needham to revisit their cities this fall.

SUFFERING for CONSCIENCE SAKE.

INTRIGUE BY JESUITS.

In the First Division of the Court of Session a painful case was recently reported. J. K. Leys, a London barrister, presented a petition craving to have the respondent, his father, Rev. Peter Leys, United Presbyterian minister, residing at Kelvingrove-street, Glasgow, ordained to deliver up to him the custody of his two children. When the case was last before the Court, their lordships made an order on the respondent that the children be delivered up to the petitioner's agent in Glasgow at ten o'clock on Monday morning, and further ordained the respondent to appear personally at the bar, and report what he had done in pursuance of that order.

On the case being called, the Lord President inquired of the respondent what he had done in the matter.

The Respondent—I have done nothing, my lord.

The Lord President—Why?

The Respondent—With the permission of the Court, I should be very much obliged if you would allow me to make a short statement.

The Lord President—Yes; we shall be glad to hear it.

The Respondent—I have not supposed, my lord, that I had any right to speak; it is entirely of your favour. If in my ignorance of the methods of procedure and speech in such a place as this, any word or phrase should unintentionally escape me which may appear in any way unsuitable, I throw myself on the indulgence and favour of the Court. In regard to the case itself, there are just two matters which occupy the ground. First of all, I know very well what was the dreadful state of poverty, and the deep indebtedness of my son, and his utter inability to maintain and educate his children when they came to me about six years ago. I am compelled, my lords, to make such distressing references to one who is and must be very dear to me. I was called upon to give my grandchildren a home; they had, indeed, no other home to go to. I was anxious for his own sake, and as a spur to assist him in his parental duty, that my son should do something for his children, and it was understood that while I should give them board and lodging, he should do his best to provide for their clothing and education. He has not done a third even of this, and I, with assistance privately from another friend, have paid what he did not pay, without, so far as I recollect, one word of remonstrance from me.

The boys have been in my family all these years, and no children have ever had a happier life than these children have had. The mutual settlement has been very tender and strong. These two boys have been our own, and we theirs, by every fibre of our heart and nature.

Instead of the pecuniary circumstances of my son having become better since the time when, in his necessity he sent his children to me, they have become worse. He is much deeper in debt than he was then. But it appears that Father Clark undertakes to makes all necessary payments for the entire maintainance and education of the children in a Jesuit institution, near Sheffield, for two years.

And now, for the second point, upon which I lay much stress. About six years ago, when the children came to me, their father was a Protestant, as their deceased mother had also been. About four years ago my son became a Roman Catholic, and, as may be supposed, to one of my convictions and in my position, this was a cause of considerable distress. In tears and grief we apprehended then that the boys would be taken from us and trained in charity in some Roman Catholic institution, as we well knew that their father himself could not maintain them. But that was never once mooted by him. He knew very well my views and the habits of the family in respect to religion. He knew very well the character of my eldest daughter, to whose care he specially committed them, and that the training of his boys in the principles of the evangelical faith would be a supreme and pervading object. He never once interfered. Nay, at the distant intervals, he came to see his children, he joined in their presence in our daily family worship, and accompanied us and them to the Protestant church.

The boys never knew that their father was a Roman Catholic until this recent action compelled their knowledge of it. It has been alleged that I have prejudiced their minds against him; nothing could be further from the truth. We knew well how important it was to the welfare of the children to love their father, and we have encouraged and cherished it, with the result that little as they did see or hear from him their love to him was beautiful and surprising. Now, these years that my son has been a Roman Catholic have been eminently formulative years in the character of the children. They are remarkably quick in intelligence; they thoroughly understand the principles of evangelical truth, which we hope and believe have become the supreme influence in their life, and the piety founded on these principles is singularly deep. The thought of being taken from us and sent to a Roman Catholic seminary has filled them with distress by day and with dreams of terror by night. Physically they are not strong, and to send them to such a seminary would endanger their lives. But, at their advanced ages, for religious intolerance to force them into compliance with Roman Catholic practices, and to subvert their present convictions, would naturally lead to the confounding in their minds of all religious truth whatever, and would tend to the demoralisation of their nature. I can only contemplate such a prospect with horror.

The whole circumstances of the case, and the whole way in which for all these six years he has been a Roman Catholic, my son has given over the children to my guardianship; and protection, care, and kindness, lay upon me at this time a tremendous responsibility which I cannot evade. I have considered it very seriously, and to myself my course is very clear. If I could show that to give up the children would expose them to physical danger, the law would say, "Don't give them up;" but now, in view of the moral and spiritual ruin which I believe would follow, I cannot surrender the children without doing violence to my deepest and strongest convictions of duty. But a word or two more is necessary in order to make my present position understood.

It would be ridiculous for me in any case to question, on grounds of law, the decision of this Court, and, besides, I believe that your lordships in this case have given very careful consideration indeed to everything that has been urged by counsel on my behalf. I have no doubt that the decision of the Court is sound according to law that must determine its conduct. I need hardly add that I regard this public legal authority as an unspeakable benefit, especially when, as in our own country, it is so well administered. But law and duty may at times interfere with one another. In point of fact and in history they have not seldom interfered and clashed with one another, and in this case the circumstances are so exceptional that I suppose a case like the present has never occurred in the history of this Court. My lords, I crave with all submission to observe that the first Christian men who were brought before a Court enunciated a great principle, previously embodied in the teaching of their Divine Master, when they said, "We ought to obey God rather than men."

This is a principle which can be very readily perverted and abused by fanatics, fools, and knaves; but none the less it is a great principle which threw into the ancient world an idea altogether new, and has proved one of the mightiest factors—I might say the mightiest factor—in the emancipation of the human conscience and the moral discipline of the human spirit. Now, as I have said, I cannot surrender the children without doing violence to my deepest and strongest convictions of duty. But, my lords, I am anxious to render the law all the honour that I can. To use an old and well-known distinction, if I cannot in conscience honour the law by active obedience, I will do what else lies in my power, and honour it by passive obedience. I am here at the disposal of the Court, to submit to whatever it may determine.

And, my lords, let me say in closing that I am aware of the risk I run. I think I have counted the possible cost, dreadful as that would be to me and mine. I am, however, an old man, in enfeebled health, fit now for but little active duty, and things now should have little attraction for me under the sun. And this distressing history, which also has been appointed me to encounter ere I close my journey, has done much to darken to me the sky of time. I ought also to say that it has added to all my other distresses, that I must in any way stand in opposition to this Court. But, my lords, in view of the Supreme Bar, and with my convictions, I cannot, I dare not, do otherwise. I thank your lordships for the patient audience you have given to the imperfect statement I have now made.

The Lord President—I understand, sir, that you decline to surrender the custody of the children?

Mr. Leys—Yes, my lord.

The Lord President—I must put one other question to you. Are you prepared to inform the Court where the children are?

Mr. Leys—No, my lord.

Mr. Campbell said it would add greatly to the distress of the petitioner if his father was sent to prison.

The Lord President replied that there was only one way of obviating that, and that was by withdrawing the petition.

Mr. Campbell said his duty was to insist in the petition, and asked for a warrant for the recovery of the children.

The Court then pronounced an order granting warrant to the officers of the law throughout the country to take the children, wherever they may be, into their custody, and deliver them to the petitioner; and granting warrant to the officers of the Court to take the person of the Rev. Peter Leys into custody for contempt of Court, there to be incarcerated during the pleasure of their lordships. Mr. Leys was then removed from the bar in the custody of a detective.—Glasgow Daily Mail.

MISSION WORK at GOODWOOD RACES.

The Standard, in a leading article on Goodwood races (July 26), as the accepted end of the London "season," says:—"That a large number of wealthy and presumably rational human beings should live this sort of life for month after month is surely one of the most astonishing facts of the century. Compared with the dull vacuity of such an existence, the life of a cowboy is full of healthy excitement and honest purpose . . . As a rule, the unfortunate creatures who are doing the season give one the impression either that they are just coming from something, or just going to something. They never seem to be enjoying the present hour, but rather to have just lost one; they are too much occupied with what is over, or with what has not yet come, to devote themselves with due concentration to the present moment. There is a certain quietude about it (Goodwood), which doubtless springs from the fact that it is the end of all things."

To this final festival of the London "season" two members of the Open-air Mission were sent, but could not do much beyond tract distribution and personal conversation. On this occasion two brethren from Godalming were found labouring for a part of the four days' revel. On the morning of the last day a Christian young man resident in Chichester asked for some tracts to give when the races were over. "But what have you been doing all the week?" "Nothing; for when we attempt to speak to these racing men, they only turn round and begin to curse and swear." So it is. Men are not willing to take up the cross.

The only actual novelty in this effort was a new banner, held by Mr. Peter Wallis, on which 2 Thess. i. 7, 8 was painted. A gentleman outside a "four-in-hand" threw him a penny in mock charity, though his venerable appearance should rather have commanded respect as he stood erect like a faithful standard-bearer. We have, however, often noticed how the sight of the Word of God thus exhibited rouses the enmity of the human heart, in the case of John Hambledon, who, years ago, stood thus at Epsom and other race-gatherings.

And so, amid silent testimony, bold rebuke, patient endurance, comfort to the dejected, direction to the anxious, encouragement to the wavering, house-to-house visitation, and invasion of inns, the week passed away. Who can tell what harvest may result from the sowing of these 7000 or 8000 tracts, and their accompanying words "in season and out of season"? God grant that the sowers may then reap an abundant harvest!

Gawin Kirkham.

RINGWOOD, HANTS.—Mr. J. Cleworth, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced a mission here on July 25. Meetings are held nightly in a spacious tent, in a field near the town, where large numbers assemble each evening to hear the old, old story of Jesus and his love, in a plain, kindly, and forcible manner, Mr. Cleworth appealing to the hearts of the people in the very words of Scripture. He is helped by a young lady of great musical talent, who sings Gospel hymns in a very effective manner. A correspondent writes, on July 30: "Having been to the services each evening this week, I can testify to the Gospel being faithfully preached by the Lord's servant." The meetings are to be continued for a few weeks.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

II.

THE Keswick Convention is one of the many children of the Barnet-Mildmay Conference, and the advantage which Barnet possessed in the quiet grounds of the country parsonage is still more fully enjoyed among the hills of Cumberland. Everyone who has visited both Mildmay and Keswick must appreciate the isolation of the latter from the ceaseless rush of city life.

> "The calm retreat, the silent shade,
> With prayer and praise agree;
> And seem, by thy sweet bounty made
> For converse, Lord, with Thee."

But this is not the only, nor the chief characteristic of the Keswick Convention. It has from the first taken a very definite line as to consecration of heart to God and to his service, and as to the blessing which results therefrom. While many other Conferences have had for their object the cultivation of brotherly love, the refreshment of workers, the edification of believers, this Convention has gone distinctly further on the same lines; has definitely aimed at leading into a fuller and richer experience; at encouraging and enabling Christians "to be what they believe, that their standing may become their state; that what they talk about that they may do."

Yet we can only describe these gatherings as evangelistic meetings, as opportunities for preaching the Gospel. For what is the Gospel but God's good tidings, including all that the Father and the Son covenanted from eternity on behalf of Adam's fallen race? The Gospel defines what they who believe are saved to no less than what they are saved from. In the words of Mr. Webb-Peploe: "There is nothing which God does not bestow upon us when He gives us Christ." In those of Pastor Stockmayer: "There is nothing new to be taught here, nothing but the old Gospel in its simplicity and fulness."

These were among the earliest and most emphatic utterances, and we attach much importance to them. Portions of truth must not be made specialties, for specialties are the seeds of sects. We are indeed specialists as regards the world. The Gospel of God is our great and only specialty, and it is the seed of the only sect which pleases God,—the sect of the Nazarenes. We do not therefore like to hear of being "identified with the Keswick movement." The Gospel which Paul was commissioned to preach was not only to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from Satan to God: but to give them an inheritance among them that are sanctified, through faith in Jesus. The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith—from the faith of the little children whose sins are forgiven, to that of the young men who are strong and have overcome the wicked one, and to that of the fathers who know Him that is from the beginning.

The people wounded at the teaching of Jesus, for He taught them as one that had authority, and not as the Scribes. Yet the Scribes searched the Scriptures; they could tell where the Messiah should be born (at Bethlehem, and not in Galilee), that Elijah must first come, and many other outward truths, but they did not eat the roll, and they experienced neither its lamentation nor its joy. There is much searching and exposition of the Scriptures which does not come with authority, but the teaching at Keswick is with authority, because it is not mere exposition, but application. It reminds one of the applied sciences. There is the same difference between such teaching and that of the Scribes as there is between the plan of an engine and the engine itself; or between the engine at rest and impelled by steam.

The men on the platform are as diverse in cast and calibre of mind as on any other; more so, indeed, than is often the case; but there is a harmony of purpose, and of method, which ensures success. And this success is seen in 2000 people being drawn from all parts of the land; in the large majority of that number being brought at early morning to a simple prayer-meeting through the pouring rain; in the tent being crowded time after time every day; in hundreds remaining to the after-meetings, definitely to express their desire to be wholly the Lord's; in scores of spoken testimonies to grace received; in separate meetings of young men, who make open confession of besetting sins, and give eager heed to those who tell them of victory over sin; in numbers dedicating themselves to missionary work at home and abroad, as the Holy Ghost may call; and, generally, in faces which shine with the joy of inward fellowship with God, and of successful service among men.

The speakers were not only well read in Scripture, but well fed upon it, and the teaching poured out upon the people was wonderful, not only in amount, but in spiritual power. Indeed, the amount was far beyond the capacity of any audience. It might be well if teachers were to remember that they should give forth, not as much as they know, but as much as the people can receive. Dr. Chalmers was content if in each sermon he could fasten one truth upon the hearts of his congregation. With many parables Jesus spake the Word unto the multitude, as they were able to hear it. He had many things to say unto his disciples, but they could not bear them then, and they remained unspoken until they were able to receive them. On some occasions at Keswick the accumulation of varied truths was so overwhelming that we could think of no illustration of it so apposite as of 2000 bottles, with Niagara pouring into them. They would have taken in more if the volume of water had been less.

Less speaking, and more prayer silent as well as vocal, would have been less a strain on the mental powers, and given more time and opportunity for drawing near to God. There was, however, private and social prayer, and these seasons of privacy and stillness were to many the most experimental and fruitful periods during these holy days.

There is much to lament in the Church of England: its Romanism on the one hand, and its Rationalism on the other. But the increasing band of men within it, whose one study is the Word of God, and whose one business is to live and to preach the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ, is a cause of thankfulness and praise to God; and their influence upon the undergraduates, who were largely represented at Keswick, is full of hope and promise for the near future.

The address of Rev. H. G. C. Moule, which follows, is doubly interesting, on account of its searching character, and of the influence possessed by the speaker over the undergraduates at Cambridge.

It might have seemed a perilous experiment to introduce an exposition of prophecy at such a time; but the lucid and powerful address of Mr. Bowker on Friday morning, on the Signs of the Times, was one of the most interesting features of the Convention. With very definite thoughts of his own he harmonised and included those of schools which seem far more opposed than they really are; but the most striking characteristic of that meeting was the emotion manifested through the audience in the prospect of the near return of the Lord Jesus. Those who remember how little this truth was received, even so lately as five and twenty years ago, marvel at the change of attitude, and rejoice that from an ever multiplying number of expectant believers is going forth the cry, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The simplicity and fervour of the prayer in which Mr. Robert Wilson brought the Convention to a close on Friday night will be remembered when some of the more abstruse utterances have passed from memory. He said that sanctification began in the little things of life, and prayed that we might manifest kindness, unselfishness, considerateness for others, and all the unobtrusive graces that sweeten human life—graces which had been shown in his own thoughtful care for the comfort and convenience of the visitors to Keswick.

On Saturday morning a supplementary meeting was held, in which Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and others set forth the needs of the heathen world. We have given a brief report of this most timely as well as stirring meeting. Outside the programme, and not under the arrangement of the conveners, although with their cordial sympathy, the Convention would scarcely have been complete without a practical outcome of this kind.

The Total Abstinence of the Gospel.

BY REV. H. G. C. MOULE.

> "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called. With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love."
> "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." EPH. iv. 1, 2, 31, 32.

AFTER the burning words of the prayer we have just heard from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, we shall feel that words like these are not the least out of place just when we have been reminded of the most urgent, and most impending, and most distinct fields of duty. Another thing I am as thankful for as the prayer we have just been led under, is the hymn we have just sung, which draws the circle of the atoning blood of the Cross around the whole subject of our meditation. There is no other safe ground for meditation (and in the Lord's sight we are now drawing upon his strength in the matter of holiness) than the ground marked out, not only in its entrance, but in its fences, by the wood of the true cross, There, and there only, never farther than his cross, never higher than his feet, must be our place of safety from which to look, and from which in a blessed sense to rise to, the heights where the Crucified sitteth at the right hand of God.

We are met here to think how we can walk and please God in humble reality, and, thank God, we may and we can; but we remember reverently before Him that while, by his mercy, we dare say we can please Him as the Father in Jesus Christ, we know that there is only One who hath pleased Him as the Eternal Judge. It is only in our Lord Jesus Christ as the sacrifice of Calvary, that any moment you or I stand unconsumed before the holiness of God the Judge; and so, thanks be to God for the blood of sprinkling, which our hymn, as it were, has shown us scattered round our meeting; and now within it we will be at peace, and we will take the treasures of peace.

The two subjects suggested by the two limbs of my quotation are very simple, in the strictest sense; but I think they go very straight to the need both of conviction and of comfort of very many Christians whose hearts are really toward the Lord. Observe the first verses. The Apostle has in the third chapter—yes, in the whole of the first half of the Epistle—led us up to the heights of heaven, and back to the depths of eternity. I will not sketch to you the marvellous contents of the first three chapters of the Ephesians. How instructive it is to see that straight from the glories of the third chapter the Apostle comes, in the fourth chapter, as his first deepest inference from it all—to what? To lowliness, meekness, long-suffering—a very humbling proposition, when we think of its conditions, and the things which occasion the need of it.

"Forbearing one another in love." Let us take that precious word to ourselves. It speaks often of deep humiliation to spiritual Christians; but God's humiliations are never discouragements, if they are taken in the light of his life and of his love. This teaches us that the first, deepest, and most genuine inference in life from the reception of the very highest range of eternal truths, is an inference which runs along the ground; an inference which comes down upon the stones and the dust of the common path; an inference which, so far from lifting a Christian off his feet, gives a double watchfulness to his goings in respect of humiliation and humility. Never let us get away from that point. The Gospel never lifts off the feet in this sense; though if you throw your weight upon the Lord you shall "mount up with wings" in another sense.

I wish to draw attention in detail to the last two verses of the chapter—to that very simple yet profound lesson on the Total Abstinence of the Gospel. We have too much confined these two words to one branch of philanthropic effort. They are as wide and as deep as the whole Gospel of the grace of God, and the daily and hourly work of his people. It has sometimes been said mistakenly that those who would caution the Christian against false inferences from Divine promises—as though danger within were to be forgotten, as well as temptation without—were those who allowed a little sin. I hope that may never be said of our moral spiritual theory, and our daily purpose and aim in the presence of the Lord. Total abstinence is the watchword of the Gospel about all sinning on the Christian's part, and, true to the Divine practicability of the Gospel, it loves to press this totality just where we may be easiest tempted to forget it: not concerning some great thing, not concerning the absence of all murmuring when some lightning-stroke falls on our lives, but concerning the feelings in general in our hearts at this hour concerning other people and the manifestation of those feelings in the little things which in their millions make up life.

What does the Apostle say to those privileged believers in Ephesus and in Asia? "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice," a very inclusive word in the New Testament dialect, the whole antithesis to good: "With all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another." The Apostle assumes—and how humiliating, but how gracious the assumption is—the necessity of these things all along. "Forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

Now, dear friends, my few and simple words shall take their whole text from that word "all" prefixed to that list of sins. You remember that striking passage in 1 John, where he says we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. Then, in the next verse, he questions the love of God in one who sees a poor needy one without assisting him. He asks for sympathy of a practical character. There is a poetic meaning of tremendous trial; but is there no risk of being caught in the midst of such references by a trial of our temper; a request for unexpected trouble? But the Apostle means that the two things are of a piece. If you want to be on the road to glorify God in the field you ought to begin now with the very small thing at your feet, to do it in the Lord's spirit and in the Lord's strength, totally abstaining from the opposite.

Now, may I just say—God knows it is with self-humiliation—that in this divinely-chosen list of things to be totally abstained from, the Apostle tells of many a point which is often found to be weak in those who know the Lord, and love Him, and have surrendered their lives to Him, and are true-hearted, and really working for Him. Yes, I must own that these things are not unknown in the inmost circles of the Christian Church. There is a tendency to religious gossip. There is such a thing as the talking over of other people's character and work. Is there no such thing as a certain relish when someone we have disagreed with in Christian doctrine is caught tripping in Christian practice? and our pleasure is not that there is a vindication of the need of watchfulness to Divine truth, but there is that dear and precious thing, "my opinion," vindicated to myself. It is one thing to think sorrowfully, bitterly it may be, over the errors of beloved and honoured friends and brethren in Jesus Christ, because of the truth of God and the cause of God, and it is another thing to think of them and talk of them in an easy way.

Is there no such thing as jealousy for our own work and reputation, which does not make it altogether pleasant to hear of the success granted to some one of another Christian organisation? It may be some one not divided from us by any such lines, but by that great demarcation that it is not number one. Is there no such thing as that? I think there are tendencies to it in every heart, which only the grace of God can counteract.

Is there no such thing as trifling, subtle and very minute, but real, with absolute truth? Nothing can possibly be holy that is not fair, that is not true to known fact, that is not holy as well as pious in its purpose. Deep in the foundations of all that is good in God and in man, the Bible puts down truth in the inward parts. The least shade of a pious fraud is black iniquity in the sight of God. The least conscious exaggeration of fact—for instance, of spiritual success granted to ourselves or to our agency—is dark iniquity in the sight of God, who requireth truth in the inward parts.

And what is close akin to this—the least unwillingness to be brought to book about our own failures is dark iniquity in the sight of God. I do not know what is more likely to cause grief in the Eternal Friend than to see a soul that He loves entrenching itself behind some spiritual theory—it may be theories very different from one another—against the plain duty, in this or in that I have done wrong. There is a great danger of our doing it; I know it. I speak from the depth of my own soul, and also from a large consensus of human experience, and from the witness of that Book. We have been told blessed because intensely searching things to-day and yesterday about that breaking-down which is the prelude of, and the accompaniment to, blessing. Let us take heed of this mountain in us that the Lord never finds, and our neighbour never finds—this entrenching behind any position conceivable, when in some matter of plain duty, of kindness, of carefulness about our words, of charity in tone and temper, when brought to book, we are found unwilling to say, Yes, I am ashamed of it; I need not have done it; but it is done, and now there is nothing for it. It must go upon the Lord's head for pardon, and beneath the Lord's feet for victory at once.

Is there no such thing as an irreverence about God's name and presence creeping into our deepest hours of devotion? I have never forgotten what I read in Jonathan Edwards' account of the great revival at Northampton, in New England, when I suppose the nearest approach to a converted town, seen in the Christian world was seen when manifestations of Divine grace in holiness were marvellous; but, he says, describing the case he selects, because of the peculiar spiritual wonders, "I have seen that person crushed under the sense of sin in one mention of the name of God with inadequate reverence as it was spoken." We cannot be too anxious or too careful when we are speaking of God or addressing Him. There is sin in a carelessly worded prayer. Sure I am, it is as deep as the depths of Divine truth. We cannot afford to let things loose in that way.

Shall I speak of the iniquity of the unthrift of time, that mysterious talent, which, unlike others, is spent and gone. God gives us other gifts—gifts of body, mind, or whatever it may be, to husband; but if He gives us the talent of time, we spend it, and it goes. How do we use it? I do not say use it with restless, miserable, divided anxiety, which will only be greater the further we live from the Master. Am I doing the best thing this moment? Let it always be remembered, we and our time are in his hands, and whether it is for perfect rest or for exhausting work, it and we belong to Him.

There is need to speak of the neglect of absolutely secret communion with God, for which we must never substitute even the inmost intercourse of a chosen circle of Christian friends. Nothing must take the place of the study of the Word of God or the opening of the soul to Him in prayer, where there is not even the temptation to let the experience or attitude of others deflect our consciousness of our own.

I could touch upon point after point, but it is better to remember again the brief catalogue of the Apostle, which excludes the least swelling of internal irritation as much as the most demonstrative expression of ungoverned anger, or the least spur of impure imagination as much as the act of the adulterer. The words would be words of despair, without that Divine ancient truth which we are met in these days to accentuate to ourselves. We never forget that there are other sides of truth; there are thousands of other sides to the infinite truth as it is in Christ, but our work is to accentuate two aspects of one great truth—the truth of practical holiness in our need and in Christ to supply.

And now let us remember that for this total abstinence there is stored up in Him divine sufficiency. Yes, and we are in Him. The feeblest believer is in Jesus Christ, and Jesus in the eternal covenant is in Him. What we want is to turn the fact into practicalisation, if I may use such a barbarism; it is to turn what we have into what we use, and what we know into what we are.

But there is the Lord! I will not think of the infinities of my need except to lead me to the divine simplicity of the infinity of his supply. We are in Him; we derive it from Him. It is not manufactured within, it is derived from above; and it is derived in that most wonderful way—the embosoming of Jesus Christ in the very hearts of his own, by faith and by the Spirit, so that we may say with perfect sobriety, with daylight reality, and with a keen consciousness of the practical aspects of human life, "Yes it does bid one abstain from the whole of this or that besetting sin, which I see now, and did not see yesterday, or, which I had long seen, and thought I might allow a little of; but I know how to deal with it now. I know what it is to lay the whole of it upon my Lord's head, and the whole of it beneath my Lord's feet, and without over anticipation of the future, to know that for the next step He is able to keep me from stumbling, as well as hereafter to "present us faultless with exceeding joy."

GOSPEL MISSIONS' HOLIDAY HOME.

THE Country Holiday Home still makes progress, and daily witnesses to the joy and gladness the poor children derive therefrom. It is among our tenderest experiences to pay "Elm Lodge" a visit, for here we are serenely shut in, not with dingy paper-hangings, but with leafy walls of living green. The perfume of almost numberless fragrant roses, with a score of other less kingly flowers fills the air, while over the verandah is a beautiful vine in full bloom, promising better fruit by and by.

The happy groups of children go and come, the Holiday Home leaving pleasant memories to be recalled a thousand times a day for a long while to come. The looks of the returning parties wear a tinge of sadness the last two days — eyes look into ours with a meaning we cannot miss. But we are obliged, with few exceptions, to be inexorable, not without a fight within our own breasts, for the new party are yearning for Monday and the railway station, and we must keep faith with these.

We are indebted not a little this season again to the sympathy of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for the very kind assistance they send for our Home. It is a work that has its own reward to behold the good so visibly wrought, and the new life and joy imparted to the already care-laden hearts of little London children. The Lord has further answered the prayers of his people in giving manifest spiritual blessing on the Home. Several dear children have this summer written home during their stay, telling their parents of their heavenly birth, happily attesting the same by their subsequent life and conversation.

These many young friends have no means of thanking their kind benefactors, nor have we on their behalf, save through your columns, which we are thankful to be allowed to use.

Yours very gratefully, W. CHORLEY.

MISS SKINNER, of St. James'-square, Bath, has issued two more of her "Friendly Letters" in French, addressed to various classes of the community. We see that a depôt has been opened in Paris for the sale of these leaflets.

ROTHIEMAY, BANFFSHIRE, TENT SERVICES.—Mr. J. A. Smith, Banffshire Gospel Mission, and Mr. Lee, Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen, concluded a fortnight's meetings in a tent here on August 1. Night after night anxious souls were pointed hopefully to Jesus, and the meetings grew in interest and size until the end, when seats had to be placed in the passages. Numbers of the people came from neighbouring parishes.

EAST-END SEAMSTRESSES.

Last April we gave a summary of the plans of the then newly-constituted Labour Aid Society, and as the amount of sympathy and aid which a Society receives depends, in a large measure, on a knowledge of its work, a wider knowledge of the object, method, and results of this Society's work will prove useful. Briefly, its object is to help those who cannot help themselves, and the method, to help them without impairing their self-respect or self-reliance: simply to stand between them and the extortioners, who have waxed fat upon their toil, while the results have been so full of encouragement that the Society has been urged to increased effort.

We will deal at present with but one branch of the Society's work—the seamstresses. It is well known that these women are among the worst paid operatives in London. The fact that they have to spend some sixteen or seventeen hours in arduous toil for so poor a pittance as twelve or thirteenpence is sufficient proof, and it must be remembered that often a family has only this sum with which to buy food and pay rent. Hence, what to others are the necessaries of life are luxuries to the seamstress. There are many instances where the fire is kindled but once in the day to heat the irons. That moment is utilised to boil the kettle, and make the hot cup of tea, which is the only daily luxury the poor family can afford. The need for help in such sorrowful circumstances all will admit. The question is, How can effectual help be given? To that query the Labour Aid Society supplies an answer. Remembering that the "sweater," or middleman, deducts 25 per cent. of the price allowed by the manufacturer, and that, under the system hitherto prevailing, the seamstress has to pay for the articles required in her business at extortionate rates, the Society deals a blow at both of these abuses. It takes the middleman's place in procuring goods, only deducting the bare expense of distribution; and, furthermore, provides soap, thread, silk, twist, &c., at wholesale prices. These additions, trifling as they may seem, raise the workwoman's wages on an average from 5s. to 7s. 6d. per week.

A further advantage, with regard to the sale of sewing machines, must not be overlooked. Sewing Machine Companies, before they let out their instruments on the hire system, require a deposit of 10s., and the payment of an instalment varying from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per week; the average cost of their machines being £6 to £7 10s. If from any cause the hirer fails to keep up the payments, the machine is forfeited to the Company, as well as the moneys which have been paid. To remedy this state of affairs the Society supplies similar machines at about half the cost, and, instead of the preliminary deposit, a satisfactory reference to character is required. The amount of the weekly instalment is also reduced to 6d., and any failure in the payment of the 6d. does not cause the forfeiture of the machine or of the money paid. Should sickness or want of work prevent the payments being kept up, the Society removes the machine to their warehouse, and keeps it till such time as the purchaser is able to resume work. It is then restored to her, and the previous payments remain to her credit. Those who know the poor will realise the immense boon which this arrangement confers.

Now as to the results. It is reason for much thankfulness to know that, by means of this Society, at least one hundred and fifty families have been enabled to live with far more decency and comfort than they could otherwise have done. An instance or two will show the nature and scope of the work: Some time ago a young woman came to the offices of the Society evidently in deep distress. A day's work was at once procured for her at the house of a kind-hearted lady; she went next day, and began. In the course of the morning the lady went into the kitchen and asked her to take some lunch. To her surprise, however, the poor woman had a difficulty in eating. The fact was, she explained, she had been systematically stinted in food for some time, and had tasted nothing for thirty-six hours. A sympathetic listener brought out the hapless creature's story bit by bit. She had been betrayed under promise of marriage, and then deserted. The burthen of the support of a child was added to that of keeping a widowed mother. Privation followed upon privation; everything that the mother and daughter possessed had gone to the pawnshop; the two had then but one dress between them, and what remained for them or for the hapless babe? When asked for reference as to her credibility the poor woman gave the name of a Congregationalist minister, at whose church she had attended. The reference was found to be correct, and, on the minister's recommendation, the woman was supplied with a sewing machine. Both mother and daughter have since been fairly employed, and each week the instalment due upon the machine is paid regularly.

At the present time shirt-makers in the East-end of London earn as little as three farthings per shirt. A woman thus gains only something like tenpence a day for labour which involves permanent injury to her sight. Surely, such a rate of remuneration is pitiably unjust, and suggests a mode by which the poor may be aided. The Society will be glad to receive orders for shirtmaking, in any quantities or qualities, from firms or from private families, and such orders will help to alleviate the condition of these poor women as truly as money donations. Both are needed by this Society, and will be gratefully received and acknowledged by J. D. Link, Esq., the Treasurer, or by Rev. James Monro, Superintendent, at 241, Roman-road, Bow, E.

Y.M.C.A. WORK IN FLORIDA.—A Y.M.C.A. was organised in Orlando about six months ago, and now numbers eighty members and twenty associates. Since its inauguration, two other Associations have been formed in Florida through its agency. An active mission work is carried on; Gospel services, prison visitation, etc.

EMMANUEL MISSION, Devonport-street, Commercial-road, E.—The report of this Mission shows that the sick and poor have been sought and ministered to; the Sunday-schools are flourishing; nearly £200 has been contributed, and a Band of Hope has been commenced. The district contains about 4500 inhabitants, many of whom are temporally and spiritually destitute; and for these the Mission is provided. A full Gospel is preached, and the services are made as bright and attractive as possible. Additional Sabbath-school teachers, visitors, and singers, are very much needed. Rev. J. T. Wyatt is the superintendent.

GOSPEL WORK IN SWEDEN.—Writing from Wilhelmsro, Mrs. E. de Ramsay says that the work at Wilhelmsro and Jönköping continues. Since the Princess Eugenie began to work for the poor Swedish cripples, in a way much more permanent than we as a family could have done, our children have been diminished to twelve, the number we originally proposed. In our journeys to England or France for health, our attention has been turned to the need of Bibles in hotel bed-rooms. At first they were supplied from private means, but, opportunities increasing, the British and Foreign Bible Society arranged to allow half the cost if any well-known persons in a place, or some religious Society, undertakes to distribute and watch over the Bibles when hotel owners have consented to receive them. Fifteen hotels in Paris have received Bibles. In Bordeaux, where we were kept six weeks by illness, thirteen hotels gratefully accepted Bibles. From Berlin, Baden-Baden, and other important places, requests have come for a regular Bible distribution in the hotels, and the Y.M.C.A. and the English chaplains have offered their help. At Jönköping our mission hall has been open all the winter for Bible expositions; and various visitors from abroad have pleaded for their missions there. There is also an interesting institute for our mill girls, who are glad to attend the classes in Victoria House. We also receive at the mission house poor people coming to town for medical help by an eminent oculist. More than a hundred patients had their sight restored last year, not to mention the good influence of the mission house. Various other agencies are the Flower Mission for the hospital, the poor-house, and the prison, the Bible and Prayer Union, Sailors' Mission, Christmas Letters, &c. Our friends are earnestly asked to continue their prayers and sympathy for us; we need them as much as ever,

EXPECTATION.

There's a wild and anxious longing
For the coming of his feet,
And the world is growing weary,
While the pulses quickly beat;
For the air is full of murmurs,
And men's spirits with unrest,
Turning hither, thither, nowhere,
Sore bewildered, and unblest.

For the enemy is rampant
As the time is drawing near,
And his roar is growing louder
With the access of his fear.
He is trampling on the wounded
Who are struggling in his chain;
He is luring to destruction,
While exulting in the slain.

What to him the weeping masses,
Who go softly all their day?
What to him the sin-stained children
By the maelstrom swept away?
What to him the unwashed outcast
Thrown upon the grimy street,
So that men grow hard and stony,
Till they have no hearts to beat?

He is stirring up his legions,
He is marsh'lling to the fight;
With his troops are many nobles,
In their proud Egyptian might.
They have crushed the voice within them,
And are taking now their stand
By the chieftain they have chosen,
And the host at his right hand.

Most impatient for the conflict,
Scenting battle far and near,
They are numbering their forces,
Though they neither shrink nor fear.
With them victory is certain,
They will therefore do and dare;
Of defeat there's not a question,
Not a feeble one is there.

But the hungry, wayworn, footsore,
Like the Israelitish fold,
Are just looking for their Leader,
To defend them as of old.
For He's coming, He is coming,
Not in weakness, but in power;
And the flagging step shall quicken
In the triumph of that hour.

With no sound of booming cannon,
And no musketry or lance;
With no shout of coming struggle,
And no cavalry advance.
With a meteoric splendour
Full illuminating space,
He shall wither up that phalanx
By the brightness of his face.

Speranza.

MUSIC AND MISSIONS.

The value of music is very manifest in mission work, especially abroad. Speaking of the Spanish Protestant Bible-classes, meetings, and services conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Moore at Puerto, Santa Maria, near Cadiz, Miss E. J. Whatley writes:—

"Only lately an extremely bigoted Spanish woman was passing the open door, when the sounds led her to stop and listen. She heard the words, "Eternal Father" (Padre Eterno), and, addressing herself to a young student sitting in the doorway, asked him whether this really meant God. "I thought you Protestants did not believe in God?" she said. The young man, an earnest Christian, entered into conversation with her, and at last lent her his Bible. Two days later she came to him, and said she had never been so impressed by a book before. She said his religion was the right one, and asked to be allowed to keep the book, to which he agreed. This convert has been brought within reach of the Gospel mainly by the effect of the music." The instrument used in this work was lent by a resident who has since left the place, and I shall be glad to hear from any friend who has an harmonium to dispose of, at a low price, for the use of this mission.

Yours faithfully, E. J. Whately

REV. E. P. HAMMOND'S FAREWELL.

A special meeting of the General Committee of the Sunday-school Union was convened on Friday evening, July 30, to enable Rev. E. P. Hammond to give an account of the work he has been conducting among the young in London and the Provinces, previous to his departure for America. Also to hear his testimony concerning the missionaries of the Sunday-school Union in Norway and Sweden, which countries he had recently visited.

Mr. J. E. Tressider presided. Dr. Sinclair Paterson besought the Divine blessing upon the operations of the Union, the work of Mr. Hammond, and that meeting for Conference upon the work of the Lord among the young. The President briefly explained the object of the meeting, and called upon Mr. Hammond to address it.

Mr. Hammond, who was heartily received, said, "he had not come to make a speech, but would gladly answer any questions they might wish to put to him. They knew he had visited Norway and Sweden, and he had been asked to relate a few facts in reference to the conversion of the young in those countries. He had found the people generally very ready to receive "the truth as it is in Jesus." They seemed to thirst after it. He then gave some deeply interesting details of meetings he had conducted in Christiana, Stockholm, and other towns, by the aid of Rev. G. Hubert and other interpreters. He spoke of an interpreter in Florence, a loving Christian man, who was so deeply moved in one of his meetings by the story of the Cross, that he stood before the audience and fairly wept. Blessed tears these, which, with the truths themselves, were full of moving eloquence. Mr. Hammond bore unstinted testimony to the spiritual earnestness of the teachers in Norway and Sweden, and their desire for the salvation of their scholars.

The meetings were crowded, and the Spirit of God wrought wonderfully, so that many children and young people were converted to God. He (Mr. Hammond) never felt more grateful to God than he did in Sweden, when the Spirit of God helped him to hold up Christ and tell the children what He had done for them. The missionaries in Norway and Sweden were deserving of all the encouragement and help the Sunday-school Union could give them. They evinced great anxiety for the conversion of the children, and he believed they understood by conversion the same as Christians here. He had urged those who were converted to join some Christian Church.

About his work for the Lord in London, Mr. Hammond refrained from saying much, remarking that Dr. Paterson and Rev. G. H. Malins were present, and could speak of it. He added, with much real humility and tenderness: "I have been trying to do God's work among the young in this country. I am only the instrument He uses to lead the children to Himself. No credit belongs to me. I believe any man of ordinary powers and suitable gifts, who thoroughly believes in the salvation of children, and entirely gives himself up to Christ for the work, will be used in the same way."

Dr. Paterson then gave a deeply interesting address. He referred to his first acquaintance with Mr. Hammond twenty-five years ago in Glasgow, and bore emphatic testimony to the great power of the Holy Spirit that attended his early work in that city. He said: "Mr. Hammond carried on for some time three meetings, each night in different large churches in the city, as no one building would hold the crowds; and some of those, who afterwards became my best officers and workers, were brought to Christ at those meetings in 1861. Last year Mr. Hammond visited my church at Notting-hill, and, after several crowded meetings, a large number were added to it and the neighbouring Churches. I should think not less than 500 have been professedly converted to God, and are walking according to their profession. Of course, time may, will, in all likelihood, make deductions, but that our Lord has taught all spiritual sowers to expect." The Doctor concluded his address by saying, "We must have faith in the salvation of children. A child soon learns to love its mother, and, I believe, can love the Lord at a very early age."

Rev. G. H. Malins said: "Eighteen years ago I worked with Mr. Hammond in the City of Dublin, and I devoutly thank God for that work. It taught me a firm faith in the salvation of children. I have believed ever since that where suitable means are adopted, in dependence upon God's Spirit, children will be converted to God. At that time there was very little faith in their conversion, and I was among the number of those who cast the bread upon the waters of child-life, not expecting to reap till after many days. I knew nothing of definite efforts for the salvation of children. I well remember those meetings conducted by my friend, Mr. Hammond, in the Metropolitan Hall, and in my own church. Many were the children converted to God. I can bear testimony, direct and personal, that many are living godly, useful lives, who were led to Christ at that time, while a few have joined the Church of the firstborn in heaven. The churches of the country owe a much larger debt of gratitude to God than they have ever realised for blessings direct and indirect received through the work of our dear friend among the young. I have not been able, by reason of domestic affliction, to work with Mr. Hammond in London, as I have wished, but I have attended many meetings in the North and West, and can bear witness to the great grace of God that rested upon them all."

Mr. B. Clarke, Editor of The Sunday-school Chronicle, confessed that he had been among those whose faith was not strong in this special work among the young. He thought, if, through Mr. Hammond's meetings, Sunday-school superintendents, officers, and teachers were stirred up to feel that the conversion of the scholars ought to be their first aim, great good would result. He thought that men like Dr. Paterson and Mr. Malins, who could bear a personal testimony upon this subject, should visit the Continental schools.

Rev. McLatchie, of Glasgow, was present during the first part of the meeting, but was obliged to leave in order to catch his train before the opportunity of speaking came. In his absence a member of the committee stated that Mr. McLatchie was deeply interested in the work of God by Mr. Hammond, his two sisters having been converted to God at his meetings. In the course of the evening a most cheering letter of testimony to the great blessing that had resulted from Mr. Hammond's meetings in Mildmay Hall was read from Rev. D. B. Hankin, vicar of St. Jude's.

Dr. Paterson closed the meeting with prayer, and afterwards all united in wishing Mr. Hammond the Divine blessing upon his future work.

Nineteen years ago, when Mr. Hammond was leaving for America, a similar meeting to the present one was held in the hall of the Sunday-school Union. Mr. John Sands, and others, gave deeply interesting reports of what they had seen of God's power in the meetings in London, that had extended over sixteen weeks.. These accounts, published in the papers, did much to stimulate the faith of Sunday-school teachers and other Christian workers in the salvation of children.

May the same grace rest upon the report of the present one to the glory of our blessed Lord.

BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.—His Grace the Duke of Grafton, K.G., has consented to become the President of the above Society.

MR. EÖLL expects to be joined by a young Christian brother shortly, who will help him in the important work among the sailors at Port Said. Mr. Eöll is much encouraged in the little meetings he holds for French people. He has lately had above eighty-four sailors to help and feed, no easy matter sometimes, with only their own apartments, and no proper Home in which to welcome them. Prayer is earnestly asked for the work at Port Said, that souls may be saved, and added to the Church daily.

Y.M.C.A.—Where to Draw the Line.

Dear Sir,—It really seems time to draw the line somewhere, when we are coolly told that "young men are not to be attracted by Gospel meetings, Bible-classes," &c. As a young man, and a worker amongst young men, I decline to accept so sweeping an assertion as true. Whatever may be the experience of an "Exeter Hall Associate," I maintain there never was a time when the Gospel failed to attract, and eternally benefit all who were attracted by it.

It may be that Gospel meetings fail to attract, but why? Simply because, instead of the glad tidings of Divine love, full and free, of grace that can and does break down every sin in hearts that are fully given up to its working, and which fills these hearts with a joy and satisfaction which asks for no external stimulant, but is fed from the living fountain of life, there is too often no real Gospel, only a weak adulteration of truth, science, and general morality.

If a gymnasium, high-class concerts, and bright social gatherings are the necessary and only successful means by which young men are to be reached, is it not time we found a truer and more descriptive name for our Association than the Young Men's Christian Association? The question at issue is not as to whether it is right of Christian men to use a gymnasium, a high-class concert, or gratify their mutual dispositions by mingling in bright social gatherings—that has never been called in question in the Y.M.C.A.

What is being asked is this: In Associations where the above means of reaching young men receive the foremost—or at least a most prominent place—do we find that the spiritual vitality (which has been, until now, the distinguishing feature of the Association) is better maintained than it is in Associations where such means only obtain a secondary place? I allow all unprejudiced readers to judge for themselves. The world moves daily, but Christianity is surely not obliged to copy the ephemeral whims and fancies of the world to hold its own?

Let us listen to the unerring testimony of the Searcher of all hearts. "For bodily exercise is profitable for a little; but godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come" (1 Tim. iv. 8, R.V.). Let us then, as it has been well said, "put first things first;" and while we provide young men with any recreation or amusements which tend to develope mind and body, unless we go a step further, and give them such training as shall fully develope those spiritual aspirations and Divine capacities which all the world's socialities and wisdom cannot satisfy, then we have failed in the great aim which we, as an Association, have professedly set before us.—Yours faithfully,

David D. A. MacGregor, Secretary.
Y.M.C.A., Notting-hill, W.

THE EMPEROR WILLIAM has given £150 to the Committee appointed to collect money for the new Protestant Missions to the German colonies.

"THE JEW FIRST."—A correspondent writes: "We have been favoured with a visit by our dear friends Rev. Jacob Freshman and his wife. On Sunday morning, July 25, Mr. Freshman preached in the Presbyterian Church, by invitation of the Pastor, Rev. W. A. McAllan, and in the afternoon and evening took part in the Victoria Hall Mission Services. On Monday afternoon he addressed a "Parlour Meeting" in the library of the Y.M.C.A., the first assembly of its kind held in the new premises of the Association, in which, therefore, the Jew is accorded his position of priority. On Tuesday evening Mr. Freshman, habited as a Rabbi, lectured on "The Jews—their Habits and Religious Observances," to a crowded audience in the Victoria Hall. At the close of this lecture, and also at the Monday afternoon meeting, Mrs. Freshman gave a brief but pathetic account of her share in the mission work amongst the Jews in New York. During their stay Mr. and Mrs. Freshman were much cheered by the cordial and affectionate sympathy of Rev. W. W. Andrew, the venerable father-in-law of the late Bishop Barclay (of Jerusalem), who lives near Norwich.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait and sketch of the life of Rev. Prebondary Wilson, D.D., of Islington.

We are sure our readers will bear up in prayer Mr. Varley and Mr. Hannington on their visit to Cape Town, in accordance with Mr. Osborn's letter, p. 14.

A communication from the Paris correspondent of The Standard is worthy of note. The Council of Education has approved the Government proposal for organising at the University a system of secondary education, in which modern languages and practical knowledge shall have the same prominence as is given to Latin and Greek in the existing systems. Henceforth the youth of France can go in for the modern programme, and thus take his degree. This is real advance. It will have a two-fold benefit; it will not necessitate studies in certain branches of very doubtful literature, and will prepare youths for the practical life of their own times. It is to be hoped that England will soon see her way to organising her own secondary instruction.

The warning from Sydney which appeared in The Pall Mall Gazette in relation to young girls induced to emigrate by flattering representations, has been controverted, but lately confirmed by Rev. A. T. Fryer, of St. Philip's, Clerkenwell, and ought to be inquired into. It is affirmed that such emigrants discover, on arriving in Australia, that the inducements held out to them in regard to high wages or marriage, are either false or exaggerated. Young girls find themselves in an unknown country without protector or guide, and learn that situations are already overstocked. In new conditions of life they are met by hardships, ensnaring temptations, and the gravest dangers. Doubtless, Christians in our Colonies are turning their serious attention to the matter, but a word of caution on this side is imperatively called for.

In facts concerning foreign missions we notice that Dr. Bruce writes from Julfa, in Persia, of the signs of revival among Persian Christians as shown by the remarkable spirit of earnestness in the Y.M.C.A., and expresses his conviction that the time seems near when God will open a more effectual door among Mohammedans. In an interesting article on a "Century of Protestant Missions" in The British and Foreign Evangelical Review, it is set forth that, notwithstanding the miraculous gifts of Apostolic times, the results of a century of modern missions are probably numerically as great as in the century that dates from the Day of Pentecost. The article contends, and properly, that more union among Missionary Societies is demanded to avoid collision and waste. The most remarkable fact, however, in relation to the change of attitude concerning missions is that found in the pages of the last number of the Quarterly Review. The article remarks:—

> It would be, we cannot forbear saying, a lamentable and even a monstrous thing that there should be forced upon these missions the evil inheritance of the divisions which sever church from church, and sect from sect, in the lands of the Reformation. We would venture to suggest, for the serious consideration of the directors of missions, whether, in consideration of the incalculable advantage of exchanging sectarian divisions for a united Christian fellowship in newly-converted lands, the various groups of converts might not be gradually prepared for ultimate union on some simpler basis than that of any of the existing churches.

Where are we? Whither are we drifting? Rev. H. Ward Beecher comes from America as the Apostle of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man. He preaches at the City Temple and lectures at Exeter Hall, and appears (according to The Pall Mall Gazette) with Dr. Parker at the Theatre on Saturday night. Leading evangelical clergymen and ministers with others support him on the platform. At his last lecture the amiable and estimable successor of Samuel Martin, of Westminster Chapel, presided, and introduced Mr. Beecher as one of the great teachers of this age. We were taught on that occasion that craft is [not the effect of the Fall, but] the remainder of the animal life in man. And that, as society advances in civilisation, animalism will be eliminated, and the knowledge of the Lord cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

A great many true things were said; indeed, the lecture being upon wastes and burdens of life, and nearly the whole of it relating to the things of the present, was wholesome and valuable within that sphere. But there was an undertone of antipathy to the churches; and they were charged with virulent quarrelsomeness and bitter persecution. In this and other respects the lecture was calculated to shake the faith of those not grounded in the truth. A vote of thanks was moved by a very Broad Church clergyman, and seconded by an evangelical missionary. Things are becoming very mixed. Surely God will sift them.

We little thought, when on the platform with that good and true servant of Christ, Admiral Sir William King-Hall, at the opening of Rev. Henry Bradford's new chapel, Northampton, that we should so soon have to announce his sudden call from earth to heaven. He died of apoplexy, July 29, aged 70 years. An early number will contain a portrait and memorial sketch of our departed friend.

We must give our readers the gist of a very practical and timely paper by Miss E. A. Dodds, which we are sorry to be unable to print in full. "Is it duty," she asks, "or is it indolence which makes many Christians show intercourse with the world?" She speaks of the refined selfishness shown by many in timidly shrinking from any but distinctly Christian society, and of the sickly sentimentality which is often seen when "the friction which polishes" is thus avoided. She urges that every believer should be a missionary, that we should be far more cautious than we are of the pleasant plan of congregating like with like, while we should be far bolder and more self-denying in seeking out ways of entrance into circles that are distinctly worldly. The Romanist makes a way for himself into hostile circles with a view to conversions to his faith; should not Protestant Christians be at least as brave, as eager and aggressive as he? "When change of air and scene is necessary, I beseech you, fellow Christians, not to be timorous, but be ready to enter into any open door, with an especial view to speak a word for the Master." After all, this is only what every true missionary is doing continually in foreign fields. It should not be such a great thing for us at home, with far greater privileges and more comfortable surroundings, to follow their example. We feel sure that, if we were brave and self-denying enough to be as eager to find opportunities of testimony for Jesus among worldly people as we now are to find pleasant and sheltering associations, our usefulness would be multiplied enormously.

Mrs. Reaney has written the following letter to the shareholders of the North Metropolitan Tramways Company:—

> GENTLEMEN,—The kind arrangement made by the Directors, in accordance with their promise at the last half-yearly meeting, "as to the relief of the drivers and conductors," while affording to the employés occasional facilities of shorter hours, does not meet the need I have ventured to proclaim at the last two ordinary meetings of the Company. Eighty per cent. of the drivers and conductors still have a day of over sixteen hours, from the time they commence work in the morning to the time they leave off at night. While thankful to the Directors for the consideration they have given to the subject, I venture to hope on behalf of the men—and in this I appeal for the full sympathy of my fellow shareholders—that more may yet be done to shorten the day's work, so as to allow more hours at home between returning at night and starting for a new day's work the next morning.

The Salisbury Conference of Believers is fixed for September 27 to October 1. Particulars can be obtained from Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, Fisherton Rectory, Salisbury.

A missionary of the London Missionary Society, who is working at Mirzapore, N.W.P. India, in writing to thank an unknown friend, who has sent him THE CHRISTIAN, says: "Occupied with work in the midst of a heathen population, it is refreshing to get news of other workers." Many other toilers in the mission field would rejoice to receive news of their brethren in like manner, and this longing gives an opportunity for those at home to minister to these lonely workers. We shall be glad to send the names and addresses of missionaries to those desirous to forward their own copy when done with, or to subscribe for one or more copies direct from the office.

Clericalism is not confined to the Church of England. It exists in all denominations, and is found even in those which specially protest against it. In fact, it arises from principles which lie deep in the human heart, and which only the grace of God can overcome. The following note illustrates this. The same thing might equally happen in any other body, as well as the one named:—

> With reference to Bishop Ryle on the Laity in your issue of the 8th inst., what do you think of the following? A National School is under the management of a Committee of Presbyterian Ministers. They agree to start a fortnightly prayer-meeting in the schoolroom; they agree that only members of Committee shall conduct the meetings, and some time ago one of these ministers announced to his congregation, in the presence of two members of his congregation, who he knew very well were in the habit of conducting prayer-meetings, that as no minister could attend on a certain evening, no meeting would be held. M. MCC——.

We insert the note in the hope that it may lead to the correction of so great an error.

We regret to receive from a correspondent the following statement in The Brighton Guardian: "The Sunday evening drawing-room entertainments of the West-end are now (the example having been set by the Prince of Wales) all the rage."

IMPORTANT NEW WORK FOR TEACHERS OF THE YOUNG.

220 Pages, Crown 8vo. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS

AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS OVER

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Blackboard,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.

"We give it a hearty welcome. Anything that will stimulate the instructors of our young people to greater freshness and force in their teaching, as this volume is well-fitted to do, is to be hailed with great satisfaction. Sabbath School Teachers, Teachers, Parents, and Preachers to the Young, will do well to look into the book."—Nonconformist.

The Bible Remembrancer.

A very compact Bible Handbook, intended to assist the memory, and to provide in the most ready manner for referring to any Biblical incident or event. TENTH THOUSAND.

With Full Details of the SCRIPTURE NUMERATION — as three, seven, twelve, and so on; an ALPHABETICAL INDEX TO THE PSALMS, by which any Psalm can be traced in a moment; a Key to the various PROMISES OF SCRIPTURE (847 in number); a List of the NAMES AND TITLES OF CHRIST; and a large number of important and valuable Tables and Lists. With Twelve beautiful Coloured Maps.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"A more helpful book for Sabbath school Teachers and others we can scarcely think of."—Presbyterian.

"This is really a remarkable instance of multum in parvo, and the matter will be very useful to the Bible student. The small coloured Scripture maps are admirable, and so is the general arrangement of the little book."
Church Sunday School Magazine.

The Bible Interpreter.

A CONDENSED BIBLE DICTIONARY. By the Author of "The Bible Remembrancer." Containing explanations of more than EIGHTEEN HUNDRED Scripture Words and Subjects. With TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS and numerous smaller Engravings. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. FOURTH THOUSAND.

"A Bible Dictionary of terse and pointed character, and has a valuable Appendix of special interest to Sunday-school teachers.—Christian Chronicle.

"A compact and handy manual of reference which will be found useful by all students of the Bible. The pages are interspersed with numerous engravings illustrating the text, as well as views of places famous in Bible History.
Literary World.

"This is a useful little dictionary of Biblical terms for those who cannot afford any of the large Bible encyclopædias. Small though it is, it contains explanations of over one thousand eight hundred Scripture words and subjects."
The Rock.

Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges. 2s.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE. Chats with the Children about Bible Birds. By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I. With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations. Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive."—Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds, and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found most interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday-school rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."
Christian Treasury.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."—Sword and Trowel.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"In 'BIRDS OF THE BIBLE' we have pleasant chats about some of the birds referred to in Holy Writ, with good illustrations and a coloured frontispiece. The volume is nicely got up."—Christian World.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

INCIPIENT PHTHISIS.—Case of a YOUNG LADY at ALDBOROUGH, HULL.

The patient is the daughter of Mr. Creasser, Chemist, and I received a statement of her case September 17 last. She had suffered long with dry cough, flushings, palpitations, night perspirations. At the time her father wrote she had been losing flesh in face and upper part her body. Medical report was "right lung slightly affected."

In a fortnight, after commencing with my medicine her father tells me), two pounds were gained in her weight, and other good results.

In the last letter, Mr. Creasser writes:—"I am glad to inform you that my daughter, after taking your medicine, &c., for the last four months, is restored to her wonted health.

"I have recommended it to other cases, and have disposed of about 12 of your largest bottles, and shall continue to recommend it, for it has done good to all that have taken it.

N.B.—Patients who reside in the neighbourhood of Aldborough, Hull, are advised to get their medicine from Mr. Creasser, when not wanting special advice from me.

Memo., July 31.—I regret to have heard last week that the patient took cold a short time since; but having resumed my medicine, is getting all right again.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

The Secretary of the One hundred and fifth annual Conference in Ireland of "the people called Methodists," has just reported that there are in Ireland, in connection with the Methodist body, 236 ministers and 24,644 persons enrolled as members. During the past year a sum of nearly ten thousand pounds was granted from the Home Mission Fund, towards ministerial stipends in poor districts, and nearly one thousand pounds in aid of chapel building. Accommodation is provided, in nearly four hundred chapels and sixty rented buildings, for seventy-eight thousand persons. Large chapels are to be erected in Belfast and elsewhere, and altogether a great work is being done unostentatiously by the Methodist body in Ireland.

Many of our readers are familiar with the excellent work which has been done by the "Band of Mercy," the excellent Society founded by Mrs. Smithies, the mother of our late dear friend, the editor of The British Workman, and they will be gratified to learn that an association of young people upon somewhat similar lines, which was set on foot at Newcastle-on-Tyne a few years ago, with the singular name of the "Dicky Bird Society"—a name chosen by the children themselves—now contains on its roll the names of over 100,000 members, nearly 4000 of whom marched in procession through Newcastle a few days since, to attend a special meeting. The Society has for its object, not merely the prevention of cruelty to birds, but to dumb animals generally, and its members are under pledge to be kind to all living things, to protect them to the utmost of their power, to feed the birds in winter, and never to take or destroy a nest. The result of the formation of the Society has been very noteworthy and gratifying, cruelty to animals now being looked upon by the children of the northern counties as "a very bad type of sin." We heartily rejoice over the success which has attended the movement, and wish it still further extension.

To those who are interested in the great questions of the day, the relations between capital and labour, and between rich and poor, the volume by Professor Graham, of Belfast, recently published by Messrs. Kegan, Paul & Co., under the title of "The Social Problem," will be of singular interest, not only because of its valuable statement of facts, but also by reason of its calm and dispassionate tone. Writing upon such topics as the distribution of wealth, it is very difficult to avoid showing a tendency either to the old-fashioned and cruel laissez-faire, on the one hand, or to a sympathetic and almost sentimental socialism on the other; and, although Professor Graham does not differ from Henry George and Hyndman, in having few, if any, practical suggestions to make, or feasible remedies to propose, some of his suggestions being merely Wallace and Davitt's theories in another and diluted form, there is in the volume little of that bitterness which a hasty study of the subject, apart from the difficulties surrounding any settlement, is too apt to engender.

When Professor Graham urges that the remedies for the evils of the existing condition of things must be chiefly moral, we quite agree with him, but that the solution will be found in the directions he points to, we more than doubt. The State appropriation of "unearned increments," equality, not of wealth, but of opportunity, State protection of the working men's co-operation, all these things appear to us to be quite as "heroic" as the suggestions of George and others to which Professor Graham applies the epithet. The world is not ready for them, and when it is willing to accept them, such remedies will no longer be needed.

What the Professor terms a "change in our conception of life," is needed, and in such a moral revolution the real remedy lies. If Christ's estimate of wealth and life were accepted, the gulf between rich and poor would soon be narrowed; but, unfortunately, men will persist in substituting economic laws for the teachings of Jesus, and in attempting to discover, in dreamy disquisitions upon the unearned increment, the remedies for social and moral evils which are summed up in a few concise utterances of Christ as recorded in that first manual of Political Economy, the New Testament.

Preaching recently at Nottingham, Cardinal Manning is reported to have said that he would wish to have the four Gospels form part of the course of study in every school throughout the land, and to have made the statement the basis of an attack upon the Board Schools.

In Ireland, however, the Romish dignitaries seemingly take an opposite view, for in the Education Board national scheme it was necessary to provide securely against anything in the way of Bible reading or teaching being inflicted upon Romanist children, even a text upon the wall being prohibited, and of course the necessity was due to the opposition of the priests to anything in the way of Scriptural education. So frequently does Cardinal Manning give expression to views favourable to the study of the Bible—as, for instance, when he reminded his co-religionists of St. Teresa's saying, that one of the causes of the evils of her day was "ignorance of Holy Scriptures," and added, "she would, I fear, say the same in these days,"—that we cannot but wonder at the little practical result which follows his utterances. For though he can do nothing much with regard to the regulations governing the Board Schools, there are hundreds of Romish schools into which he might carry the reading, not only of the four Gospels, but of the other books of the Bible, if he were to elect to do so.

A firm of publishers in Paris, in announcing the issue of a "Fireside Library," to consist of volumes intended for family reading, and, therefore, to be equally suitable for fathers and sons, and mothers and girls, speak in the following terms of the popular French literature of the day:—

> In presence of the avalanche of filthy, obscene, and densely-corrupting volumes which are cast into Society by the modern Press, it seems right to join other publishers who fight with courage, if not with success, against the lewdness of that anti-social and demoralising literature.

All those who have witnessed with regret the prostitution of French genius and ability in the production of books of a depraved and disgusting nature will join with us in wishing success to this new venture, and will be pleased to note that the first issue is a translation of a book by an English authoress, whose writings deserve the tribute paid to them by the French firm, as being innocent, and those which they can "recommend in all security of mind and conscience."

It is stated that from the recent editions of the Romanist service book, published by a leading Dublin firm, the prayer for the Queen, which formerly stood in the service for the Mass, has been withdrawn by authority. Will any of our readers in Ireland verify this, and state, if possible, upon what authority, or by whose directions, this petition has been struck out?

The modern tendency to take music out of its proper position in religious worship, and to elevate it to almost the supreme place, has no friend in Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, who, preaching on behalf of the London Missionary Society, alluded to the desire exhibited in too many instances to substitute a high-class musical service in place of preaching, and said, "Show me the musical service which is the power of God to salvation, and I will willingly give place to it."

In its proper place, however, music is a valuable adjunct, and there are perhaps few of our readers who have not at one time or another been witnesses of the sacred influence of a simply written hymn, sung simply by a voice consecrated to God's service. Such songs of Zion, are, however, powerful, only because they are the medium through which the truths of the Gospel are conveyed, and they differ essentially from those elaborate pieces in which the words of Scripture are hidden beneath florid, and oftentimes fantastic composition.

Concerning conscious conversion a well-known clergyman and evangelist writes:—

> This question often comes up in dealing with anxious souls. Acts xvi. supplies clear teaching as to conscious and unconscious conversion. The jailor might be able to tell the day, the hour, the place of conversion or baptism. But what about Lydia, "one that worshipped God?" She might not be able to say when she first began to worship Him, though she might be able to say when she obtained clearer views of the way of salvation, and when she was baptized, whilst the jailor could say when he began to worship God. Many a real child of God has been made sad by a want of putting the truth by many good Christians according to the analogy of faith. Could Timothy give the day and the place of his conversion? A CONSTANT READER.

There are cases in which the law of the land and the dictates of conscience do not run on parallel lines. There are cases in which parental rights, divinely given may be forfeited or transferred. In the exceedingly touching case of Rev. Peter Leys, now in prison under the circumstances reported on p. 5, we are sure the sympathies of all Christians will be with the aged sufferer. He has received warm letters of sympathy from his Presbytery and from his church. His daughter asks prayer that he may be sustained in his imprisonment, that the children may be kept in safety, and that the father may be led to faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS has been holding most successful meetings in a large marquee at Dublin during the past month. Not only has the tent been crowded by people willing to hear the simple story of redeeming love, but numbers have professed to pass from death to life, including some Roman Catholics.

LOWESTOFT.—On Sunday evening, August 1, Mr. J. B. Wookey, of the Hackney Y.M.C.A., conducted an evangelistic service in Messrs. Boswell's circus. There was a large attendance. Mr. Wookey delivered an earnest and effective address, and since that gentleman has been staying in Lowestoft, a great deal of good seems to have been accomplished. It is to be hoped the time is not far distant when Mr. Wookey will pay another visit.

"THE SECRET OF ENGLAND'S GREATNESS."

SIR HENRY PONSONBY, being reported to have stated that "there is no foundation for the story" which is connected with our heading, the statement was reproduced in a Devonshire paper, which came under the notice of Rev. Wm. Hillier, who wrote to the paper, enclosing a copy of the letter, which the Earl of Chichester, then the President of the C. E. M. S., was authorised by the Queen to write to Sagbua and the other chiefs of Abbeokuta, acknowledging their present of a piece of cloth, and sending them two copies of God's Word. After expressing a desire that arrangements may be made for an extension of commerce between the English and the Youriba nation, the letter proceeds as follows:—

> "The Queen and the people of England are very glad to know that Sagbua and the chiefs think as they do upon this subject of commerce. But commerce alone will not make a nation great and happy, like England. England has become great and happy by the knowledge of the true God and Jesus Christ. The Queen is, therefore, very glad to hear that Sagbua and the chiefs have so kindly received the missionaries who carry with them the Word of God, and that so many of the people are willing to hear it. In order to show how much the Queen values God's Word, she sends with this, as a present to Sagbua, a copy of this Word in two languages—one the Arabic, the other the English."

While the well-known quotation is not given in so many words, it may be fairly deduced from the letter, and gives its sense. Mr. Hillier also wrote to Sir Henry Ponsonby, enclosing a copy of the letter, and he in acknowledging it said that Earl Chichester's letter "no doubt explains the origin of the story."

A popular error with regard to the presentation has been caused by the engraver, who has represented the Queen as presenting the Bibles in person. This is a mistake; the presentation was made by Rev. Isaac Smith and the late Rev. Henry Townsend. The sentence was probably coined by the artist, who placed it under his picture. The original letter on which it is based is now in the possession of Mr. George Townsend, Cathedral-close, Exeter, the brother of the late Henry Townsend.

UNION HALL MISSION.

THE friends and workers of this Mission spent a good day in conference and service for Christ on Bank Holiday, August 2. According to their custom they gathered for prayer, praise, and exhortation at eleven o'clock, and a spiritually refreshing season was enjoyed. All who came together felt that the presence and power of the Lord was with them. Words of help and cheer were given by several, and much prayer was offered for the Lord's work and workers. In the afternoon, from three to five, open-air services were held in Regent's Park, and many of the poor, who are unable to go into the country on these occasions, heard the glad tidings of salvation. A number of short addresses were given, and the singing of Gospel hymns attracted the people. Many came up and listened for a few minutes, and passed on, while others remained, and appeared to drink in the precious truths of God's Word. In the evening a large company went into the crowded streets, and held open-air services. The workers, standing together, after singing some Gospel hymns, quoted Gospel texts, one after another; these appeared to have great effect upon the people, who were most attentive. A large meeting was then held in Union Hall, in which Mr. S. Blaxsidge. Mr. John G. Matthews, Mr. Robert Bilke, Mr. Frederick Lane, Mr. George Chatton, and others took part. Successful services were also held in the Gospel tent at Kensal Green, where hundreds heard the glad tidings of the Gospel during the day.

We desire to thank God for these occasions, when we can thus band ourselves together, and go forth in happy service for our Lord and Master; and we cannot but regret that many who love the Lord, instead of joining pleasure parties, do not find it a higher pleasure to serve the Lord in the Gospel. The tents belonging to the Mission are now being fully worked nightly, and God is giving evidences of blessing to precious souls. The work of the Mission in the halls is also being prospered of God, for which we give Him the praise. The expenses of the work are great, and there is much need for the practical aid of the Lord's people. Any help sent for this work will be thankfully acknowledged by the director of the Mission, Mr. Robert Bilke, 18, Greenhill-park-villas, Harlesden, N.W.

For the Young.

LITTLE ORPHANS AT COLAR.

ONE Sabbath afternoon my children held a prayer-meeting to lay before the Lord the needs of the Mission. Several volunteered to fast until the service was concluded, and amongst them a caste lad who had lately joined the Mission to be instructed in Christian truths. Next day I received 6 rupees and a note from the gowda, or headman, at the Bethany village—a manly young farmer who looks after the Christian families residing there. His note ran thus:—

> DEAR MOTHER,—Having felt very sorry on hearing that there was no money for the Orphan Home, I prayed, "O God, in whose name it is supported, send money to the Orphan Home." I believe we lack nothing if God is on our side. And He will withhold no good thing from those who walk uprightly. Therefore, dear mother, according to my poor condition, I send 6 rupees. May God send money abundantly. At the same time I send 126 measures of raggi which is God's portion from me. . . . Cast all your burden upon the Lord who cares for you every day. Thus wishing, your dear son,

> OBED DAVANERA.

July 7 is a day not to be forgotten. News spread that "Mother" was in heaviness. I could only trust that "the barrel of meal shall not waste." But from whom could help come? There are no helpers in "Colar" outside the Mission. How sweet it was, when, in the evening, a young woman with her child came to the door, and said, "Mother," and then quietly placed in my hand, without another word, her offering of love. This unexpected gift (nearly half a month's pay) made my heart overflow. Then, in much concern, she wiped away my tears, saying lovingly, "Do not weep, Mother." So I explained that they were tears of joy at her silent expression of practical sympathy.

Shortly after a young father of two fine sons came in, and, without a word, gave more than half his month's pay. The next day another Madras lad came, and asked that he might speak with me alone for a few moments; he handed me this note, wrapped round a rupee:—

> DEAR MOTHER,—What I write is that I came to know that you were a little sorry yesterday. You support so many. You have sorrow yet. God will anyway support. I will also pray to God. A little help may be done by me. I do not mind taking a little less food this month.
> ISRAEL.

Then another young mother came; she gave nearly a month's pay, and said, "If you are sad we are sad too—we do not forget the Lord's goodness to us in days past."

I determined to resume a meeting for waiting on Him daily for daily bread. We have long been feeling the need of showers of blessing; we have been crying out to Him for times of refreshing, and now the Lord has guided us to the time, plan, and those who were to take part in this new meeting for prayer. In their sympathy they have given liberally out of their comparative poverty, and now they will heartily help with their prayers. Commending this corner of the Lord's vineyard to the prayerful sympathies of the Lord's people, I am, yours very truly,

LOUISA H. ANSTEY.

ST. LUKE'S HOME, RAMSGATE.—The friends and subscribers to this Invalid and Convalescent Home will be glad to know that the marriage of Miss Rosalind Hosking to Mr. W. F. Hathaway will not cause any material change in her management and superintendence of this Institution.

REV. JOHN MORGAN, pastor of the Whitfield Tabernacle, Leonard-street, City-road, E.C., has just returned from his annual evangelistic tour in Devonshire. While taking an occasional service elsewhere he has this year held a series of services in Sandford, Crediton, Chumleigh, and Exmouth. The congregations have generally been large for the districts, and the people have been deeply interested and much impressed by the earnest words spoken. Mrs. Morgan has accompanied her husband, and rendered very efficient help in this good work. On leaving the county both the pastor and his wife were cordially thanked by the people to whom they had ministered, and warmly invited to repeat their visit next year.

BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

THIRTY-NINE years ago the first book was printed with Dr. Moon's embossed type, and now we have the thirty-eighth annual report of Dr. Moon's Society before us, and we see that since that time, 160,834 volumes have been issued, a truly wonderful work when we remember that each of these volumes represent an amount of pleasure and profit to the blind, far beyond that which ordinary people derive from their books. During 1885, 5128 volumes were issued, and 1820 plates stereotyped for printing new works—825 English and 995 foreign. The total number of works issued in English is 465, of which 123 are portions of Scriptures and religious works; in foreign languages, 179 books have been issued, making a total of 644 works. A system of home teaching in conjunction with a plan of free libraries has been adopted, and is truly successful. The London Society reports that in 1885 no less than 46,273 visits were made by the teachers to the homes of 2210 blind people in the metropolis alone, and 59,240 volumes lent by the Society's libraries. This system has been extended to the United States and Canada as a result of Dr. Moon's visit in 1882, and now complete sets of Dr. Moon's publications are to be found in the Free Public Libraries at Boston and Chicago. The Society has also made great progress in Australia, and Dr. Moon recently received an interesting letter of thanks for his labours on behalf of that colony signed by 382 blind residents, in the following terms:—

> On behalf of the undersigned blind persons residing in Australia, all of whom are using books printed in your type, I desire to testify our high appreciation of your valuable labours which have resulted, firstly, in the production of an alphabet composed of characters so simple that the blind of all ages and capacities can read with ease. Secondly, in the formation of a library for their use, containing a large selection of religious, poetical, biographical, educational, scientific and general reading; and, thirdly, in the establishment of Home Teaching Societies in various parts of the world, by means of which thousands of our fellow-sufferers, otherwise neglected and uncared for, have been taught to read, and provided with profitable reading, further furnishing their minds with food for healthy thought, and in a great measure keeping them from the contemplation of the awful darkness by which they are surrounded. In conclusion, we desire to tender our sincere thanks for all you have done to relieve the tedium and monotony of our lives, and venture to express the hope that our Heavenly Father may richly bless you in all your undertakings, and that you may be long spared to carry on the noble work for which you are so eminently fitted, and to which you have already devoted upwards of forty years of your life.

A Daily Paper Union is also established in connection with the Society, and embossed cards with suggested subjects for prayer each day have been issued in English and other languages. That the Society is doing a good work amongst the blind, not only from a social and intellectual point of view, but, what is more important, the spiritual, is indisputable, and we hope that it may be increasingly useful in carrying the Scriptures to those who are cut off from the ordinary sources of information. Copies of the Report may be obtained from the Society's office, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton.

SHETLAND.—DEAR SIR,—Will you afford me an opportunity, by inserting this note in THE CHRISTIAN, to acquaint my friends in England, and others in various parts of the world as missionaries, as to my sphere of labour, and the welfare of myself and my family? This is my third year in Shetland, where I have found ample work of an evangelistic and pastoral kind; and as there are many evidences that the blessing of the Lord is being given in connection with it, it is probable that I shall continue here for some considerable time to come. A church was opened last September, and, after enduring hardship from want of available accommodation for my family, a house was erected for us, and has been occupied by us for some weeks past. We have had good health, and we feel that the Lord has been working for us, as well as with us. A kind friend sends us THE CHRISTIAN weekly; others send us books; we are thankful for both.—Yours ever,

WILLIAM FAULKNER.

MISSIONARY GLEANINGS.

CHRISTIAN JEWS IN GALICIA.

The work in Galicia is quietly progressing through the agency of the converts. Of late some have suffered persecution; but they are still in communication with the missionary at Vienna, who supplies them with Gospels and tracts.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND MISSIONS.

Gordon Memorial Mission.—During last year twenty-five were inmates of the Zulu Girls' Home, which the Misses Lorimer, honorary members of the Mission staff, superintend. In the morning the girls attend the Mission-school, but their afternoons are employed in the Home, gardening, doing household work, cooking, learning to cut out and make their clothes, preparing their morrow's lessons, and having their half-hour's daily Bible-class. Those who cannot read are taught by pictures. Beginners only have lessons from the Gospels, but others, more forward in the course of a year, went through Old Testament books to the end of Nehemiah, and, in addition, the advanced class read selected chapters from Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Job, Proverbs, Daniel, Jonah, John, and the Acts of the Apostles.

ONE LIFETIME.

The following is a jotting from The Illustrated Missionary News: "Mr. Moses Miller, of Medford, Mass., who is ninety-three years old, lately sent fifty dollars for the Congo Mission. Mr. Miller was born only one year after the English Baptist Missionary Society was formed, and the same year William Carey sailed for India. His lifetime, therefore, covers the period of modern missions. He was seven years old when the first convert in India was baptized; seventeen years old when the first American Missionary Society was formed; and twenty-six years old when the first convert in Burmah was baptized. Now there are over 5000 missionaries carrying the Gospel to all parts of the world. They are aided in their great work by 29,000 native labourers, and there are nearly 700,000 members in mission churches. What hath God wrought in "a single, brief lifetime!"

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

In February last Rev. Owen Watkins, of Pretoria, journeyed into Zululand to ascertain the feasibility of establishing a branch of the W.M.S. there. At Rorke's Drift he was informed that all the missionaries were still in the Reserve or Natal, whither they had been driven by the unsettled state of the country beyond. Undaunted by this intelligence Mr. Watkins and his devoted companion, a native pastor, travelled on to Vryheid, and, obtaining an official passport letter from the Boer President, and a promise of no opposition should they succeed in arranging to send missionaries into Dinizulu's territory, they passed on through the forest and mountains of 'Ngomo to the Usutu Kraal, which they reached on the 22nd. Here they secured interviews with the young king and his uncle, Dabuka, but with no satisfactory result, and after a delay in uncertainty for some days they were asked to visit the kraal of Nyaman, another brother of Çetewayo's, and Dinigulu's principal adviser. This suggestion necessitated a long, weary walk in that fever country, fording the Sequasi river, and climbing a mountain, under the burning rays of the sun. After all, the council ended in nought; decision was postponed, and the missionaries kept in suspense for four days, during which time they could not get a sufficient supply of food. In the end they had to retire without gaining their point, as provisions were not procurable, and Mr. Watkins was suffering from fever. We have given but the merest outline of the contents of a deeply interesting and instructive letter, which we commend to the perusal of those concerned in the spiritual welfare of Zululand. Under existing circumstances, Mr. Watkins thinks a mission established on native territory would be both dangerous and expensive, but there is no reason why a missionary should not be stationed in Vryheid, the new Boer capital.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Statistics of Christian work accomplished in the Sandwich Islands have been heretofore given in various places, but the following facts brought together by Rev. Mr. Forbes, Secretary of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, will be of interest. The first Hawaiian pastor was ordained in 1849. Since that time ninety-five Hawaiians have been ordained, of whom thirty-eight are at present pastors in the home field, and nine are in foreign service, making forty-seven native Hawaiians who are now either pastors or missionaries in active service. Since 1852, when the first Hawaiian went to Micronesia in company with Messrs. Snow, Gulic, and Sturges, not less than seventy-five Sandwich Islanders have gone as foreign missionaries, thirty-nine of them males, thirty-six females. The total sum contributed at the Islands for foreign missions has been 170,149 dollars 44 cents. Of this amount 133,015 dollars 86 cents was contributed by native Hawaiian churches, the remainder by foreign churches and individuals at the Islands. The contributions of the Hawaiian churches for all purposes from the beginning, so far as can be ascertained, amount to 818,270 dollars 35 cents. This record should awaken our gratitude and stimulate our faith.—Missionary Herald.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

At a village in the Hui-an district (China), the Rev. J. Macgowan baptized several persons. One of these was a doctor, aged about forty-eight, who, during twenty-six years, had been a slave to the pernicious habit of opium smoking. Ten years ago he was led, through reading a copy of John's Gospel, to renounce idolatry; but it was not until last year that he experienced a change of heart. Then, after a serious conversation with a member of the Christian Church in his village, he decided for Christ, and on being told the conditions of his discipleship, said, "From this instant I give up my opium, and I will never touch it again." His sufferings at first were so terrible that on one occasion his wife, thinking to save his life, bought him some opium, which he resolutely refused to touch. Abiding by his determination, he endured ten days of agony, and then was a free man. Ever since he has been preaching for his Master, wherever and whenever, in the exercise of his profession, opportunity has been given. As is natural, his very face bears testimony to the strength of the inward character. In this story we have another illustration of the "expulsive power of a new affection," when that affection is love for Christ. Rev. J. Gilmour is again in Mongolia, making a lengthy visit in the East, where he hopes to work amongst the native agriculturists. His only companion in travel is a young Chinaman.

The Society of Friends have twenty-four missionaries at work in India and Madagascar. In this latter country they have 133 native teachers, and 104 congregations, with over 14,000 children in their schools.

The little Chinese Presbyterian Church in San Francisco gave for Home Missions last year 91 dollars; for Foreign Missions, 158 dollars. The Chinese of Los Angeles gave 36 dollars to one of the native helpers in China to open a school.

Missions in Japan.—We have received a very valuable table of statistics of Missions in Japan, compiled by the Committee on Statistics of the Japan Evangelical Alliance. It shows that the total membership of the missions is 11,678, and that no fewer than 3115 baptized adult converts were received in 1885. Of the churches fifty-seven are wholly self-supporting, and 101 partially self-supporting. The native contributions for all purposes amounted during the past year to about 20,000 dollars.—N. Y. Independent.

Germany has at the present day no small part in the missionary work of the world. There are twelve German Societies labouring in India, China, Africa, the East Indies, Australia, and Palestine. They are represented by 517 missionaries at 342 stations, are employing 2560 native agents, and have in charge 193,975 native Christians. Of these 72,000 are communicants, while 40,643 children are taught in their 790 schools. The total contributions of these Societies last year were 1,276,800 dollars,

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A Conference of landowners, clergy, and others, was recently held at Towcester, to discuss the part payment of wages in drink.

It is proposed to erect a memorial at Liverpool to the late Mr. Alexander Balfour, who was an ardent temperance worker.

At a public meeting, recently, the Bishop of Lichfield complained of the sympathy with which parishioners too commonly regarded clergymen convicted of intemperance, or worse.

The Hull Police Temperance Society has a temporary Home for the destitute, by means of which many have been rescued from the streets and restored to respectable life.

The Daily News, in a recent article, discussed the value of Bank holidays, and feared, in many quarters, they were degenerating into discreditable drinking orgies.

The Women's Memorial Drinking Fountain to the late Mr. H. Fawcett has been duly inaugurated. It is on the Thames Embankment, between Charing Cross and Cleopatra's Needle.

In the United States there are 72,008 ministers and 164,761 publicans.

Brooklyn, New York, "the city of churches," is said to be fast becoming the city of drinking saloons.

In New York, last year, 2248 boys and 1056 girls, under fourteen years of age, were arrested for drunkenness.

The wine producers of the Pacific Coast have unsuccessfully tried to induce Congress to remove the infernal tax on wines.

The eighth annual temperance camp meeting at Silver Lake, Wyoming County, New York, was fixed to be held August 16 to 23.

Nova Scotia has more Sons of Temperance and Good Templars, in proportion to the population, than any other province in the Dominion.

The Gospel Temperance Union, established in Cape Town by Mr. William Noble in 1881, has now nine branches with 7203 members.

On the Rock of Gibraltar there are now 44 taverns and 19 public-houses; but only one bar at which no intoxicants are sold, viz., at the Sailors' Institute.

The Central Women's Christian Temperance Union, of St. Louis, United States, have addressed the Presbyterian Church against the practice of toast drinking.

In the State of New York, last year, crime had increased 33 per cent., since 1880 while the population had increased 20 per cent. Three-fourths of the crime was due to drink.

The Montreal Daily Witness says: The Whitby gaol is now flying a white flag from its turrets in token of its purity, there not being a single prisoner confined within its walls. This is a novel state of affairs, as that gaol used to do a brisk business. Some accuse the Scott Act of this falling-off in criminal traffic.

A KIND INVITATION was given by the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen to 250 inmates of the Homes for Working Girls in London to spend Bank Holiday at their suburban residence, Dollis-hill, Willesden, which was gratefully accepted.

PERSECUTED JEWS.—Mrs. E. A. Finn, the Secretary of the Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews, asks for aid that the Society may be able to deal with the cares that press upon it. She says: "Many poor refugees from persecution in foreign lands have located themselves in East London this year. An application was made to us on behalf of a respectable married couple, lately arrived, and in such utter destitution, that when we went to examine into their need, it was found that the only food they had that day was one pennyworth of bones for the four. In Jerusalem, our visitor (a many years' resident, and an excellent Christian person) found four persons, whose sole provision for dinner on the Sabbath day (when all Jews will provide, as a religious duty, the best meal of the week) was an orange and a bit of bread. A gentleman who lately visited Jerusalem was delighted to find some Jews busily at work on the land at our "Abraham's Vineyard," which he found in beautiful condition, both people and land being well cared for by our Superintendent, a Hebrew Christian. We desire to "plant out" the men as they are trained, and suitable land for their settlement has been offered to us. Active persecution continues in Russia and elsewhere. The Times recently reported a bad outbreak of popular hostility to the Jews in a district of Russia, where the "blood accusation" has been made pretext for violence to Jews and destruction of their property. These incidents are much the same as others which have occurred within the last five years. But few are reported in the newspapers, for the Jews are afraid of provoking ill-will. But they make them known among themselves in order that relief may be obtained from their brethren here and elsewhere. The office is at 41, Parliament-street, S.W

Letters to the Editor.

FRANCE AND THE GOSPEL.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—When Mr. McAll came to Paris to evangelise the working classes, and succeeded in getting them to hear the Gospel, he pledged himself and his helpers to have nothing to do with politics and controversy; that is to say, not to attack Romanism or any other "ism," and leave the authorities to manage their affairs without interference by the Anglais and his helpers. I, therefore, very much regretted to read Mr. Webber's letter to you which compromises this principle, and is likely to have baneful effects, besides being very incorrect in what it says.

Paris is governed by the Prefect of the Seine, and the Municipal Council is not strictly a local Government, it is a power which is "sous tutelle," that is, it may express its wishes, and the higher authorities accede or refuse those wishes according as they are legal or otherwise, and sanctioned by them.

The second paragraph in Mr. Webber's letter of July 15, p. 13, is incorrect in the five statements therein made. The Municipal Council may express any wish, whether about the Princes or anything else, but they are not regarded, if not sanctioned by the higher authorities. Not even that most worthy President, M. Grevy, could bring himself to decide the expulsion of the Princes, but referred it to the Assembly. Nor did the Government sanction the vote by the Principal Council of 10,000 francs to the strikers of Décazeville, but subsequently permitted the distribution of that sum to the needy and suffering there.

Your "Notes and Comments" of July 22 contain references which utterly ignore the bitter character of party journalism in France. They speak of "a powerful journal," and quote its sayings without discrediting them. First as to the Cloaque Républicain. No one can doubt the source whence such an expression could issue; no respectable paper would utter such words. M. de Cassagnac is encouraging revolution day by day, and as to worthy citizens loading their rifles and awaiting the hour, the wish is father to the thought, but I feel at ease and quite comfortable residing here, feeling assured that the actual Government is safely seated in the saddle, and can well bridle its courser.

Only fancy a French journal permitting itself to express itself of the British Government—i.e., "Queen, Lords, and Commons"—as the "British Sewer," and what utter contempt that would convey. To quote French journals, calling them powerful, &c., without discrimination, is likely to produce an infinity of misunderstanding between French and English residents here.

I quote the explanation of the character of the various journals given me by a judicious Christian friend: La Figaro, intensely worldly and Jesuitical. L'Autorité, the journal of Cassagnac, the Bonapartist leader. L'Univers, R. C. Ultramontaine. Le Pays, the former journal of Cassagnac, before the split in the camp. Le Temps, Protestant, not general.

The other papers are not so distinctive, but are respectable: Le Petit Journal, circulation 900,000 daily. Le Petit Parisien advocates philanthropic questions, but Infidel; circulation, 200,000. Le Matin, a moderate but independent journal.

The Government has been wonderfully tolerant hitherto with Mr. McAll, the Salvation Army, tract distribution; Baptist, Methodist, and private efforts. I would to God this liberty may be preserved, but it might soon be in danger.

I have studied to the utmost to manifest all proper respect and deference to the authorities in Algiers. Let us pray for them, and put away every stumbling-block to their evangelisation. There is plenty to find fault with at home, even in those things which we deprecate in the French. Our great blessing is to hausser le drapeau of the Gospel, and as Rowland Hill encouraged young evangelists, preach nothing down but the devil, and nothing up but Jesus Christ. Our business, as English residents among these French, is "to pray for and seek the wealth of the city where we dwell"—the Republic as it is. There are some beautiful features of character among the French in all classes.

I had forgotten to refer to another journal, Le Moniteur, Orleanist and reactionary. It is only with a deep sense of responsibility to God I could force myself to sit up and write these remarks, for it has been a tremendous effort to do so, being still so very weak.

Yours affectionately,
G. PEARSE.

A QUESTION OF CONSCIENCE.

DEAR SIR,—Is a Christian justified in suing, either through the County Court or a solicitor, for a debt contracted in the ordinary course of business? I am aware of the text in 1 Cor. vi. 6. Perhaps this question may elicit a brief reply from one of your many readers.

Yours faithfully, B.

THE JAPANESE VILLAGE.

DEAR SIR,—For the benefit of your correspondent, I beg to say that I came to London in February, 1885, expressly for the purpose of doing Gospel work among the Japanese, and have constantly gone on with this happy work since. I am surprised that any visitor to the Japanese village should imagine that the presence of shrines, &c. in their several compartments should mean worshipping of idols; everything in the 'village' is meant, as far as possible, to convey to the minds of Europeans what Japanese home life is, and, of course, no exception could be taken to little shrines always found in Japanese homes. During my eighteen months' daily visitation, I have seen nothing to lead me to suppose that acts of homage are made before these shrines. I am thankful to say that the Scriptures are much read in the village. Several are interested inquirers, and one, I trust, has passed from death to life. Many Christian families in the West-end have entertained large parties of them in their homes on Sunday afternoons. The presence of the Japanese village offers all Christians an opportunity for doing Christ-like work, and I shall be glad to answer any inquiries made by those in sympathy with them.—Yours faithfully, (MISS) M. M. MCLEAN.

VILLAGE CHURCHES—A SUGGESTION.

DEAR SIR, — It is high time that something definite should be done with reference to our small country churches. During the past few years I have noticed, when visiting the village stations, that the membership, as a rule, is in a very low state, and where there are pastors wholly dependent upon the people, from some cause or another the stipend is so small, and the payments so erratic, that starvation seems to be the only probable outlook.

To remedy this state of things doubtless requires thought and prudence, but something must be started if we are to make an aggressive move. My suggestion would be to obtain some good, earnest fellows, with preaching and speaking power, to accept situations within reach of some of these needy places of worship,—men who would devote their Sunday's and one evening per week to the Lord's work, and win men and women for Christ. Of course it will be said, "such men are scarce;" but I venture to hope there are many who would thus offer themselves, providing business positions were open to them in other places. Firmly I believe this to be one of the many practical ways of going ahead, and, should further help be desired, I think I could find some men willing to thus serve Christ. I hope others will speak out their mind on this question. J. A. STOOKE.

MR. VARLEY FOR CAPE TOWN.

We have received the following from Mrs. Osborn. We regret that it did not reach us soon enough to announce yesterday's meeting.

DEAR FRIEND,—Mr. Henry Varley leaves on August 12 (to-day), D.V., for Cape Town, where meetings will be arranged for him by the Christian Workers' Mission and Y.M.C.A. It is hoped that after spending three weeks in the neighbourhood of Cape Town he will visit some of the larger English towns in the Colony. All who are interested in the spiritual welfare of South Africa are deeply thankful that the way has been opened for him to go out; and we earnestly desire the prayers of Christians that mighty results may follow the preaching of the Gospel in these towns.

I venture to hope that you may be able to say a few words in THE CHRISTIAN with regard to his going; and, if possible, to mention the farewell meeting which is to be held at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Wednesday, August 11. Mr. Hannington is going out in the same ship, in connection with the mission we are carrying on in Cape Town, and to which he is giving his help for six or eight months. You have always taken so much kind interest in the work at Cape Town that I know you will rejoice at this prospect of blessing.

Yours very truly, M. S. OSBORN.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD:

A PLEA FOR WEARY MISSIONARIES.

SIR,—I rejoice greatly that so much has been said and done of late to stir our hearts on behalf of foreign missions, and in view of the open doors which the Lord has opened, to consider the urgent need for more labourers. I have long wished, however, to direct attention to missionaries, who many a year have been bearing the burden and heat of the day. The lengthened sojourn and unwearied labours of some of these in an unhealthy climate render a temporary return to their native land almost a necessity. I know of two at least who I fear may break down entirely unless able to return. There are doubtless others.

Not being connected with any Missionary Society, and having no private means, they are unable to bear the expense of a return to England for themselves and wives. It may be that some at home to whom the Master has given his silver and gold will lay their need to heart. I shall be glad to give particulars respecting these two missionaries, and to receive any money that may be sent on their behalf; or if it would be more satisfactory offerings might be put to a general fund, and placed at the disposal of the committee of the missionary meetings advertised under the above heading.

Besides ministering to the necessity of these beloved labourers, it would be a real service to the churches to have their presence for a time. By their example many more might be led to devote themselves to carry the glad tidings of Christ's salvation to the ends of the earth, and so hasten his coming, for whom we wait and watch.

Faithfully yours, FRANK H. WHITE.

PADRE AGOSTINO DA MONTEFELTRO.

SIR,—The remarks in THE CHRISTIAN of July 29, on this celebrated Italian preacher, induce me, as a resident at Pisa, to send a few facts which I gathered on the spot from persons who had heard him preach during last Lent, as illness at that time prevented me from going to hear him myself.

It is quite true that he attracted such crowds of all classes by his learning and eloquence that the vast Cathedral of Pisa was filled to overflowing, so that people had to go an hour before the time to secure a seat. His earlier lectures were powerful appeals against Atheism, &c.; and he said much that was both good and practical, so that one cannot but hope that many, especially of the educated classes, may have been thus roused out of the scepticism and indifference to religion, which are so prevalent in Italy. But as far as I could learn there was distinctive Romish doctrine in his later lectures, certainly not "the faith of the Apostles" from a Protestant point of view, and, amongst other things, he spoke of the Virgin Mary in the usual way as "the Mother of God."

Padre Agostino belongs to a noble family, and in early youth he wore the habit of a priest, but in 1859 he cast it away to put on the red shirt, and as a volunteer under Garibaldi he proved himself a hero in battle, so that he soon rose from the ranks to be Captain. When the war was ended he married, but, having in a very few years lost both wife and child, he retired from the world into a Franciscan monastery.

It would be well if these few details were to lead Christians to pray for this remarkable man, that he may be truly enlightened and taught of God, in which case he might one day become the LUTHER of Italy. S. H. CARRUTHERS.
7, Westover-villas, Bournemouth.

LAUSANNE.—This town has lost much in the death of Mlle. Adèle Mattley. The victims of intemperance, the needy sick, the poor, and children were the special objects of her case. The sympathetic, loving manner of this young Christian won all hearts.

FRANCE.—The General Assembly of Delegates of the Liberal Church, held in Paris last May, nominated a committee, charged to study the best methods of making Liberal Protestantism known to those persons whose religious needs are not met by the superstitions of Catholicism, nor by the negations of Freethinkers. One result was a meeting held in July, in the theatre at Rive-de-Gier, attended by six or seven hundred of the working-classes. Addresses were given by two Liberal pastors, and received with marked attention and applause. It is hoped that some good will accrue from this movement to the Liberals themselves, thinking that this mission to Atheists and Materialists must turn the missioners from negations and criticisms to definite dogmas.—L'Evangéliste.

Mission and other Appeals.

Ben Jonson Mission School (Harford-street, Stepney, E.).—The Secretary, Mr. George H. Phillips, 61, Turners-road, Mile-end, E., writes: Will you allow me to appeal on behalf of this school, which is in jeopardy of being closed through lack of funds? There is an average attendance of about 350 children, and the workers are voluntary, so that all money subscribed is spent in the work itself.

Scraps for Sick Children.—Sir,—Will you allow me, on behalf of the sick children, to ask if any of your readers will forward me any old text, birthday, or Christmas cards or scraps, plain or coloured, large or small, for filling scrap-books, to be sent to different hospitals, for the benefit of child patients. Any packet of scraps, however small, will be gratefully received by George M. Basebe, 9, Cross-court, Bow-street, W.C.

Kindergartens for Italy.—Miss Carruthers asks for £185 to enable her to open Kindergartens at Pisa and Cisanello, in connection with the Protestant Schools. The necessity arises from the enforcement of the law compelling children at six years of age to attend school. If this plan is not carried into effect, the children will fall under the influence of nuns and other Roman Catholic teachers. Contributions should be sent to Miss Carruthers, 7, Westover-villas, Bournemouth.

Little George-street Mission (The Grange, Bermondsey).—An appeal is made by Mr. James Shurmer on behalf of this Mission, which has been working in Bermondsey since 1864, its formation being one of the results of Mr. William Carter's Mission. Gospel and Children's Services, Sunday-school, Band of Hope, Dorcas Society, and other agencies are in operation. About £80 per annum is raised by the workers, the expenses being about £100 yearly. Communications should be addressed to 4, Gilbert-road, Kennington-road.

Homes of Hope (6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.).—This Society, established in 1860, for the reception of penitent fallen young women, makes an earnest appeal for contributions: For the General Fund (the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day); the Childs' Fund (five shillings would pay for a child for a week); and for law expenses. In every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Henry Thompson, Treasurer, 38, Mincing-lane, E.C.; or William Hornibrook, Secretary, at the Homes.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services at Leicester, being conducted by Mr. F. S. Ball; on a small class about to be held to win souls for the Lord; on children's services at Cage-lane Hall, Woolwich, by Mr. W. Shrimpton.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. — Mr. J. H. L. Christien, organising secretary of the above Society, has been holding important meetings in Carlisle, Maryport, Glasgow, which have been much blessed. At the various places Christian friends rendered the warmest and most efficient help. In Carlisle and Glasgow, foundations have been laid for permanent work in the rescue of the fallen.

GOSPEL WORK IN HOUNSLOW.—With reference to the paragraph under this heading in our last issue, we are requested to state that Mr. W. E. Whittaker, late Scripture-reader at St. Stephen's, Hounslow, being no longer an agent of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association, the Committee of that Society are not responsible for, and cannot undertake to answer inquiries with regard to, his present position and work. We are glad to learn, however, that the severance of Mr. Whittaker's connection with the vicar of St. Stephen's arose solely from divergent views as to the principles and methods of evangelistic work, and not from anything reflecting on Mr. Whittaker's personal character or motives.

Forthcoming Meetings.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 15.—I KINGS XIII.

1.—Bethel was but a short distance north of Jerusalem. This shows how hollow was Jeroboam's excuse when, in establishing his altars, he professed a desire to spare his people the long journey to Jerusalem.

2.—He cried, &c.—"God often meets sinners in the midst of their crimes, with evident tokens of his displeasure, to convince them that their way is perverse before Him; for God delights not in the death of sinners, but would rather they would turn and live."—Henry and Scott.

Behold, a child, &c.—"Probably a prophecy against Jeroboam's own person, instead of against the altar, would have troubled him less nearly. But this showed that his policy would come to nought, and that the power he was establishing would be utterly subverted, while the house of David would still subsist in its strength."—Kitto. "This is one of the most remarkable prophecies recorded in the Scriptures; and, in its clearness, circumstantial minuteness, and exact prediction of an event that took place 360 years after it, stands in striking contrast to the obscure and ambiguous oracles of the heathen."—Jameson.

Men's bones.—"In order to desecrate the altar for ever by a double pollution, since to the abomination of human offering was added the pollution of human bones (Num. xix. 16)."—Keil.

18.—He lied, &c.—The prophetic gift might coexist with various degrees of moral imperfection in the person possessing it." Balaam, to wit. See also 1 Cor. xiii. 1—3.

19.—He went back, &c.—He should have been as sure of the professed revocation as he was of the Divine authority of the original command. The latter came to him from God direct. He sinned in receiving the former from a stranger, and one of somewhat doubtful character (21, 22). "The sin, disobedience to certain positive commands of God, was one which it was at this time very important to punish signally, since it was exactly the sin of Jeroboam. . . . Temporal death is not among God's heaviest punishments. . . . We are not to suppose the man of Judah perished eternally because he perished temporally."—Sp. Com.

This story reminds us that God is often stricter in his dealings with those whom He honours with specially difficult and honourable service, than with those appointed to ordinary duties—e.g., Moses. It is also a sharp lesson in unquestioning, watchful, and unswerving obedience.

MONDAY, AUGUST 16.—I KINGS XIV.

1—4.—Jeroboam's evil conscience led him to plan this disguise. The gifts were such as a peasant woman would make. "He thus foolishly thought to cozen the Lord, through his prophet, out of an answer of peace, and slyly to evade the judgment he feared might be connected with it; and he idly calculated that the prophet, whose view could extend into the future, could not see through a present matter wrapped up only in the thin cover of a woman's hood." Similar folly is still common. In their want or trouble men sometimes seek God, even while they hide wickedness in their hearts: they stand before Him as suppliants, and yet there is a lie in their right hand.

9.—Hast done evil above all, &c.—"Jeroboam was the first ruler who set himself to turn the Israelites away from the true worship, and established a poor counterfeit of it, which he made the religion of the great mass of his subjects."—Sp. Com. And hast cast Me behind thy back.—"This expression, occurring again only in Ezek. xxiii. 35, denotes in the strongest manner wilful disregard of God, and is stronger than the expression, 'To cast the law behind the back' (Neh. ix. 26)."—Keil.

12.—The child shall die.—"Briers, thorns, and thistles wither not so soon as lilies and roses. God's darlings oft die betime."—Trapp.

13.—Some good thing.—"When there is but some good thing, it will be found. God that seeks it, sees it, be it ever so little, and is pleased with it. Those who are good in bad times and places, shine very bright in the eyes of God. To show the power and sovereignty of his grace, God will have some out of the worst families in whom there is some good towards the Lord God of Israel."—Henry and Scott.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 17.—I KINGS XV.

1.—Abijam.—"Called also Abijah (2 Chron. xii. 16). Abijah signifieth, The Lord is my Father; but because he walked not in the ways of David, therefore is Abijah called Abijam, My father is a sea. Indeed, Rehoboam (his father) was inconstant in good, wavering like a wave of the sea."—Trapp. "The change was probably due to the religious feeling of the Jews, who would not allow the word JAH to be retained as an element is the name of so bad a king."—Sp. Com.

4.—Nevertheless for David's sake, &c.—"The idolatry of Abijam deserved the same punishment as that of Jeroboam, the cutting off of his seed, and transfer of the crown to another family. That these consequences do not follow in the kingdom of Judah, is owing to the faithfulness of David, which brings a blessing on his posterity. Certainly few things are more remarkable, and more difficult to account for on mere grounds of human reason, than the stability of the succession in Judah, and its excessive instability in the sister kingdom. One family in Judah holds the throne from first to last, during a space but little short of four centuries, while in Israel there are nine changes of dynasty within 250 years."—Sp. Com.

13.—And also Maachah, &c.—The position of the Queen-Mother was the highest in the court next to that of the King himself. Asa's action was very bold. He began his reform at the right end —at home.

18, &c.—Then Asa took, &c.—From a political point of view, there is no fault to be found with this step. But as a servant of God Asa erred. See 2 Chron. xvi. 7, &c. "This league with Benhadad arose from unbelief. Even true believers find it hard, in times of urgent danger, to trust in the Lord with all their heart. Unbelief makes way for carnal policy, and thus for one sin after another. Unbelief has often induced Christians to call in the help of the Lord's enemies in their contests with their brethren. Such victories weaken the cause of religion, and end in shame and bitterness."—Henry and Scott.

29.—According to the saying of the Lord, &c.—"The fulfilling whereof Baasha aimed not at; but the wise God effected it. The devil, and his imps, do God's will, though oft against their own will." —Trapp.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 18.—I KINGS XVI.

7.—And because he killed him.—"Though the destruction of Jeroboam had been foretold, and though Baasha may be rightly regarded as God's instrument to punish Jeroboam's sins, yet, as he received no command to execute God's wrath on the offender, and was instigated solely by ambition and self-interest, his guilt was just as great as if no prophecy had been uttered."—Sp. Com.

9.—Drinking himself drunk, &c.—Elah should have been at Gibbethon directing the siege; but he was a man of low tastes. "When an Oriental monarch indulges in intoxication, he is expected at any rate to do it secretly. He is further precluded by etiquette from accepting the hospitality of his subjects."

13.—And by which they made Israel to sin.—"Height of place ever addeth two wings to sin, example and scandal, whereby it soareth higher and flieth much further."—Trapp.

22.—The people that followed him prevailed.—"From a comparison of the dates given in vv. 15, 23, and 29, it follows that the contest between the two pretenders lasted four years."—Sp. Com.

34.—In his days did Hiel the Bethelite build Jericho.—"This seems to be adduced as a proof of the general impiety of Ahab's time. The curse of Joshua against the man who should rebuild Jericho (Josh. vi. 26) had hitherto been believed and respected. But now faith in the old religion had so decayed, that Joshua's terrible malediction no longer exercised a deterrent power."—Sp. Com. Hiel must have done this with the distinct sanction —probably at the command of—the king.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19.—I KINGS XVII.

1.—Elijah the Tishbite.—"God never yet wanted a man for any work which He had to be done." "The times were fit for an Elijah; an Elijah was fit for them. Next after Moses, there was no Old Testament prophet more glorious than he; none more glorious, none more obscure."

3.—Brook.—Better, The torrent course.

5.—I have commanded the ravens to feed thee.—This chapter gives us sublime views of God's providence. Whether the visible agents be ravens, or a poor heathen stranger, a feeble widow woman ready to perish, it matters little. His majestic, "I have commanded," is enough. Whether it be ordinary or extraordinary, natural or supernatural, obey they must. His people must be fed. "Whosoever acknowledges the living God, will confide in his omnipotence, that He can cause his servants to be nourished even by ravens, although they are otherwise the most voracious of birds."—Keil.

7.—The brook dried up.—"The chapter before us is full of faith—nothing but faith." The stream decreased day by day before his eyes. "It is such slow processes that try faith most of all. There are many having a faith strong enough for any sudden, great, and heroic deed—for one who can maintain his confidence unshaken in the midst of such slow trials as this."—Kitto. Even resources which God gives, and specially appoints for our personal use, are apt to fail, as Cherith did. He alone fails not.

12.—I have not, &c.—"It is God's glory to help at a pinch."—Trapp. An handful of meal.—"She was no niggard of her last handful. Her barrel and cruse had thereby no bottom. The mercy of God crowneth our beneficence with abundance. Not getting, but giving, is the right way to wealth."—Idem. Two sticks, &c.—"'Two' is equivalent in Hebrew to 'a few,' as among the Germans at this day."

13.—First, &c.—What a trial of faith, and what faith to stand such trial! First give me your last meal, and then God will preserve you. Surely the faith both of Elijah and of the widow was as miraculous as the miracle recorded in this chapter.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20.—I KINGS XVIII.

17.—Art thou he that troubleth Israel?—"Those who procure God's judgments do the mischief, not he that foretells them only, and warns of them." —Henry and Scott. Ahab blamed Elijah for the drought, because he could not see his own sin. Blind Ahabs are legion.

21.—How long halt ye between two opinions.—"Halt" does not mean to stand still. It has the old English meaning of "to go lame, to limp," as a man would who walks with each foot on a different level. The Israelites are exhorted to decide for Jehovah or for Baal, and to endeavour no longer to combine the worship of the one with that of the other, as though they were identical. This had been Israel's error, as it is, in spirit, the peculiar temptation of our own generation.

"Under the old dispensation, as under the new, nothing was more abhorrent to God than a profane neutrality in matters of vital moment—than the lukewarmness which admits not of decided opinions. He likes decision. He wishes something real. Be hot; be cold; be something."—Kitto. The people answered him not a word.—"Some say they feared to pronounce for the Lord in the presence of the king and the priests of Baal. Some say that they feared to pronounce for Baal in the presence of Elijah. But it is our humble opinion that they were silent as careless men, shrinking from the trouble and responsibility of decision."—Idem.

27.—Cry aloud, &c.—"This is one of the few examples of ridicule to be found in the Scriptures, and justifies the use of that somewhat dangerous weapon on proper occasions."—Kitto.

31.—Twelve stones.—Thus reminding them of "the number of the tribes, their real unity in God's sight, and the sin of their separation."

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21.—I KINGS XXI.

4.—He requested that he might die.—"Seeing how often the lapses of great and good men follow closely upon the moments of their highest exaltation, there is reason to suspect that Elijah had suffered his mind to be too much elevated by the great deeds he had accomplished, and by the notion in his mind that he alone of all Israel had maintained his faith untainted. It was therefore necessary that he should be humbled, by being allowed to feel his own weakness, and to know that of himself he was nothing. For this correction it was only necessary that the Lord's hand should be withdrawn from him for a moment, that for a little while he should be left to himself."—Kitto.

8.—Went in the strength of that meat forty days.—It is Christ, the Bread of Life, who makes men strong. They must be strong who eat plentifully of that bread. Many of us are weak simply from soul-starvation; and we starve without reason and sinfully.

12.—A still small voice.—"Storm, earthquake, and fire are symbols of Divine punishments. Not in these Jehovah appears, but in the sound of a gentle breeze or soft murmur—the sign of the nearness of God (Job iv. 16), which is the love that endures the sinners with sparing mildness, with patience and long-suffering, and delays the punishment as long as mercy is possible."—Keil.

18.—Yet I have left Me seven thousand, &c.—"God's faithful ones often are his hidden ones (Ps. lxxxiii. 3), and the visible Church is scarcely visible. God pleases Himself in hidden treasures. It is enough that his own eyes behold his riches. The sight of his faithful ones sometimes hath been lost, but never the being."—Henry and Scott.

ORPHANAGE FUND.

THE SPEZIA MISSION FOR ITALY AND THE LEVANT.

At a meeting recently convened at the Bank of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., J. G. Barclay; Esq., in the chair, it was felt that, while the Spezia Mission for Italy was doing such excellent work in the country among the young and adult population, it was now most desirable that a Mission so signally blessed of God, which had entered on its 21st year of Christian labour, and which had gradually secured such hearty co-operation of Christians of various denominations, should now become more extensively known as an Agency largely adapted to be a blessing to the Italian people. It was also considered that—as the orphans Mr. Clarke took on himself the responsibility of supporting after the visitation of the cholera some two years since are not as yet able to enter the Home, because it is yet unfinished for lack of the requisite means—it is most important to make known this fact, and to urge the importance of soon raising the remaining sum of about £1,000 for the finishing the Home, the building the necessary School-rooms, and the furnishing of the same, &c.

The friends of the orphan, friends of Italy, and the friends of the necessitous, will rejoice to learn that in God's providence persons eminently fitted to superintend the Orphanage have been raised up to undertake this duty as soon as required.

Subscriptions towards this work of mercy will be thankfully received by

F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, City, London;
ELIOT HOWARD, Esq., J.P., Walthamstow, near London;

of whom also inquiries can be made respecting the work.

P.S.—A kind response for the Orphanage Fund has already been received. May others follow till all needed has been received.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS,

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every Fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, Queen Victoria-st. (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

ETERNAL LIFE:

Where to Find it, and How to Obtain it.

By HERMANN LIEBSTEIN, Barrister-at-Law.

"Now what was true with reference to the ancient people is true with reference to us. What we need is just the same as that which they needed—life; and the fountain where alone we can find life now, is just the very same which nearly three thousand years ago was pointed out by Amos to Israel—Jehovah. And the way in which we may and can obtain life now, is none other than the old way—seeking Him who is its fountain."

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR INVALIDS.

Many persons of both sexes are never well, although not actually invalids; health in its fulness is a stranger to them. They consider themselves, and are considered by others, incurable, because they have been so long in a state of semi-invalidism, solely dependent upon a relaxed condition of the nervous system, which does not permit the sufferer to exert that will-power which would at once overcome this condition. What is needed is an abiding energy which medicine cannot give. Is it not to natural external influences that the physician consigns his patient when his skilful treatment has done its utmost without restoration? We say, then, why leave the most effective means out of the prescription at the commencement, allowing the spirit to hunger and pine to powerlessness, while seeking in vain to inspire a living energy from inert but noxious and irritable compounds? For while medicinal treatment is being directed to the symptoms, it too often happens that the affection, or, more correctly speaking, its cause or causes, are allowed to assume a chronic type.

"The remedy is simply to supply what we understand to be a positive influence to the negative condition of the system. This positive stimulus, operating on the blood, strengthens and vitalizes the inner man, urging the system to demand its proper nutriment during digestion, and to efficiently bestow those constituents to the general welfare of the body. The dyspeptic, unnourished, finds every function of body and mind fail him, because the mal-digestion of his food prevents the formation of health constituents for the blood. The natural impetus of Magnetism stimulates this latent function, by securing a better secretion of gastric juice, and a more healthy nervous and circulatory condition. And so throughout a long catalogue of general and specific affections, Magnetism, by its peculiar qualities, affords a natural power to overcome disease. The marked and speedy effect of this stimulating influence arises from its natural affinity to the nervous force with which it allies itself, aiding the recuperative powers of the system, heightening its vitality, increasing its resistance to all unfavourable external influences, inducing so radical a change in the whole organism, that, if the weakness is not entirely overcome, it is kept in abeyance to a degree fully credited by those only who have proved its efficacy."—The Philosophy of Health and Healing, by B. Copson Garratt.

From Mr. HUGH McLEOD,

London, N.W.
June 30, 1886.

"I am reminded by seeing in The Christian* the testimony of one of my friends to whom I recommended your treatment, that I ought long ago to have acquainted you with the favourable result of your treatment in my case. It is about four years ago since I adopted it, previous to which I may say, that for three years, through obstinate and chronic constipation, I had not enjoyed a single day's good health. Since acting upon your advice, however, by the blessing of God, I have recovered, and now, do not know what it is to be unwell for an hour, much less a day. I have pleasure in recommending your treatment to my friends, some of whom are deriving benefit as I have done."

Full particulars, and advice may be had gratuitously, by personal consultation or by letter, upon application to B. Copson Garratt, 16, Finsbury-square, London, S.E.

OBITUARY.

MRS. E. ASHBY.

It is with deep regret that we record the decease of a dear sister, the wife of Mr. Edmund Ashby, of Glenburne, Southampton, which took place on July 11. She was prominently identified with Christian effort in Southampton, and was well known to many of our readers as a faithful worker in the Lord's field. Some of her writings have appeared in The Christian. Her chief characteristics were her unselfish and unwearying efforts for the good of others, and especially for the salvation of souls. She was well known, locally, for her loving work amongst the poor. Her chief work was a Flower Mission, which she originated and worked systematically on a large scale, before the days when that became a recognised branch of Christian effort. Her plan was to distribute personally as many bouquets as possible, and so, being brought into contact with the sick and the suffering as well as with those in health and work, she was better able to enforce the Gospel message attached to the flowers. Many of the poor of the neighbourhood, including the inmates of the workhouse, will remember her kindness, and the bouquets and texts which she used to distribute. Besides the local Mission, a large number of flowers and texts were supplied to various Missions in London and elsewhere, and it is hoped that this Flower Mission may be continued. About 2000 people assembled at Southampton Cemetery to witness the funeral, which was conducted by Staff-Captain Cooke, of the Salvation Army, and the occasion was used to address a word of solemn exhortation to the gathering.

MR. JOHN COLVILLE, OF CAMPBELTOWN.

We deeply regret to announce the death of Mr. John Colville, of Burnside, Campbeltown, N.B., which took place at Ardrossan on the 27th ult. He had been in somewhat poor health all the winter, having taken severe cold, with influenza, as far back as November last. From this he never seemed completely to rally.

Mrs. Colville writes us: On my remarking, not long before his departure, that it would be delightful to see Jesus, "Oh, yes!" he exclaimed, with great delight, "I wonder when I shall have done looking at Him!" and then, when I spoke of my being left in such loneliness without him, he added so lightly: "My beloved will just trust Him, and lean upon his arm, and He will guide her, and lead her, till He brings her home too."

About an hour before his death he engaged in prayer, when his whole soul seemed rapt in praise and adoration as he considered what God had done for him in his marvellous redemption. He spoke of himself as "a hell-deserving sinner," rescued by God's beloved Son from the "very edge of hell," and this, that he, together with each one so redeemed, should be "welded to God, and consecrated to God, to worship Him, to serve Him, and to dwell with Him delighted for ever." This last expression—"with Him delighted for ever"—was three times repeated in the prayer. Indeed, his whole soul seemed lost in adoration and praise. After this he spoke but little, and about an hour after, with one little word more of endearment and parting which he could not finish, he fell most peacefully asleep in Jesus.

The thought of the Resurrection had greatly filled his mind during those last days, and in the afternoon, in speaking, he had drawn lessons of comfort from the case of Martha and Mary, quoting most emphatically the words, "I am the Resurrection and the Life. He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believe thou this"? He passed away on Tuesday evening, July 27, and truly his end was joy and peace.

And now he "being dead yet speaketh." From all parts of the kingdom come testimonies like this: "The most Christ-like man I ever knew." "The holiest man it was ever my privilege to know." Hundreds throughout the length and breadth of the land speak of him as the means of their conversion. He was honoured above most in winning souls, and his personal dealing with the anxious was marked by its kindliness and its earnestness, but above all with the determination, with God's help, to win the soul by any means to Jesus.

Early in life he expressed to a friend that he would "like a bright crown," and later, as years rolled on, when from time to time one or another wrote or thanked him for some blessing through his instrumentality, the word would usually be, though often the tears welled to his eyes, "The Lord be praised!"

With him the winning of souls for the Master was his daily and hourly aim, and his frequent remark, as he came home from labour of this kind, sometimes spent and weary, would be, "Some good promise," "Some nice reaping among the sheaves to-night," "The Master be praised." The great day shall declare it; but already he has heard the "Well done" of the faithful servant, and "absent from the body" is "present with the Lord," whom he so dearly loved, and so faithfully served while on earth.

The Secretary of the Y.W.C.A., 14, Finsbury-square, E.C., thankfully acknowledges gifts from Little Children at New Galloway, and flowers from Friends at Dorking.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch gratefully acknowledges for Evangelistic Mission: Anon. £5 for Tent Work; Anon. (Jersey), stamps, 1s.

A KIND OFFER.—A Christian gentleman offers to take the place of any overwrought metropolitan Christian worker who would like a fortnight or a month's holiday. Of course he will do this in an honorary capacity. Apply through Mr. R. Burns, Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.—A gentleman, who desires his name to be concealed, called recently upon the Director, and, stating that he had listened with much interest to a lecture delivered by him some months ago upon the perils and needs of the smacksmen, handed him £2300 to cover the entire cost of building and equipping a seventh Mission vessel to cruise with one of the North Sea trawling fleets.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—Prayer is earnestly desired that God will prosper his own Word, and the personal dealing of Christian friends with the little girls at Lowestoft this summer. Two separate parties will be received there. Freeing these tiny toilers for ten days from their artificial and arduous life, and placing them amid happy and holy surroundings—where thoughts may turn from nature to the loving Father above—is certainly a desirable object, tending to deepen the spiritual work in their hearts. "You have brought sunshine to my heart, and saved me in body and soul, showing me how to find comfort, and how to trust in Jesus for everything." So writes a young widow to Mrs. Courthope Todd—anxious to support her children in some other way than the stage-dancing, to which for years she has been accustomed. The Society's visitors report that many are under conviction of sin, and others rejoicing in their Saviour. An "Employment Home" is in contemplation, and pecuniary aid is all that is needed to complete the joyous task of "bringing in the sheaves." The "full corn in the ear" can hardly be hoped for while the children remain under stage influence. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Courthope Todd, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

AN EAST-END GARDEN PARTY.—Recently a few ladies and gentlemen met at a garden party to hear some particulars of the Salvation Army's work for the reclamation of discharged prisoners carried on under the superintendence of Mrs. Railton, at Devonshire House, 259, Mare-street, Hackney. Many ex-convicts were present to speak for themselves. I looked upon them with much interest. Their appearance was a motley one. Some had faces of the Bill Sykes character, but most of them had pleasing countenances, and those who spoke did so intelligently, and with nothing that could be called a feeling of bravado at their past career. On the contrary, several displayed deeply marked feeling, as they spoke of their deliverance from drink, tobacco, and sinful habits. In more than one case conversion, and a desire to live henceforth to bring others to the Saviour, was avowed. The prisoners are taught suitable trades, but conversion, and not merely reformation, is the object sought. The methods used, are I believe, the same as those employed with such marked results in Australia, where the Government has voted a sum of money for the support of the Army Reformatory Homes. It is to be hoped that some such aid may eventually be furnished to Devonshire House; but meanwhile Mrs. Railton is crippled for want of funds, and greatly needs £100. Friends who may visit the Home at the above address, or send donations, may be assured that their money will be well spent.

THE LATE PREBENDARY WILSON.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.)

ISLINGTON is the largest parish in London. Its population has risen, within the last fifty years, from 30,000 to 300,000. This fact says much for its rapid growth. The people found there belong to the class which makes England great. They are not aristocratic, nor do they boast of having in their midst many men of eminence in literary and scientific circles, but they are honest in purpose, straightforward in action, and contented with their lot. They owe much of what they are to the faithful ministries they have been favoured with. They have had Hambleton, Mackenzie, Vincent, Pennefather, Dr. Boultbee, and last of all, but by no means least, DANIEL WILSON. This man of God, whose work on earth ended a few weeks ago, laboured among them for more than fifty years, and has left on them an impress hard to remove. His best memorial is and will be the good he did and the lives he blessed. His career shows what consecrated activity can do. He built churches to meet the wants of an ever-increasing population. He selected pastors to feed the flock of God in these churches. He inaugurated and guided the Islington Church Mission, which was and is a power on the side of righteousness. He was a fearless champion of the faith, in this age when its defenders are lukewarm. He was a model minister in the attention he paid to all the branches of parochial duty. Such a man deserves more than a passing notice. He was first and foremost a Christian, so it is appropriate that some record of the life he lived and the saintly influence he wielded, should appear in our pages.

Daniel Wilson was born at Oxford, in November, 1805. His father was the well-known Bishop of Calcutta and Metropolitan of India. He owed more than he could ever repay to the prayers and training of his father, who brought him up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The beauty and grandeur of the Christian life were carefully set before him. In early boyhood he decided to become a minister. He went to college, and passed through the prescribed routine of study. From the beginning he made usefulness rather than greatness his ideal. He did not seek scholastic honours; his desire was to learn what should best qualify him for the work he had chosen. He graduated in 1827, and in the following year was ordained a deacon. His father, who had watched his progress with loving and anxious eyes, gave him weighty advice as he entered on the ministry. He told him that the best preparation for preaching was to study the Epistles to Timothy and Titus on his knees, and that the secret of success lay in taking Christ for his theme, in making the salvation of souls his object, and in humbling self daily that God might be exalted. Such advice could not fail to touch the heart and strengthen the purpose of the young curate. His sense of its value grew as he tried to put it into practice.

In 1829 he was presented to the Rectory of Worton. He remained there for three years, and learned how to preach and visit. The experience he gained fitted him for the larger sphere he was called to in 1832, when the living of Islington, vacant by his father's appointment to the Bishopric of Calcutta, became his. He was young in years for such a charge, but he was old in the wisdom taught by dependence on the Holy Ghost. The work he now took up was never laid down till God summoned him to higher service. For fifty and four years he faithfully discharged the duties of his incumbency at Islington.

He early reaped the benefit of having his father for his predecessor. The parish was in admirable order, and its organisations were the best of their kind. He did not overturn existing arrangements, but carried them on. He was ably seconded by his wife, who proved to him a true helpmate. She was a woman of rare consecration and activity. All she was and had were cheerfully laid as an offering on the altar of the Lord. Her services were not confined by the bounds of her husband's parish. She sent wise and comforting letters to missionaries in foreign lands, which cheered them as water from the spring cheers the thirsty and way-worn traveller. She became a mother to the orphan children of India, rescuing them from the degradation of heathenism, and leading them to the Saviour's love. She raised large sums of money to help Wilberforce and Clarkson in their crusade against slavery; and she wrote books which were to their readers a light in darkness and a joy in sorrow. When she died in 1863, her husband felt as if his right hand were gone, and his people lamented a loss which could not be replaced.

The best and happiest lives are the quietest. Mr. Wilson's life was not marked by stirring events. He found the work God meant him to do, and did it with all his might. He delighted to preach "Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The realities of eternity were so distinct to him as to make the pleasures and ambitions of this world shadows. He cared for the temporal welfare of his parishioners, but he cared more for their spiritual welfare. He could not sit idle and see their souls starved. His responsibilities increased with the population. In 1851, he discovered that nearly 28,000 men and women were beyond reach of the ordinary church organisations. They had to be reached, but how? The problem was solved by the formation of the Islington Church Home Mission. Evangelists were sent into the highways and lanes to preach the Gospel and gather congregations. The work of the evangelists was followed by the erection of churches. The Islington Church Extension Society, which was inaugurated in 1856, had for its object the raising of a fund for building ten new churches in six years. It did that, and more. It set an example to other parishes, and furnished the idea out of which grew the Bishop of London's Fund. Mr. Wilson's herculean task did not end with building the churches and filling them with congregations; he had also to choose the clergymen best qualified to undertake the pastoral charge of the churches. Great tact and wisdom were needed for this duty. Fortunately, he had both. His appointments showed that he knew how to put the right man in the right place.

These efforts in the cause of church extension are in themselves enough to constitute a lasting memorial to Mr. Wilson, but they did not by any means exhaust his activity. He was untiring in good works. He counted nothing strange to him which had for its aim the temporal or spiritual prosperity of those around him. Religious and philanthropic societies had the benefit of his counsel and help; parochial organisations felt the touch of his masterly guidance; and every evangelical movement found in him an earnest and able leader.

His loyalty to the faith delivered to the saints was unswerving. He did all that in his power lay to keep it pure, and to rebut the attacks made on it. This feature of his life-work stood out in special prominence at the Islington Clerical Meeting, instituted by his father, and carried on by him with striking success. These meetings were full of inspiration and value for clergymen. Topics of current interest were calmly and prayerfully discussed at them; and when they were over, workers for God felt that their souls were blessed and their faith strengthened by them. Mr. Wilson almost invariably occupied the chair, and he never ceased to draw the attention of his friends to the undisguised infidelity, the Romanising tendencies, and the religious indifference, which were coming in upon the Church as a flood. His words of warning struck a responsive chord in his hearers, and made them more zealous in lifting up the banner of the Lord against these foes of Christianity.

Mr. Wilson was for many years a leader among the evangelical clergy. His name was a tower of strength, and his opinions were received with respect. He had great influence. As Vicar of Islington he was patron of many livings. His office as rural dean made him chief of a body of brethren who looked to him for guidance in perplexity and the order which should shape their course in action. He was born to command. He had a courage no difficulty could daunt, and no opposition could frighten. He spoke with the authority born of conviction of the truth of what he said. His speeches were never long, but they always carried weight. His feet were on the Rock, so he was sure of his position. The Bible was the standard by which he tested ideas, and his one rule of doctrine and practice. He did not bend to popularity, but sought to be ever on the side of truth and right.

The service of his long and laborious life cannot be put into words. He was one of those faithful stewards who needed not to be ashamed. Now that the work he did is finished, we can do nought but thank God for the grace He gave his servant, which enabled him to serve so well in the vineyard. His methods of operation were characterised by a freedom unshackled by regard for man's censure or praise, and an earnestness which realised that, "Whoever fears God fears to sit at ease." The weary worker is at rest, but we know that his is not the rest of idleness. In the words of saintly Samuel Rutherford, "What he could have done in this lower house, he is now upon that same service in the higher house; and it is all one. It is the same service and the same Master, only there is a change of conditions."

The end came quietly. He had been ailing for months, but on the Sabbath before his death he was able to preach in his own beloved church. His subject was the Parable of the Ten Virgins, and he treated it with his old power and earnestness. He spent the evening with his sick daughter, to whom he read one of Mr. Vaughan's sermons, and for whom he prayed with touching tenderness. On Monday he was seized with a liver attack. On Tuesday he got worse, and, as evening fell, with the sublime words of John xiv. echoing in his ears, he passed to where Beyond these voices there is peace.

His funeral service was a sight to be remembered. The rain poured down, but it could not prevent a loving people from paying their last token of respect to their venerated pastor. The church was crowded with a congregation made up of all sorts and conditions of men and women. The rich were there, and also the poor, who had heard words of life from lips which should speak to them no more. The poorest wore a bit of mourning, though it was but a black ribbon on an old bonnet. Every seat was occupied, and a silence that was felt awed the large assembly. The bell tolled, the organ pealed, and the oak coffin, covered with flowers, was carried down the central aisle. Then loud and clear rang forth the immortal words, "I am the Resurrection and the Life, saith the Lord: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." These words brought new hope to the mourners. Sorrow fled away, and joy filled their hearts. Their pastor was not dead; he had only gone before.

The secret of the influence Daniel Wilson wielded is not far to seek. It lay in his piety and enthusiasm in God's service. He had much force of character. He was straightforward in speech and action. He did not often appear in a fascinating light to the man of the world, because he strove to be useful more than to please. His manner was abrupt and brusque, but under the rough exterior was a tenderness like that of a mother. In sorrow he was ever welcome. He knew how to give the healing touch, and speak the comforting word. Principle was everything with him, policy nothing. In the face of error he was like a rock, and that immovable courage made him a power for good.

His teaching centred in the doctrines of the Reformation. He had no sympathy with the new theology. It was his ambition to walk in the footsteps of McNeile, Simeon, Venn, and the other evangelical lights, with whom he was associated in youth, and whose memories served to him as a beacon in old age. He hated innovations, and loved the path trodden by his sainted friends.

He was not a popular preacher, but that was because he despised the tricks by which popularity is often gained. He remained to the end true to his early resolution—to seek usefulness rather than greatness. In the pulpit he was Scriptural, simple, and practical. He spoke as a dying man to dying men and women. He was determined that no rhetoric or verbosity should conceal the truth he was anxious to set forth, so his language was such as could be understood by the common people. The motto of his ministerial life was that of Paul, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." He did not care to be controversial in an age of controversy; his one desire was to point sinners to the "Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world." Would to God there were many such men in our pulpits! The Church and the world need them.

This brief and imperfect record of a good and brave man we would lay as a memorial tribute on his grave, with the prayer that his mantle may fall on the brethren he has left behind.

MR. SAMUEL MORLEY.—We regret to learn on inquiry that Mr. Samuel Morley, though not retrograding in strength, is still in a very weak and dangerous condition.

EVANGELISATION IN HUNGARY. — Herr Haupt has been visiting the Baptist churches, and preaching the Gospel in several towns of Hungary and Bohemia. At Buda Pesth, where Pastor Meyer has been a very earnest and successful worker, there is a Church of 700 members. Everywhere the preacher was welcomed, and found no official hindrance to his work, yet the fifteen million Hungarians seem to have fewer labourers than any other nation.

FRAMSDEN, SUFFOLK.—Interesting mission services were held in this parish recently by Captain W. H. Dawson, who gave Gospel addresses every evening, and Bible-readings in the afternoon on the vicarage lawn, which were well attended. On the Sunday the mission sermons were preached morning and evening by Rev. G. Everard, vicar of Christ Church, Dover (who for ten years had preached the Gospel in Framsden). The large church was quite crowded, many coming from a distance to hear their old pastor. The following Wednesday, at a large public tea, many more had the opportunity of meeting him, when addresses were given by Rev. A. J. Begbie (vicar of Framsden), Mr. Everard, and others. Tokens were not wanting to show that the saving Word and the sanctifying Spirit have prevailed during the mission. B.

KESWICK CONVENTION.—3.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

On the closing day of the Keswick Convention, Saturday, July 31, a meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, for the purpose of awakening Christians to a sense of the duty of evangelising the world. The large tent was quite full most of the time.

Mr. Radcliffe's fervent words stirred the hearts of all. He began by saying that this meeting was not for the missionary cause, in the ordinary sense of the word, but for the evangelisation of the world. He had been greatly impressed by the size of Russia, and its immense population of ninety-six millions, and by the smallness of the efforts which had been made to spread the Gospel there. He then proceeded to give some facts gathered from an address delivered by Dr. Somerville before the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland. Dr. Somerville estimates that there are 440 millions of Christians, including Roman Catholics, Greeks, and others, while there are a thousand millions still in total darkness. Mr. Radcliffe gave a striking picture of the way in which the Gospel spread in the early days of the Christian Church. The Apostles were only intended to remain at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, but it was not until persecution arose that the Christians were scattered abroad preaching the Word. They needed to be whipped out into work. After Stephen's death 10,000 preachers were driven forth into the countries round about. If the acts of the 10,000 had been written, this tent would hardly contain the volumes. But one whipping was not enough. History tells us that the early Church suffered nine or ten persecutions, and each had the result of spreading the Gospel further. What a blessing it was that the Christians did not stay at Jerusalem!

Dr. Somerville says that there is a thick veil, not only over the minds of the Jews, but over the minds of the bishops, clergy, and ministers of Great Britain, and, indeed, over almost all Protestants, which prevents them from seeing the duty of evangelising the world. It is not only money that is wanted, but men baptized with the Holy Ghost. We are wasting the Lord's labourers in little England and little Scotland. An invalid man, in Keswick, said to Mr. Radcliffe that he prayed that Christians might be routed out of their nests, or that their nests might be taken from under them, that they might go forth to carry out their Lord's last command. We want the land shaken. God has been pouring out great blessing upon us this week. Shall not the heathen feel the result of this Convention? God will do great things, and rivers of blessing shall flow into the heart of India, Africa, China, and the islands of the sea.

Mr. Radcliffe then invited any of those present, whether brethren or sisters, to offer up very brief prayers, one after another, and many responded. After this he read several quotations from "A Missionary Band," a most valuable book, containing an account of the going forth of Messrs. Stanley Smith, Studd, &c., and also passages from the writings of many English and Scotch divines, all testifying to the tremendous importance of missionary work.

At this point in the meeting, Pastor Stockmayer was asked to say a few words, before leaving to catch his train. He said, "Our first word was Christ, and all our brethren who spoke did it for Christ. Let us take Christ's last command back to Christ, and have it from Himself; that is my parting word; be united to Christ, and do all for Christ."

Mr. Radcliffe then called upon any missionaries and missionaries' wives or widows who were present to rise and read with him the 14th, 15th, and 16th verses of Matt. xiv., after which he said a few words on the motive which should stir us up to interest in this great cause—"If ye love Me, keep my commandments."

Rev. F. E. Wigram, Hon. Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, said a few words, urging Christian to pray for the missionaries and also to inform themselves about the work. He mentioned that he and his son were soon to start on a twelve months' tour among the Church Missionary Stations in all parts of the world, and asked to be remembered in prayer.

After prayer had been offered by Mr. Broomhall, Secretary of the China Inland Mission, Mr. Spencer Walton made the suggestion that those who conduct missions, or take the lead in Conferences in our own country, should bring forward the missionary cause at the close of their meetings as a fitting channel into which the zeal of young converts might be directed.

Mr. Broomhall then asked for special prayer that much wisdom might be given to those who have the responsibility of selecting missionaries from among the numbers of candidates who offer themselves.

This long and interesting meeting was closed with prayer and the singing of the Doxology.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

These meetings, with their quiet, holy calm—so restful to the hearts of all gathered there from far and near—came to a close on Friday, July 30, and God has, we feel, fully granted the prayer which opened our first meeting: "Not to Keswick, but to Thee may each heart look for blessing."

Mrs. Rowan and Miss Nugent, who conducted the meetings again this year, were assisted on Thursday by Mrs. Gilkes, Miss Hay, and Miss Wingfield Digby; but the keynote of each speaker was the same—the vision of the Almighty, humbling us to the dust (Job xlii. 5, 6), and causing heart-searching, lest anything in ourselves should hide his beauty from our souls. The longing of all hearts seemed expressed in Mrs. Rowan's prayer, on Tuesday: "Search us, keep us low, Lord Jesus. Alone with Thee, may we see Thee."

The opening meeting led us to consider Jesus as seen in vision by St. John (Rev. i. 9—18) in the midst of the golden "lampstands" (R.V.), walking in and out, and right round each one that bears his light, his eyes searching each heart, and yet so tender in their searching, revealing barrier after barrier He wants removed, in order that He may fully bless. He will only reveal that He may deal with each. Cheering the heart cast down because the door to victory seems hopelessly closed, by "Fear not. I have the keys. He can open the gates both of victory and praise to the soul that lies at his feet."

On Wednesday we were stirred by earnest words from Miss Nugent to recover lost ground. (1 Kings xxii. 3). The first thought being, that the ground is ours, and therefore we have a right to claim it. A possession given to us by God, but through our carelessness usurped by Satan. Only let us not look to human helpers, but to the Lord only. A verse given by Mrs. Rowan (Luke i. 74) showed that we might claim deliverance from all our enemies, our besetting sins, all that hinders his gift of peace in our hearts, surrendering ourselves in active and passive consecration, accepting, and doing his holy will moment by moment, "I trust Thee to keep me this day," not next week, thank God! Several hindrances to our "being delivered" were then pointed out.

On Thursday the thoughts to which we were led seemed concentrated. Yet, with infinite powers of expansion, in the verses given by Mrs. Gilkes, Miss Hay, and Miss W. Digby, "I can of mine own self do nothing," spoken by our Saviour, so truly applicable to ourselves. Yet all we need, cleansing, clothing, anointing, provided for us in Jesus, our High Priest (Exod. xl. 12—15). "The yoke destroyed because of the anointing" (Isa. x. 27), and we may claim in Jesus' name that yoke of sin to be destroyed in our hearts.

A thought which brought comfort to many hearts was given by Miss Nugent. "The cleansed leper (Lev. xiv.) was anointed as well as Aaron. Shall we now take the place of cleansed lepers, and claim the anointing from the very hand of our High Priest?"

These heart-searching meetings closed on Friday, leaving us still low at his feet in confession, but believing and knowing it was the place of blessing to all prepared to yield, follow, and obey wholly. Our hearts can truly say, "He hath filled the hungry with good things," "He hath regarded the low estate of his handmaidens."

For the Young.

"I NEVER THANKED HIM."[*]

A Christian lady in the south of England was sent for to see a Gipsy boy who was dying, and in the course of her gentle pleadings with him, she thrice repeated the text, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16). He looked for a few moments intently upon her, then, with life's last effort, gasped—"And I never thanked Him."

"I never thanked Him:" no, poor lad, for he had ne'er been taught
To know at what a costly price his precious soul was bought.
No loving hand e'er led him to the Father's house of prayer,
To hear of all his goodness, and of all his mercy there:
Of the once despisèd Jesus, so gentle and so kind;
The Friend and Great Physician, to the halt, and maimed, and blind.
He had never heard of Jesus, and his redemptive plan,
In taking on his sinless soul the curse which fell on man.
The name of Jesus was to him a new and wondrous theme,
And lingered on his opening mind like some enchanting dream.
He lay in speechless ecstacy upon his bed of straw,
While the fervent lady visitant repeated o'er and o'er,—
"God loved the world so boundlessly, though fallen and defiled,
He sent his own begotten Son, as Bethlehem's promised child,
Whom angels worshipped at his birth, and shepherds came from far,
With joyous steps, to gaze upon the Bright and Morning Star—
That whosoe'er in Him believed, his mighty power to save,
Should perish not, but triumph o'er the cold and narrow grave.
What this dear Saviour did for them, who lived in days gone by,
He'll do for thee, in Him believe, and thou shalt never die;—
But life, eternal life, is thine, eternal rest He'll give,
Eternal glory all thine own; oh! now believe and live."
The message of salvation came, as soft refreshing showers,
Upon the thirsty blades of grass, and nature's drooping flowers.
His soul revived, he realised, in death's momentous hour,
Christ's unimaginable love, and resurrection power;—
He raised his wasted, weary frame, while fell a grateful tear.
"I never thanked Him:"—few the words, yet full of heavenly cheer.
His spirit calmly winged its flight to that bright world above,
Encircled by redeeming grace, and everlasting love.

* * * * * *

How do we thank the Saviour for reclaiming what we lost,
Our glorious inheritance, at his transcendent cost:
Just merely thank Him with our lips, where fellow-Christians meet,
Join in the sweetest hymns of praise, and commune at his feet;
Then back into the busy world, amongst its careless throng,
Forgetting we are not our own, but unto Him belong;
And when confronted by his foes, we ought the truth defend,
Deny, like faithless Peter did, our ever gracious Friend.
O, let us thank our Saviour, with a deeper love than this;—
Pour forth the precious spikenard upon his head, and kiss
His feet, like devoted Mary, or lean upon his breast
Like John, the beloved disciple, and get our souls refreshed,
By the nearness of his presence, and music of his tone,
Till our hearts make full submission, and bid Him reign alone;
No more to merely thank Him when we unite to pray,
But by a pure and holy life, to thank Him every day.

"THE MINISTER OF THE FUTURE."

At the annual meetings of a large, orthodox denomination, the President, in delivering his inaugural address, also delivered himself of his views as to "the minister of the future." This is what he said:—

> What are the essentials in the minister of the future? In providing for the minister of the future, we have to consider the requisites to meet conditions altogether differing from those of the past, but which can be premised from the habits and customs of society as they are developing from their old phases into new and changed conditions. In the first place the ministers of the future will have to face an audience differing in feeling and education from those of the past. . . . From henceforth the preacher will have to appeal to the intellect, and not to the emotions. He will have to address himself to those who will appreciate all the labour and culture he will bestow upon his pulpit orations, who will be quick to discover, and not slow to resent, any attempt to pass off an unfinished article by tricky artifice. While the preacher of the future will deal with those who will closely criticise his effusions, he will at the same time have auditors who will not withhold their meed of praise when it has been deserved.

These and similar remarks were received with "loud applause" from the assembled ministers and delegates. As the question has been brought before us, not only in this case, but in many others lately, it may be well to inquire what, after all, the work of a minister is. A minister is a servant, professedly a servant of the living God. If he be truly such, his business will be to follow THE true servant of God, our blessed Lord Jesus, in such a manner as to say: "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me." But what does the above-quoted speech look like? It makes out a "minister" to be a man who appears before the public as a refined literary entertainer. He must carefully prepare his pulpit orations; his utterances must be subject to criticism or praise; he must appeal to the intellect, &c.

It is not of the least use to cloak matters here; silence is sinful; the fact remains, that this idea of preachers and of preaching is fast becoming the popular one. But is it right because popular? Vox populi vox Dei in the majority of cases is a lie. Vox populi vox diaboli would be more true very often.

Ought the people to be thus considered? Let God's Word decide, and if it be of any value, let its decision be final.

JONAH did not like to be an unpopular preacher; it was against the grain for him to cry out against the sins of the city, and deliver God's message to them. Like a coward, he ran away. We all know the sequel: brought back from the gate of death, he had to fulfil his commission after all. Jonah's business was not to "carefully prepare his pulpit orations;" or "to appeal to the intellect." As a servant of the living God, his one business was to deliver God's own word to the people.

Note again the case of JEREMIAH. "Thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak."

And in every case in the Old Testament we find the same. The servant was not to invent his messages; "carefully prepare his pulpit orations;" "appeal to the intellect," or any such thing; he was to act thoroughly, as a servant of God should.

We find it exactly so in the New Testament. In delivering his disciples the great commission, our Lord said, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

When the seventy were sent out, every detail of their way and work was mapped out for them; nothing whatever left to their own invention.

Paul, a man of great ability and education, nevertheless counts it all loss that he may win Christ. Writing to the Corinthians he deprecates man's wisdom and learning in dealing with the things of God, and speaks of God choosing "base things," "weak things," &c., for his glory.

The conclusion of all this is very obvious. Is it any wonder that the churches are in such a frightful state spiritually, when their ministers are thus exhorted? It is a mournful thing that such coldness and worldliness prevail, and the way to increase it is to work on the lines suggested by the President of these meetings.

Was the pulpit ever intended to take the place of the board-school? It seems a mockery to ask God to bless small talk on "refined human nature," and bits of sentiment that are useless. It is a fact, and useless to deny it, that many men who are now in the ministry are there for a living only. It is considered by many a "respectable thing," and that is all. But what about the hungering souls of men, our sinning brothers and sisters, the weary wanderers after peace, who, when they come for bread, are fed with a stone?

What about the adultery, and licentiousness, and vice of this age? Who is to rebuke it? The vapid, inane stuff that is often spoken from the pulpit, in lieu of the blessed Gospel of Jesus Christ, has no power to stem the tide of wickedness that rushes along. If men consider it their duty to "appeal to the intellect" and neglect the heart and life, what can be expected as the result but unchecked vice? It is a fact that many of our most highly educated men are the worst sinners.

We do not depreciate education; on the contrary, it is absolutely necessary that men who stand up to address their fellows, should be able to speak in such a manner as to win their attention and attract their hearts. It is to err in the opposite direction to assert that men who preach the Gospel have no need of refinement or education. Many of our most earnest and faithful preachers are men of high standing, and great literary attainments. The great mistake is when these things are relied upon, and made the sine quâ non of a servant of Jesus Christ.

If the minister of the future (or of the present, either) wishes to imitate his Master, and be useful in bringing sorrowful humanity to know the meaning of true joy, peace, and power; and to lead the people of God to higher knowledge of the Saviour, and make them in turn, forces for good—he must be prepared to yield himself entirely to God, to be used exactly as God desires, either for pleasant or for unpleasant work. In a word, the true minister must be a man full of the Holy Ghost; in living sympathy with his Divine Head; ready to every good word and work.

The old-fashioned doctrines and methods are going out of date, at least, in the estimation of many, and there needs a united voice of the faithful in this matter, speaking with no uncertain sound as to what they believe.

But if anything can be worse than direct departure from the truth of God, it is the holding of orthodoxy with the head, and giving the lie to it in practice.

Men who speak or write thus are dubbed alarmists or fanatics; but it is a matter of profound thankfulness that there are evidences here and there of true life and zeal in our holy religion, even although it is to be feared that these zealots are few and far between. Let all who are faithful to God and his truth keep their vigil, for the morning shall soon break, and "blessed are those servants whom, when the Lord comes, He shall find watching." F. C. SPURR.

MISSIONS TO THE JEWS.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

An important decision has just been arrived at by the Committee of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. It is to the effect that a deputation, consisting of the Treasurer, F. Y. Edwards, Esq., and Secretary, Rev. J. Dunlop, together with Rev. Aaron Matthews (one of the agents of the Society), should visit the United States and Canada, with a view to awaken wider interest on the part of Christians in those vast lands in relation to the work of God among the Jews. Distinct intimations of the guiding hand of God have been given leading the Committee to take this step, and when the large number of Christians in America is considered, and the fact that the claims of the Jews upon the zeal and love of the Church of Christ have had but little advocacy on the other side of the Atlantic, it is impossible to regard the proposed tour with anything less than deep interest and prayerful sympathy.

The honoured brethren who are going forth to this labour of love on behalf of Israel are well fitted for their task, two of them having recently spent some months in visiting the various foreign stations of the Society's work, and all having had lengthened experience in connection with the object aimed at. Wherever Christian regard for the Jew is manifested Divine blessing invariably attends its development, and, while largely increased efforts on behalf of Jewish Missions may be expected to result from the visit of the deputation, in the proportion that this result is secured will reflex benefit be bestowed upon those whose hearts are drawn to the work. As at the beginning of the Society's history, the British Churches who shared in its operations were greatly stimulated and blessed, so our American brethren may find in their reception of this testimony widespread spiritual advantage. The earnest prayers of the children of God are asked that doors of usefulness may be opened before our friends, and their tour be made in every way to redound to the glory of God. They are expected to sail for New York this month.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S ORPHANAGES.—A sale of work to raise funds for the above Institutions was held on August 2, in the Waterloo Workman's Hall, near Andover, Hants. Although the hall is in a thinly inhabited district, probably not less than two thousand persons were present during the day. The total amount raised was £110 16s., of which £12 15s. 10½d. was given by various friends, the remainder being the proceeds of articles sold. The articles disposed of were all sold, nothing being raffled or disposed of by any system of chance. As soon as possible a statement will be sent to all those who contributed either money or articles, and sincere thanks are offered to all who kindly helped. When printed, friends of the Deacon can have the statement on application to Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover, Hants. H. T.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY have lately been enlarging their sphere of labour in taking several new mission halls on their plan. At the beginning of the year they took a hall in Old-street, opposite the Hall of Science, as a standing protest against the anti-Christian proceedings conducted in that place. Amongst the means employed are open-air services just outside the hall both morning and evening, at which many professed sceptics are present. The latest step is the taking of a notorious public-house in High-street, Poplar, which is now being transformed into a mission hall, to be opened shortly, when every agency likely to benefit the bodies and convert the souls of the poor people resident in this crowded neighbourhood will be used, including the total abstinence movement, so that, instead of ruining their bodies and souls, we trust that by uplifting Christ for their salvation, many will be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in sending you below some extracts from letters just received from our friends holding services at the seaside.

Yours faithfully, T. B. BISHOP.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE (Mr. H. G. Harris, Aug. 9).—"Yesterday (Sunday) had a capital gathering in the afternoon on the rocks of 350, mostly children. Many old friends are here again from Bath, Clifton, &c., and there is a prospect of a good band of workers this summer. Mr. J. Patterson (Cantab) was helping me in speaking to the children. Sunday evening, at 7, a drawing-room meeting, for boys only, was crowded; they all stayed at the close for a short prayer-meeting, and we found some of them had been brought to Christ through Mr. Arrowsmith's work at Clifton."

LITTLEHAMPTON (Mr. Alfred J. Barnard, Aug. 5).—"We distributed bills last evening at many of the lodging-houses, and spent the first hour of the morning from 10.30 in distributing leaflets and notices of the meetings to the young folks on the sands, in many cases meeting with a most encouraging response. Mr. Carruthers has a little portable American organ, which was used to-day, and acted as a rallying point. The singing of a hymn brought many together, and so began our first meeting. Numbers were fairly good, about 150 to 200 altogether."

HASTINGS AND ST. LEONARDS (Mr. W. F. Seagrove, Aug. 10).—"Our first service was held on Sunday afternoon on the West Hill, and we had a bright, happy start. Monday morning, however, gave the best sign of the previous two years' work. We held it on the beach, and had the largest meeting ever held there, to my knowledge. A minister present counted and estimated those present at over 1000, which shows a great advance for Hastings. Last night we had another large meeting. This morning we had our hall nearly full. To-night a grand meeting. The noticeable facts are the number of friends ready to help, quite a number compared with former years, also several clergymen; Rev. H. B. Nicholl, curate of St. Mary's, helping greatly. To-morrow night, all being well, our first Lantern Service will be held. We are looking for great things. May the Lord greatly bless his own work, and keep us all low and looking to Him."

SCARBOROUGH (per Mr. A. R. F. Hyslop).—"Mr. Arrowsmith arrived on Aug. 2, and on Tuesday the work began in real earnest. The service began with a fair attendance for the first meeting. The adults were numerous, and seemed to listen very attentively, so that you can imagine after this service we thanked God and took courage. On Friday morning (Aug. 6) after the prayer meeting, we held the most largely-attended service we have yet had—many of the older people listening attentively from the end of the Spa. In the afternoon the athletic sports, as was natural, drew large numbers of children, who went in a procession from the Esplanade. On Saturday Mr. Arrowsmith started off to Filey with a helper, and had a most encouraging time. Small service in the morning, sports in the afternoon, and a service after it, which quite stripped the shore of the children, and in the evening a very fair attendance of elder girls and boys. Mr. Arrowsmith was so much encouraged, that a detachment is to go (D.V.) twice a week to Filey. Sunday's work was very important; there were four services in the afternoon: (1) For parents and guardians, at 2.45 p.m. (2) For the children, at 3. (3) For boys at Roseberry (where staying), at 3; and (4) for young ladies, at 3.45. Mr. Arrowsmith spoke to the parents at No. 1; Mr. Faithfull (the Vicar of Holy Trinity) had his church almost full of children, at No. 2. We had a good muster of boys, and the meeting for young ladies was taken by Mrs. Hancock; the room was full, and the meeting surpassed all expectation. The event of the evening was an open-air meeting on the Esplanade; during the first part about 700 to 800 were present, and the wonderful attention, and calm, seemed to be a token of great blessing."

EASTBOURNE (Mr. A. M. Trickett and others).—"Very encouraging work, a good band of lady workers. Services on beach fully equal to former years. Seven hundred in St. Paul's Church, Sunday afternoon last (Aug. 8); Mr. Bishop and Mr. Trickett spoke. About one thousand on the beach at the evening service for adults, when Mr. Trickett, Mr. Grace, and Dr. Macnutt spoke. Special meetings for boys and girls are being held."

REDCAR (Mr. Josiah Spiers, Aug. 8).—"We have had a really grand gathering this afternoon. I can seldom remember a prettier sight, or a nicer looking service. We gave out 1016 hymn-sheets. Half an hour before the time, when I went to the sands, I found nearly all the seats occupied, circle after circle looking charming. The lodging-houses are filling up the last four days, so that now we have a good proportion of visitors, and several are beginning to show a real interest. Rev. Henry Bone (of York) spoke on the sands this morning; 450 at beach service, Monday morning."

MARGATE (Rev. H. C. Sturdy, Aug. 9).—"Mr. T. H. Hurrell came on Aug. 5, and is a great help. We have increasing congregations, and now they number about six hundred in evening, and five hundred in morning. We had about one thousand children and friends in Trinity Church at afternoon service, at 3 o'clock, which I take; also about one thousand in Marine Palace, which we collect by means of workers who go forth on Sunday evenings and invite the non-churchgoers. Pray for this part of our mission! Praise God for the spirit of hearing, the eagerness with which the people listen. God is evidently working."

WORTHING (Mr. F. Pitts, Aug. 11).—"Rev. S. L. Dixon and myself commenced the services here on Aug. 3. The meetings were not large at first, but have since increased, and we have now good gatherings. Started games for girls and cricket for boys, with an improvement since in the meetings. Pleasant words of sympathy with the work come from friends unknown to us, but known to the Lord. A shake of the hand and a hearty "God bless you" from some elderly Christian tell of interest in the work from others besides those more immediately engaged in it. We intend to arrange for boys' meetings, flower services, &c."

LLANDUDNO (Messrs. H. E. Bellingham, J. Cropper, Rev. W. S. Standen, and others, Aug. 9).—"The prayer-meeting at 10 a.m. is well attended by earnest workers and others, before which we have a short choir practice three days in the week. Service at 11 o'clock on the beach, with good sand cathedral and pulpit. Sports for girls and cricket for boys at 2.30 every afternoon, except Thursdays, when we have general sports, and a meeting for boys in the evening. The children enjoy the sports very much, and by this means we often get quiet talks with them. Service again on the beach at 6.30 p.m. The members have increased very nicely, and, best of all, many have told us of their having been led to see Him whom to know is life and peace. The service in the Happy Valley on Sunday was a very marked success, 1500 or more being present, about one-third of whom were children."

Similar cheering reports have been received from Brighton, Deal, Sandown, Felixstowe, Saltburn-by-the-Sea, and Morecambe Bay.

Y.W.C.A., FOLKESTONE.—Our friends will be glad to know of the success which God has graciously given our little Sea-side Home since the opening in August, 1885. Only capable of receiving nine inmates, it has been full to overflowing during the summer, and we have had to refuse many applications. We have accommodated 131 boarders in the year, and for the last few months could have filled a house treble the size. We have great hopes, God willing, of enlarging the Home before next summer, and look forward to more work and extended usefulness. We would thank our many friends whose generosity, under God, enabled us to furnish and start our Home, and whose sympathy has cheered us from time to time.

"THE THICK OF THE FIGHT."

NEVER, perhaps, in the history of any movement for social reform has there been greater need than at present for those who would hasten the coming of Christ's kingdom to cast themselves entirely upon God. There is a loud call for humiliation before the Lord, for deep heart-searchings, for distrust of our own judgment. But there has never been a crisis when with greater confidence we could recognise the Spirit of God moving on the face of the waters, his hand working wonders, bringing, as He alone can bring, light out of darkness, life out of death.

No thinking mind can fail to discover the intense earnestness of these days. There must be no cowardly shrinking from duty because it may be difficult or repugnant. The time has come for going deeper into the causes of many of the phenomena of evil, so that stronger and more searching remedies may be applied than hitherto have been attempted. The awakened attention of the Christian Church to the so-called social evil has led to a corresponding movement among the forces of evil. My experience among the fallen leads me to believe that there is now an unusual struggle going on in all ranks of this class. The interest lately aroused in them is not without its influence upon them; and while we see some given up to almost demoniacal possession, in others we see the marvellous effect of answered prayer.

Quite recently the depressing incubus of State recognition of the necessity of vice has been removed from rescue work. Magistrates and judges have at last, in a degree, opened their eyes to facts hitherto palpable to all but themselves, and have been forced to administer justice to the breakers of laws only obtained at a terrible cost. In many ways doors are opened and hindrances removed.

To myself it seems, at the end of seven years of work in Ratcliff-highway, as if we were only just really beginning. It is no time for congratulation on what has been accomplished; we must labour and pray yet more and more. I feel constrained to earnestly entreat all who would be faithful to our Lord to join in earnest, solemn prayer, not only for rescue work, such as ours, among the low and degraded, but for a higher, purer standard of life and thought throughout the whole community.

I believe in the present mighty working of the Spirit of God. His people must be willing in the day of his power. Often we are tempted to cry, "My flesh and my heart faileth," but "looking unto Jesus," the sight of whose blessed countenance, shining out amid the gloom, is alone able to carry us scatheless through the sea of sin, into which he calls us to follow Him, and to render the gorgon face of evil powerless to turn us to stone, "we will trust, and not be afraid." CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—August 22, Colossians ii. 1—15; August 23, Colossians iii. 1—15; August 24, Colossians iii. 16—25; August 25, Colossians iv. 1—18; August 26, Titus i. 1—16; August 27, Titus ii. 1—15; August 28, Titus iii. 1—15.

CARDIFF.—A very successful mission for railway-men and others has recently been held here by Mr. George Clarke. On Saturday, Aug. 7, a large number of railway-men with their wives sat down to a tea provided by Mr. R. Cory; after which addresses were delivered by Mr. Clarke and Mr. Cory; the Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. and others taking part in the meeting. Three meetings were held on Sunday, Aug. 8, two for railway-men, and one for the general public. The hall was well filled, and at the closing meeting sixteen persons professed anxiety about their souls. Many of them going away rejoicing in the Lord. Will the Lord's people pray for Cardiff, and that this may be the commencement of a great revival in our midst? G. H.

STUDENTS AT MOUNT HERMON.

(BY OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

Northfield, Mass., July 29.

IT would not be easy for me to describe the emotions that chased each other through my breast as I walked the couple of miles between South Vernon Station and Northfield, in the stillness of the early morning last Sabbath. The train from Montreal had landed me in the Connecticut Valley at a somewhat untimely hour, and I had not forewarned any of the friends of my arrival. The first to recognise and greet me as I trudged down the avenued High-street towards Mr. Moody's residence was

MR. SANKEY'S "NINETY-AND-NINE-MAN."

I am not sure whether the story of his conversion has been told here. It may not be amiss if I tell it briefly as an introduction to my Northfield notes. Ten years ago, or more, after Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey had returned from their first visit to England, they held some Gospel meetings in Northfield. The crowd was so great on one occasion that the Congregational Church could not contain it, and the whole audience turned out into the wide space in front of the building. Mr. Sankey and his organ were placed close to the church, the wooden wall of which, as he faced it and sang, made a splendid sounding-board. As Mr. Sankey rolled out in distinct and sonorous strains the final verse of "The Ninety and Nine," there sat a man at his own door, some considerable distance across the Connecticut river. His family had gone to the meeting, but he would not be found fooling around after those crazy evangelists. There he sat, in no very genial frame of mind, when the triumphant notes of the final refrain,—

> Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own, floated on the quiet summer air across the intervening valley, and dropped right down into his restless heart. Coming to him in such an unexpected way, the words were as a message straight from God, and he was awakened to deep soul concern. A little while after he attended a meeting, and verified the prophecy of the hymn; the Lord brought back his own. Since then he has been known to some as "The Ninety-and-nine man." His hearty greeting of me awoke many bygone memories. I found myself involuntarily personifying, with a difference of circumstance, the writer of the household song that Mr. Sankey has also made famous—

> There the orchard-meadow yonder—
> Here the deep, old-fashioned well,
> With its old, moss-covered bucket,
> Sent a thrill no tongue can tell.

It seemed worth many an hour of tossing on the Atlantic billows to see once again "the dear familiar spot," associated so closely with Mr. Moody and his fellow-labourer in the Gospel.

Arriving at Mr. Moody's pleasant residence, I found, to my great regret, that Mrs. Moody was the occupant of a sick bed. She had been prostrated with fever a week before, and had been for some days in a serious case. Happily the crisis was safely passed, and that day she hoped to be able to sit up for awhile. When I write these lines, several days later, she continues convalescent, and with care, it is hoped, she will soon be fully restored to health. This is the first time during her married life that Mrs. Moody has been laid aside from such a cause, and her recovery will remove a heavy burden from the shoulders of Mr. Moody, whose energies, great though they be, are just now fully taxed. I was glad to see him looking so well, and showing no traces of physical weariness after his long winter campaign in the South. Mrs. Moody, senior, is still hale and hearty. Mr. Sankey and his family I found in excellent health. One of the inmates of his household at present is his mother, who, though seventy-five, is nearly as lively and active as her illustrious son, of whom, I may remark, she is justifiably proud. Herself of Irish descent she cordially welcomed me as a representative of the old country, which has a warm place in her heart because of the favour it has shown to her son.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL FOR BIBLE STUDY.

Within three hours of my arrival at Northfield I found myself seated in the Recitation Hall of Mount Hermon, listening to the silvery tones of Dr. Gordon, of Boston, as he addressed the 240 students at present sojourning on that delectable hill top. Your readers will, doubtless, recollect the announcement some weeks ago of this "Summer School for Bible Study," which is now drawing near its close. It is the latest offspring of the inventive brain of the great evangelist, and bids fair to be one of the most fruitful. Its origin in brief was on this wise. At Convocation time last year, Mr. Moody was wont to drive his visitors about these heights, the attractions of which he never seems to grow weary of. The fine buildings, lately opened for use, comprising the splendid dining-hall and immense dormitory, were then in process of erection. During one of these drives, Mr. Moody, always on the hunt for a fresh idea or method of work, suggested to Mr. Wishard, one of the secretaries of the Associated College Y.M.C.A., that some fifty Y.M.C.A. secretaries should gather in the new buildings the following summer for a season of recreation and study. Mr. Wishard improved on Mr. Moody's idea by suggesting that college students should be substituted for secretaries, and Mr. Moody agreed.

The details of the project were carried out by Mr. Wishard and his fellow-secretary, Mr. Ober, who visited between them a great many of the colleges throughout the country, explaining and recommending the plan. The result is that for the past three weeks Mount Hermon has been inhabited by 240 young men, delegates from nearly ninety colleges scattered through the United States and Canada, from Montreal in the north to Georgia in the south, and Nebraska in the west. A noble, earnest set of young fellows they are—probably a sample of the flower of the intellectual youth of the nation. Every man is a confessor of Christ, and a member of some college Y.M.C.A. They represent the 20,000 students of the States and Canada, and their influence for good in future college sessions can only be fairly conjectured. Of the 240, over a hundred have the Gospel ministry in view, and, as will be seen from subsequent portions of this report, a large number propose to devote their lives to the spread of the Gospel in heathen lands. This would be good news for Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, under whose hospitable roof at Liverpool I spent a night before leaving England, and from whom I took a message to Mr. Moody on this very subject of missions to the heathen.

My message, however, was pretty much forestalled; Mr. Radcliffe's petition seems to have been answered almost before it was formulated. While he was penning it in Liverpool, the college boys on Mount Hermon were being roused to a white heat of enthusiasm about the state of the heathen world, by the fervid appeals and striking statements of fact from the lips of Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Ashmore, a Chinese missionary.

Besides these, Mr. Moody provided for the students able instructors in Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, Dr. Gordon, of Boston, Dr. Moorehead (Professor of the Theological Seminary at Xenia, Ohio), Rev. W. W. Clark, of Staten Island, and Major Whittle, while his own share of the work has been by no means the least important. The great aim has been a real opening up of the foundation truths that circle around the central theme of "Jesus Christ and Him crucified." In the regular college course more or less attention is probably paid to the "technical" aspects of revealed truth, but it would seem that the presentation of simple Gospel doctrine is conspicuous by its absence in most of these seats of learning. At any rate, Dr. Pierson one day hazarded the statement that he believed the students would get a more thorough grounding in the Scriptures during these few weeks at Mount Hermon than they would get in their own colleges for a whole year.

Coming on the scene in the closing week of the Summer School, I missed the addresses and talks of Messrs. Brookes, Moorehead, Clark, and Whittle, but the reports given to me by some of those present indicated that the teachings were full of freshness and vigour, and were drunk in by the students with great avidity. The appetite of these "boys" for plain, strong, seems to be insatiable. Some visitors have expressed the view that an excess of spiritual diet is being provided; but not so the young men themselves. Every man has brought or furnished himself with a supply of note-books, and the pens or pencils are in constant use while the experienced instructors are giving forth from the Bible store-house things new and old. Very great interest was excited, I am informed, by Dr. Brookes, who is well known to many on both sides of the Atlantic as an expositor, very pronounced in his views and incisive, to a degree, in his phraseology. He specially dealt with the doctrines of the Second Coming of Christ and the Inspiration of the Bible. His vigorous plea for the acceptance of an undivided Bible as the authentic revelation of God's will respecting the salvation of man could not but be of the utmost value to such an audience in these times of doubt and negation. Other speakers emphasised the same point; and, considering the fact that many of these students will become the teachers of the next generation in different quarters of the world, it is cause for the deepest thankfulness, this foundation stone of all Christian faith and practice was so well and truly laid on Mount Hermon.

STRAIGHTFORWARD EXPOSITION OF SCRIPTURE

MISSIONARY FERVOUR.

The limits of your space will not allow me to go back in detail on the proceedings previous to my arrival. I must, however, make one exception, and give some notes of a memorable missionary meeting held on Friday evening last week, and presided over by Mr. Wishard. This I am able to do through the kindness of a lady missionary from India who was present, and who describes the occasion to me as one of most remarkable, if not of unique, interest within her knowledge. Among those present were several sons of missionaries. One of these rose and made an earnest appeal for India, with its 250 millions of souls, most of them sitting in heathen darkness. The labourers there, he said, were in the proportion of one to 450,000 of the people. "Think of that, young men!" he exclaimed

"Why do you stay here? Why do you not go to India, where the need is so great?" Next there stood the son of a Chinese missionary; he spoke of the millions in China—more in number than in India! why should not many consecrated workers go there? After him came an Armenian youth, who told out in broken English the needs of his native land, where the people are getting under the control of the Romish priests. The next representative was from Denmark, who gave expression to the spiritual wants of his people. Others followed, and pleaded hard for Germany, Persia, and Siam. Perhaps the most interesting of these brief addresses was that given by a stalwart scion of the Sioux tribe of American Indians. He had only arrived at Mount Hermon that day. As he stepped on the platform, the chairman and others extended to him a hearty greeting, and the whole audience rose, at the suggestion of Dr. Pierson, and sang—

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.

He was a delegate from the first Red Indian Y.M.C.A. (which he had himself founded), and a splendid advocate he was of the claims of his long-oppressed kinsmen. On their behalf he claimed the rights of citizenship and education. Drawing up his fine, manly form to his full height, he asked if his people were not worth being educated and Christianised. The brother who spoke for Siam also laid stress on the educational wants of that country; there was a great call for Christian teachers; would not some of them respond to it? The words, "God is Love," were repeated in succession in ten different languages, making the assembly realise in a very striking way the universality of the great facts of sin and salvation through Christ—the great gift of the Father's love to men.

A veteran missionary from China, Dr. Ashmore, whose stirring words at last year's Convention I well remember, followed up these interesting and varied pleas by giving some valuable information as to the needs of foreign fields, and strongly appealed to his young brethren to lay themselves on the altar of missionary service. He quaintly observed that his geography was defective, as he had not been able to discover where Macedonia was. Many workers for Christ seemed to think the Macedonian cry came from Boston or New York, judging by their anxiety to remain in America. Then he spoke somewhat of his experiences of work in China. The last report from his church there told of 1001 converts enrolled. They were the result of more than thirty years of patient toil; these years at the same time represented twenty mobs, sacked houses, persecutions not a few, tears and prayers, but the result was worth it all. The venerable Doctor pleaded with these young men to give their lives to China; if they went there, he could ensure each of them a thousand populous towns for a parish.

I have not been able to discover just how the flame of missionary zeal that now is being evoked on Mount Hermon broke out, but there seems no doubt that this meeting greatly fanned it. Quite a large number of the students have declared their purpose to enter on Gospel work in foreign fields, and the total is daily added to. I defer mentioning figures till the close of the session, which falls on Sunday next. Another missionary meeting was held on Tuesday morning; when Dr. Ashmore gave a long and intensely interesting address, dealing with various phases of mission work. He strongly deprecated the view of missions which is satisfied with the conversion to Christ of a few individuals here and there. He claimed for mission work the conquest of the whole world for God and his Christ. Many Christians, he said, seem to have altogether lost the art of aggressive warfare—of conquering the world, under the Great Captain of their salvation. He went on to trace how God has successively opened up for missionary effort, India, China, Japan, and Africa, the great centres of idolatry and heathenism. Reckoning up the population of these great nations, he set down the sum at nearly 1500 millions; to compass the evangelisation of this, there are only, in all these countries, some 1600 missionaries. They have to cope with terrible odds, and many of them are far more worthy the name of heroes than were Gideon's and David's mighty men, of whose exploits we have heard. Why, if there had been the same relative proportion between Gideon's band and their enemies that there is between the foreign missionaries and the millions of heathen, the three hundred men would have been reduced to less than half a man! Dr. Ashmore went on to say that the sole weapon of the Christian missionary was the Bible. This one little book, when contrasted with the ancient systems of heathenism, might seem to be like the smooth stone from the brook against the sword of Goliath, but God uses the things that appear to us to be weak to overthrow the mighty. The Gospel that we missionaries preach to the heathen is the same Gospel as that which you preach here to the educated and cultivated people of America. Dr. Ashmore put in a strenuous plea for the study of the whole Bible by intending missionaries, because the germ of all New Testament truth is to be found in the Pentateuch. Speaking of the outcome of mission work, he said that great results had followed. Many thousands of converts have been gathered into the believing fold; many more had lost all faith in the false teachings of their fathers, and it was not too much to hope that ere long there will be a greatly increased accession to the ranks of Christ's followers. The heathen systems of religion are beginning to crumble, and they may soon totter to their fall. In drawing his long and earnest address to a close, the good Doctor called for more volunteers for the work. He urged, with great force, a greater spirit of liberality in the support and furtherance of missions, again and again reiterating his call to the young men to "go work in the vineyard," in those places where the need was greatest.

Mr. Moody called for a solo from Mr. Sankey, who responded with Miss Havergal's rousing trumpet call to service:—

Tell it out among the nations,
That the Lord is king.

"Let a woman's pleading voice be heard in the meeting to-day," said the singer. The song was grandly sung, and was a peculiarly happy postscript to the earnest words of Dr. Ashmore.

For the rest of the session, Dr. Pierson answered questions in his own rapid and pointed way. He had a warm word to say about the worth of industrial self-supporting missions, and a warmer word still, if possible, as to the value of medical missions. His advice was to get a thorough training in medicine, if it could be done; at the same time, any medical skill and knowledge may prove to be of the utmost service. As to the supply of funds, he thought an earnest aggressive church would always be in monetary straits; just as a healthy boy is always outgrowing his pants. His belief was that, if the right men were sent out, God would prompt his stewards to provide all the needed funds. If he were a young man, and no organisation would send him out, he would go on his own account and leave his support to God. He vindicated the Congo Valley from aspersions as to unhealthiness; he advised that, where at all possible, the missionary be married, and to put it in the expressive phrase of the questioner, "should go double." The exemplification of the domestic virtues in a Christian household often has great influence for good among the heathen, not to speak of the direct Gospel work that a Christian lady can do.

"BABIES' CASTLE," HAWKHURST.

Another institution has been added to the many associated with Dr. Barnardo's name. On Monday week the Princess Mary of Teck, accompanied by the Princess Victoria and Princes George and Adolphus visited this charming village to open the Infants' Home, quaintly termed "Babies' Castle." The royal party was received by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard with an address of welcome, and, after a dedicatory prayer, Dr. Barnardo made a brief statement. Built on land which, with two villas, was given by the late Mr. Theodore Moillet in 1883, the Home would accommodate 100 children and thirty nurses. The cost of building was £3747, and furnishing, an additional £700. The villas, which have been used as a Babies' Home, will now become an infirmary for isolating infectious diseases, a necessary adjunct to such an institution. The practical sympathy of the company was then received, donors of £10 purses being presented to the Princess, the little hand-bell ringers giving us the benefit of their abilities meanwhile.

Now came the most interesting part of the ceremony. On either side of the entrance were ranged a number of nurses, some with a couple of infants in their arms, and others carrying one and leading another, while nearer the door were some little mites who could walk alone, patiently waiting to enter their new home. Stepping forward, the Princess unlocked the door, and stood aside while the little ones entered their new home, quite unconscious of the part they were taking in the ceremony, and seeming only anxious to explore the interior. Her Royal Highness then formally declared the building open, and, passing into the porch, unveiled a tablet in memoriam of the generous donor.

Almost as eagerly as the little occupants we hastened to inspect the Home, and, after seeing the neatly-furnished playroom, the dining-hall, with its low benches, the sleeping apartments, with their snow-white cots, the surgery, and other conveniences, we wondered how Dr. Barnardo had obtained such results with the money expended. After the inspection a luncheon was served, and, although no set speeches were made, Dr. Barnardo took the opportunity to announce that the contributions received that day amounted to £267, and that he was still at the "receipt of custom." We thought the latter announcement somewhat unnecessary, and that we should like to see the worthy Doctor when (?) he was off duty. A few minutes later he was able to tell the company that the Princess Mary wished to take "Babies' Castle" under her special care, and accepted the presidency of the Home. This intelligence was well received, and we hope that this beautiful Home, in its pleasant surrounding, may long flourish under her auspices, and be the means of rescuing many hapless infants from the sad fate which has overtaken thousands in our cities. The results of the training in this Home will naturally be long in declaring themselves, but, placed in Christian surrounding from their earliest day, we may well expect that some of these little ones will become the brightest monuments of Christian philanthropy and "pure religion" in the days to come.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN AUCKLAND.

The Spirit of God is working in a remarkable manner in this city, which now contains, including suburbs, 62,000 inhabitants. Not only are all the evangelical Christian churches pervaded by a new spirit of activity, seeking to compel the lost, the backslider, and the stranger, "to come in," but several revivalists, of the steady and non-sensational type, have recently visited and refreshed us. Among others, Mr. and Mrs. Trotter, of London, who, with the Hon. Granville Waldegrave (son of Lord Radstock), have addressed private circles among the wealthy, and audiences of 60 to 100 at the Sailors' Rest; also meetings of inquirers, and of avowed but somewhat inactive believers. Much good is being done; several have found Christ, and many Christians have been made to feel that the command, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard," has been addressed personally to them. Rev. J. S. Smalley, Wesleyan, is conducting a mission in Thames County, and the neighbourhood with much success. Three months since, two Anglican Church missioners, Revs. C. Mason, and G. Bodington, stirred up the various churches of that denomination to a deeper spiritual life. Their labours were somewhat marred by an unexpected development of ritualistic doctrine, yet their work has had the effect of breaking up the ground, and preparing the way for purer and more heart-searching teaching.

The temperance movement has experienced a most stimulating series of revivals. Mrs. Leavitt, the delegate to Australasia of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, of the United States, organised in Auckland a flourishing branch of that Society, and has followed it up by establishing a W.C.T.U. in the most important centres of New Zealand. Mr. Booth, from the United States, lectured subsequently, and then came Mr. Wm. Glover, from London, who induced many to "don the blue." Now we have Mr. Wm. Noble, who more especially sets forth the union of the Gospel with total abstinence, and attracts many converts by his kindly, genial face, eloquence and humour. The great strides total abstinence has made in this colony are somewhat painfully apparent to the Treasurer of the Colony (Sir Julius Vogel), as the revenue from alcholic and malt liquor during 1885-6 has fallen off £17,000! To meet this deficit Sir Julius proposes a slight increase in the Customs' duties on other articles, not being necessaries of life. Young Mr. Spurgeon has the largest congregation in Auckland, and has taken a prominent part in the Temperance revivals.

The Y.M.C.A. has made a new and spirited start by erecting a four-storeyed brick building (most of our houses and shops are of wood), which, when completed, will cost £7500. Rev. J. S. Hill (Episcopal) is President, and Mr. Brackenrigg is Secretary. A healthy and vigorous tone is being given to many young men by the interesting Sunday afternoon addresses of the President, on subjects much attacked here by the Rationalists and Freethinkers, such as immortality, the Deity and his nature, the Divinity of Christ, miracles, &c. Most of these misguided men attend these addresses, and put questions at their close, the answers to which admirably turn the scale in many wavering, uncertain hearts. Even the leading and most aggressive atheists acknowledge the sincerity, the ability, and the kindly spirit shown by Mr. Hill in these discussions. The truths and heart-searching realities of Scriptural truth are elicited in such a way as to do much good. Public evangelistic services are held on Sunday evenings in the Theatre Royal, and are well sustained, souls being brought to God.

Small space has been left for the noble work for sailors, and lads engaged in fishing, and longshore work, at the Sailors' Rest and Home, and the Fisher Boys' Rest, Lower Queen-street. The sailors' missionary, Mr. Henry E. Fell, late of Liverpool, is emphatically the right man in the right place, and possesses the entire confidence and warm esteem of the seafaring community.

A Sailors' Home, to cost £3000, is soon to be erected on a capital site given by the Harbour Board, funds being provided by a legacy left two years since by the late Edward Costley. Rev. Dr. Cowie, Anglican Bishop of Auckland, is the permanent President, and the committee or council will represent all the leading Protestant denominations. J. M. M.

MISS MACPHERSON'S BEEHIVE.

The old Beehive has prepared another swarm for the great Dominion, and those who visit the Colonial Exhibition will not fail to see, by the products there displayed, that it is no mean land, but one of plenty and of hope.

How good our gracious, loving Father has been to us, his children, in enabling us to have a third hive this year. Also in giving us the joy of leaving the various branches of the work going on heartily. Bird Fair is becoming more and more interesting, as fruit is seen to the praise of our God. Souls are being brought out, and enabled to testify to the happy change, in newness of life and joy, and in becoming members of a church or chapel.

Sale of the Scriptures is going on briskly from day to day. I commend to Christian friends the brethren who are working two Bible carriages, and preaching the Gospel. Messrs. Ririe and Redfern, in Kent; Messrs. Smith and Dorward, in the Eastern Counties. The latter are about to visit the principal towns between London and Yarmouth, going viâ Ipswich, returning viâ Cambridge. May Christians in the various towns welcome these workers who are devoting their holidays to preach the word, and sell the Scriptures and pure literature.

We have taken a house to shelter factory young women during the coming winter. Any spare furniture or bedding will be most acceptable. Rescue work will be resumed after the cleansing of the homes at Spitalfields and Hackney. Mr. Merry is in charge, and will reply to all correspondence during our absence in Canada. ANNIE MACPHERSON.

Home of Industry.

PREACHING ON THE SANDS.—We have been greatly encouraged this week in connection with the open-air services. A few days ago a gentleman from Bedfordshire stopped me on the Parade and told me what a great blessing he had got at the services on the sands. I have seldom if ever seen a clearer case of conversion. He was running over with gratitude and joy, and was anticipating work for the Master among his friends and neighbours at home. I am now at liberty to conduct evangelistic or temperance meetings in any part of the country.

WILLIAM FORBES.

THE JEWS.—From Le Temps we learn that the Jewish Almanac for A.M. 5647, that is, from September 1886 to September 1887, has just been published. In an introductory article the writer congratulates his co-religionists on the check given in certain European countries to anti-semitism, while, on the other hand, he complains of the persecution still directed against Polish and Russian Jews. He regards with pleasure the raising of Sir N. Rothschild to the English Peerage, the first Jew thus honoured, while, on the contrary, in Austria-Hungary, M. Tisza could only get Judaism officially represented in the Chamber of Magnates by a special decision of the Emperor. Satisfaction is also expressed at the increasingly prominent place taken by Jews in the domains of science, literature, and art. Another writer—M. Ben Mosche—in an article on "Nobility and the Jews," asks, "What need have Jews to call themselves barons, earls, or marquises? Are not all Israelites sons of the King? Has not the Lord given us a grander, more beautiful title when He says: 'You shall be to me a kingdom of priests?' Our nobility goes far back; at the foot of Sinai, nearly thirty-two centuries back, God ennobled us." Jews were first admitted to the French Parliament in 1830. The statistics printed give the entire Jewish population of the world as 6,300,000, of whom there are in Europe, 5,400,000; in Asia, 300,000; in Africa, 35,000; in America, 250,000. The Jewish religious, scholastic, and philanthropic institutions in Paris are very numerous.

Y.M.C.A.—Where to Draw the Line.

DEAR SIR,—The Metropolitan Council has, I think, done much toward answering this question, in adopting (June 28) the following resolution: "That it should be made clear to all applicants for membership that the Association is a missionary organisation."

Your correspondent—"An Exeter Hall Associate"—says: "The Y.M.C.A. has failed, so far, to reach the young men of London, for in all its fifty branches there are not more than 9000 members and associates." From his point of view the failure may be very apparent—9000 young men interested merely in their own amusements is certainly not much return for forty years of patient, prayerful effort for their welfare, by devoted servants of Christ. Let us take, however, the view held by the Metropolitan Council, deducting 3000 for associates, and leaving 6000 members—not men great at a recitation or song, or clever athletes—but "6000 missionaries." Failure? How the hearts of all who love the Y.M.C.A. ought to be filled with gratitude to God for the honour conferred upon it in thus enabling it to influence this great company of Christian workers.

A plea is made for "brave enterprising effort for the salvation of our young men," with the means necessary for its accomplishment, viz.: "gymnasia, educational classes, athletic clubs, high-class concerts, and bright social gatherings." May I be allowed to suggest to these apostles of a Gospel not of Christ, as the articles of their creed clearly indicates, that it would be advisable to try the experiment, first, on the followers of Buddha, or Confucius, taking care to arm themselves with the most approved gymnastic appliances, the latest selection of popular songs, and other impliments necessary for the regeneration of the race? If these methods of "Telling out among the heathen that the Lord is King" prove successful, there may be hope, from the same source, for the young men at home. Till then, however, I may be pardoned for believing that the founders of the Association, forty years ago, worked on wise and noble principles—"That the Gospel of forty years ago is the Gospel for to-day, and that hearts which cry out for the living God realise a want far too deep ever to be satisfied with the merely narcotic influences which invariably sap the spiritual life of any branch where they are allowed to come to the front." In one town of 40,000 inhabitants, well known to the writer, there has been no Bible-class, prayer-meeting, or spiritual work of any description for at least twelve years, except when outsiders have borrowed the rooms, this being one instance only of the way in which the life of the Association is allowed to filter away into a dozen different channels, until it has no longer any claim to the distinctive title of "Christian."

However muscular, musical, or cultivated the members may be, if their bodies are not "temples of the Holy Ghost," and their voices and intellects consecrated to the service of God, they can be of no use in the Y.M.C.A., and the sooner the Y.M.C.A. "lays this weight aside," the better, if it is to be successful in the race for the evangelisation of the world.

Christ in the heart means a life, temperate, sober, chaste, and consequent health to the body generally, making special training—frequently violent and unnatural—unnecessary to those who get even a minimum amount of air and exercise.

Under any circumstances, the massing together of Christian young men for mere purposes of recreation, or amusement, in a missionary organisation like the Y.M.C.A., is certainly not in accordance with the missionary spirit, and I venture to assert that the men who have been the champions of the Cross of Christ in all ages have been men of very different faith to certain sections of the Church of to-day, who, having "the form of godliness," must also have theatricals, concerts, bazaars, fancy fairs, and a hundred other methods of "denying the power thereof."

If the Y.M.C.A. fails in the future to reach young men, it will be because it has first failed to bring them face to face with Christ as a living, loving, Personality.

If the Association is only true to Him whose name is woven into its title and its work, failure becomes impossible, "For them that honour Me I will honour."—Yours faithfully,

Y.M.C.A., Wood Green, N. E. BOTHAM, Sec.

[We have received numerous other letters on this subject, but whose sentiments have been mainly embodied in those we have already inserted. We must now close this correspondence, as we think the subject has been sufficiently ventilated.]

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

A CHRISTIAN WORKERS' CONFERENCE was held, as usual, at Kilburn Hall on Bank Holiday; the attendance steadily increasing from the opening. The spirit of praise and prayer prevailed throughout, and some of the addresses were of a stirring and edifying character.

In the afternoon, Mr. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH read Heb. iii., and asked praise for the results of his recent month's ministry at the Great Assembly Hall, where the congregations numbered from 4000 to 5000 on Sundays, and 1000 every week-night. Many interesting cases of conversion had occurred. Encouraging signs were also found in the humbler work at Rotherfield, beyond Tunbridge Wells, where the Gospel was being carried into nearly every cottage in the district.

Pastor W. FRITH who asked prayer for some native Christians in Iceland, which he has recently visited, sketched a parallel in the circumstances of Malachi iii. 16 to those of the present time. The persons referred to met, not for religious or social gossip, but to speak of the Lord's mercy. The "real presence" is enjoyed "where two"—the lowest plural—"or three are gathered together in my name." It is said that the Lord "hearkened and heard." The Holy Ghost never uses a word to fill up; and the phrase is expressive of fullest attention, absorbing interest, readiness to bless. Receptivity is followed by Divine communication. Not only those who speak, but those who "think upon his name," are regarded of God; for there is no responsibility for a gift not possessed. Our little services are recorded in the "book of remembrance."

Mr. HURDITCH pointed out that a useful sphere of service is opened to sisters among the little ones met with in holidays. His own daughters announced such services at Streatham. and found adults creeping in to listen.

A worker said he and a younger brother had for six years attended the doors of St. Mary's Hospital on Lord's Day afternoons, and distributed Gospel publications among the visitors, who, in addition to reading the books themselves, carry them in to patients. He suggested that there are many other hospitals in London where such work is needed.

At the evening meeting special prayer was asked for Mr. James L. Stanley, who, after assisting Mr. Müller, for many years in Bristol, has become general secretary of the Mission, and the other meetings in connection with the Mission were remembered at the previous meeting.

Mr. STANLEY said he had learned a lesson from Luke v. 15, 16, which he desired to pass on to fellow-workers. A man will do everything he can to keep up his fame. Though it could not be so with the Lord, yet He saw the people dying for the Word of Life, and suffering bodily pain, and these were strong inducements to his continued activity. "But he withdrew into the deserts, and prayed;" and he did so, not only in spite of, but because of, these circumstances. Revival can only come from the outpouring of the Spirit, in answer to earnest, constant prayer. Von Bülow, the pianist, said that if he neglected practice one day, he noticed it; two days, his friends noticed it; three days, the public noticed it. The soul requires time and care for food, no less than the body. A widespread spirit of prayer throughout the Church would be the precursor of revival, without the aid of committees or circulars.

Captain DENNIS and Dr. POPHAM having spoken, Mr. VARLEY closed, with a vigorous condemnation of the strong drink traffic with heathen nations as nullifying, to a fearful extent, missionary effort.

GOSPEL TENT SERVICES.—Mr. Jeremiah Brown, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a very encouraging mission at Uffculme and Culmstock, Devon. His words will leave a lasting impression on the gatherings attracted by the "old, old story," told out in the five points for which this Society is so famed. Our hearts were cheered as numbers spoke in our testimony meetings of the new-found joy, through the knowledge of sins forgiven; whilst others testified to renewing in the Holy Ghost and reviving of the inner life which had been theirs for many years. How I wish we could, as the Master, "go to another village," and pitch our tent; but pastoral work claims one's time, and expenses of tenting are heavy, wear and tear alone being considerable.

OBITUARY.

MR. PHILIP EVANS,

On July 31, Mr. Philip Evans, manufacturer, of Brimscombe Court, Thrupp, near Stroud, Gloucestershire. A near and dear relative takes occasion, from a recent remark under "Notes and Comments," to write the following, to the truth of which we can testify:—

"The gulf between employer and employed widens daily." As I read those words in THE CHRISTIAN of August 5, the thought came to my heart and rose to my lips, "Not at Brimscombe—there is no gulf there." He who went home to the Lord on July 31 last never had a strike among his workpeople, and for more than fifty years carried on a successful business, employing hundreds of men, women, and children. How was this? What was the secret of this harmony between this master and his servants? The answer is not far to seek; he whom we mourn to-day was ever "fair and fraternal" in all his dealings with his workpeople, and, as they followed him to the grave in the Stroud Cemetery, they all felt that they had lost a friend.

At Brimscombe the expression "the hands" is not used; they are "our people," and are cared for as such. They all know "the old master" (as they loved to call him) wanted to meet them all in heaven, and for that he laboured, and spent his money, as they see by the commodious mission-room he built for them, as well as by the many words of counsel and warning he ever gave to all of them as opportunity served.

And now "the old master" is gone to his reward, and the young masters, led by his godly example and counsel, are following on where he led the way, and, depend on it, as long as they continue to do so, there will be no "gulf" between them and their employés. It is the walking in the ways of the world, away from God, instead of to Him, that is ruining society. The only way of salvation, whether of individuals or of communities, is the way of the Cross, following in the footsteps of the crucified Redeemer, who went about doing good—seeking to save men's souls. This was the aim of our dear departed one—a thorough man of business, throwing his energies into it, he was, yet above all, a Christian. "Christ first" was his motto, and all that tended to advance his kingdom had his full sympathy and help. A pillar of the Church militant has fallen, known to but few, for He ever loved the shade, and his right hand knew not what his left hand did, but He was emphatically one of those blessed ones of whom it is written, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord: they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them."

INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOLS.—Rev. Dr. John Newton, of Lahore, writes respecting the Mahommedan opposition to Zenana and School Christian teaching in that city: "Though there is a slight falling-off in the number of pupils last year on account of a spasmodic effort made by a few zealous Mahomedans in opposition to the work of lady missionaries, there is still more work left to be done than the ordinary staff of ladies can do. Moreover, it should be remembered that the adversaries who offer such opposition to the cause of evangelisation have no perseverance, and there is always a reaction, so that we rather welcome than dread such demonstrations. We may rest assured that as time goes on the demand for missionary workers of every class will steadily increase, and will keep in advance of the supply."

MR. GEORGE SOLTAU writes from Aden, en route for Tasmania, on board the ss. Iberia, July 27: "So far on our voyage we have had everything pleasant, and bright smooth seas and fair winds. Amongst the steerage passengers are a number of earnest young men going out to different parts of the colonies, whose presence will be a blessing and a power for good. Nearly every day we have met for Bible-reading and prayer, and have had much refreshment. Our Sunday services have been blessed, and already some have professed to find salvation through faith in Christ. Amongst the second-class passengers there are also several earnest Christians, amongst them being Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, and Mr. Stephens, from the East London Training Institute, proceeding to Tasmania and Sydney respectively. These brethren are active for the Master as opportunities offer. Of course there are many bitter opponents to the Gospel, and amongst them card-playing, drinking, and blasphemy are almost the sole occupation."

A GOOD WORK AT PONTYMOIL.

We have already introduced our readers, by occasional notices, to a useful and effective work carried on at Pontymoil, near Pontypool, by Mr. Thomas M. Wintle. Eight years have passed since the sore need of a ragged school pressed upon him, and during this period the work has outgrown its cottage limits, and now comprises three important mission halls. Spiritual and physical destitution largely prevail in this coal and iron district, and, but for Mr. Wintle's strenuous labours last winter, terrible indeed would have been the results. During that period no less than 30,000 meals were given to the starving and destitute, which served as powerful auxiliaries to the proclamation of the Gospel. Mr. Wintle himself, holding a post at the iron works, is in a position to know the real condition of most of the applicants, which rendered it difficult for imposition to escape detection, and the fact that he labours with his hands, and receives no remuneration from the Mission, obviates objections on that ground.

It was a great pleasure to us to visit this corner of the vineyard. Truly, it is a spot "where every prospect pleases, and only man is vile;" but this latter element renders the presence of such a Mission invaluable. In addition to the very numerous branches of work at the three stations of Pontymoil, Pontnewydd, and Cwmffrwdoer, tent meetings are annually held for two days at the Market-place, Pontypool, which are attended by large audiences; in fact, the crowd of eager listeners without is almost as large as that within the immediate limits of the tent. These were held on the 8th and 9th inst., at which addresses were given by Mr. Richard Cory (President of the Mission), Mr. Wm. Catlin, Rev. F. C. Spurr, Miss K. Haire, Mrs. Fielder, Mr. G. E. Morgan, and other sympathisers. There is great need of an evangelistic hall in Pontypool, which could easily be worked in connection with the other agencies. Any of our readers who may be travelling in the neighbourhood should make the acquaintance of Mr. Wintle and his good wife, with the earnest band of voluntary workers at his command. "Seeking to Save" is the title of his annual report just published, which gives a good idea of the work done.

OPEN-AIR PREACHERS AT EPSOM.

BRIGHTNESS without levity describes the spirit in which the members of this Mission celebrated their ninth summer holiday, on Friday last, at Epsom, by the joint invitation of Miss Annie J. Alexander and Mr. W. Quartermaine East. The former made all arrangements, and secured the funds, while the latter threw open his beautiful grounds at Woodcott Grove. The party of preachers numbered over 200.

On arrival, after a brief prayer and praise meeting in the Town Mission Hall, a pilgrimage was made to Hookfield, the residence of Mr. Isaac Braithwaite, and thence the journey was continued to Woodcott Grove, where dinner was served. Then, while some remained in the pleasant grounds, the majority took a walk to the famous racecourse, where, in front of the grand stand, Mr. Kirkham, the secretary, described the work at the time of the races. Mr. Miller and Mr. Kirk also spoke, and Mr. Fordham related his Australian experiences in a quaint style. The party then returned to Woodcott Grove for tea, which was followed by speeches from Rev. John Samuel (vicar of Epsom), Captain J. H. Charleton, Mr. Kirkham, Miss Alexander and Mr. East. Directly afterwards, under an elm tree, Mr. Rowe, the leader of the South London Evangelistic Choir, conducted a Service of Song, and a final open-air meeting, under the clock tower in the town, terminated the proceedings.

BERNE.—Pastor Alfred Cérésole writes a letter to the Evangile et Liberté, from which we learn that the Church in Canton Berne finds it very difficult to provide pastors for its more out-of-the-way parishes, so that in some churches there are no services, the doors being closed for months together.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall publish a sketch and portrait of the late Rev. J. P. Chown.

Our readers will note that the Annual Conference of the Evangelical Alliance will be held at Ryde. For particulars, see p. 17.

A Missionary Conference will be held at Mildmay, from Oct. 5 to 7. Subject: World-wide Evangelisation. Programme of arrangements may be had of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Conference Hall, Mildmay, N.

We are glad to find that the efforts on behalf of Rev. Peter Leys have proved successful. His son presented a petition that he did not wish to enforce his right to the custody of the children, and Lord Shand thereupon gave order for the worthy minister's liberation. Miss Leys writes us: "We thank you for the interest you have taken, and for the prayers which have now been abundantly answered."

The Daily News, Mr. Michael Davitt, Canon Maccoll in The Pall Mall Gazette, and other writers, throw all the blame of the Belfast riots upon the Protestants. Dr. J. Moir Porteous, minister of the Free Church of Scotland, gives a wholly different account. So does Rev. Dr. Kane, Orange Grand Master for the Ulster district, who has been interviewed by the Central News special correspondent in Belfast. Both these gentlemen absolutely contradict those assertions, and attribute much blame to the police, who are mainly Roman Catholics, and there is no body in which party feeling runs so high.

Our dear friend and brother, Mr. Fegan, is preaching nearly every night in dark villages, and this, in addition to his ordinary daily duties, makes the strain of pecuniary anxiety too severe. It must not be that one whose time and strength are being absorbed between London waifs by day and village heathen by night should be in perplexity and straits for the daily necessaries of his three large families of boys.

Of all useless ways of spending life there is none more wearying and disappointing than "dropping buckets into empty wells, and growing old in drawing nothing up." But even more mischievous than this is to spend life criticising and judging our fellow-servants, the servants of Jesus Christ, always pointing out what is weak and faulty, and grudgingly admitting even what is right and good. The treasure was not less precious because the field in which it was hid was barren ground. He who loved the Church and gave Himself for it will sift her and her service in a sieve, but will let no grain of wheat fall to the earth. But they who are perpetually judging another man's servants (and that other Man the Man Christ Jesus) are often so busy with the chaff that they miss the living grains of wheat which are so precious in his sight.

Last week one of the most remarkable meetings of that remarkable body, the Salvation Army, was held at Regent's Hall, Oxford-street. The occasion was a farewell to forty missionaries, or rather officers, leaving for India under the care of Major Tucker. They were dressed in native costume, and intend to go barefoot and eat native food. The passage-money is £25 each, and the cost of maintenance in India is estimated at 2s. a week. There can be no doubt that if the system adopted by Major Tucker can be followed out upon a large scale, the evangelisation of India may be accomplished in a comparatively brief space of time.

It may be objected that we ought not to give up the habits of civilisation and go down to the semi-barbarous condition of the heathen. To which it may be replied that the Son of God exchanged the civilisation of heaven for the heathenism of earth. And it may be added that the authors of the arts and sciences were the descendants of Cain, not of Seth, who was given instead of Abel whom Cain slew. While the Cainite fathers of agriculture, of music, and of manufacture, were civilising the antediluvian world, the only records of the sons of Seth, beyond the facts that they lived, begat children, and died, are these: "To Seth was born a son, and he called his name Enos (frail, fallen man); then began men to call upon the name of the Lord.' "Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him." "Lamech begat a son and called his name Noah, saying, 'This same shall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, because of the ground which the Lord hath cursed.'" Missionaries may be as poor as Enos, and yet like him call upon the name of Jehovah; like Enoch walk with God; like Noah be comforters of toiling men and preachers of God's righteousness.

The missionaries of the future may be more and more after the pattern of God's Missionary, whom He sent in the likeness of sinful flesh; who emptied Himself; took upon Him the form of a servant; and cried: "I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people." If the new departure in missionary enterprise inaugurated by Major Tucker helps to lead us back to the missionary ideal, delineated by the Father's sent One in his commission to the twelve first missionaries (Matt. x.), it will be a mighty factor in that preaching of the Gospel for a witness to all nations, after which the end shall come.

In a volume recently published in Germany, a letter appears which was addressed by the late Prince Consort to his daughter the Crown Princess, and it has a singular bearing upon the tendency Bismarck has shown for some time back, not only to conciliate Rome, but to make concessions to her. After pointing out that the Romish Apostasy claims an unlimited and independent control over the State, the Prince goes on to say, and the utterance is a weighty and thoughtful one, deserving the consideration of statesmen in other lands:—

> But how is it in a Protestant country? Here the Catholic Church not merely claims a supremacy, which is disputed, but regards it as its Divine mission to destroy the existing heretical Church, and to convert the people to the true faith. The power which it borrows and receives for this purpose from the worldly authority by means of a concordat is, therefore, not only an instrument to rule the people, but also the means for converting the Protestant population, and for destroying the Protestant Church, as a Church that is false, and a usurpation. . . . What folly, therefore, for a Protestant Government to shackle itself, and to deliver its weapons to the Roman Catholic Church. The only thing a Protestant State can do is to place itself on its own fundamental principle, namely, on the freedom of conscience.

Ever ready to take advantage of the tide, there are not wanting signs that Rome, powerless to resist the socialistic and democratic tendencies of the time will endeavour to run with them. Despite the proverbial fact that in Roman Catholic countries degradation and poverty are almost supreme, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Nottingham and others are proclaiming from the housetops theories of the obligations of property and the rights of labour, which certainly are not in keeping with the earlier utterances of Rome, and the result of such teaching must be the inevitable one of widening the gulf, already too broad, between the rich and poor. The fabled unity within the boundaries of Rome no longer exists, and if she now takes sides in England as she has already done in Ireland, the differences will be so intensified as to render it impossible for a large and influential number of thoughtful men to continue in their allegiance to her. If men begin to differ upon political and social matters, the step to differences with regard to spiritual things is one by no means unlikely to follow.

It is not unusual to hear references made to the powerful intellect of Newman or of Manning by those who are urging the claims of Rome to the acceptance of intellectual men, and sermons by the former are pointed to as splendid examples of the possibility of union between high mental gifts and simple childlike faith in dogmas which undoubtedly appear to be opposed to reason. In many respects, however, Newman's faith closely resembles, if, in fact, it does not sink below, credulity, and it is open to question if human credulity could go further than Newman has done in penning the following articles of belief, as quoted in The British and Foreign Evangelical Review:—

> "I think it impossible," he says, "to withstand the evidence which is brought for the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius, at Naples, and for the motion of the eyes of the Madonna in the Roman States. . . . I firmly believe that portions of the true cross are at Rome and elsewhere, and that the crib of Bethlehem is at Rome. I firmly believe that the relics of the saints are doing innumerable miracles and graces daily, and that it needs only for a Catholic to show devotion to any saint in order to receive special benefits from his intercession. I firmly believe that the saints in their lifetime have before now raised the dead to life, crossed the sea without vessels, multiplied grain and bread, cured innumerable diseases, and superseded the operation of the laws of the universe in a multitude of ways."

It may, perhaps, be urged that such mental degradation is exceptional; but we find in a volume, "Our Lady of Good Counsel," sent forth a few months ago under the sanction of Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, for the enlightenment of Roman Catholics in Ireland and elsewhere, the story of the painted wall of a church being carried miraculously across the Adriatic, two shepherds walking on the water with it, and accompanying it to Genazzano, where it entered the church and affixed itself over the altar. We do not know if Archbishop Walsh professes to believe this, but, apparently, Cardinal Newman would not find any difficulty in adding the story to his creed.

The hop-picking season is now close upon us. In various districts valuable Gospel work is done at this time amongst the crowds of men, women, and children who throng to these parts, who are also, as a rule; very destitute of bodily comforts. We shall be glad to receive donations on behalf of this good work.

COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME, 1083 pages, 10s. 6d.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this nobleedition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"A new edition of 'Foxe's Book of Martyrs' has been issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, which is well worthy of attention from those who have not already placed this famous work upon their shelves. The present edition is well bound, and contains the Rev. J. Milner's valuable notes and comments, and an essay on Popery by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin."—The Rock.
